Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Let me deal with one point at a time. The right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) has made comments, which he is perfectly entitled to do, but he has not raised a point of order for the occupant of the Chair. It is the job of the occupant of the Chair at 2.30 pm on a Friday—and on other occasions—if the debate is still proceeding, to ask what day it is to be resumed. That is the normal procedure and it is the procedure that has been followed today.

Mr. John Browne: Further to the point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Given that the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) won a place in the ballot and was privileged to have his Bill discussed in the House, does not it seem ridiculous that the Bill can be talked out and prevented from entering Committee? Surely, any such action should be taken in Committee or on Report, and the Bill should be allowed a further airing.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. You heard the hon. Member for Kingswood (Mr. Hayward) say in response to my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh (Dr. Kumar), that he would not talk the Bill out. That was a solemn undertaking given to this House of Commons on this day. You have seen the hon. Member for Kingswood break his word, act dishonourably and destroy the Bill. Does not that require some statement from the Chair?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I remind the House that we are following the normal procedures of the House, and that it is my duty, as the occupant of the Chair, to ensure that they are carried out.

Mr. Ashley: Further to the point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The Minister has misled the House. He said clearly that his attitude to the Bill was one of benevolent neutrality, yet the Government have organised the torpedoing of a Bill that is vital to disabled people. That is shocking and disgraceful, and the Minister should apologise to the House.

Mr. Wigley: Further to the point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It was quite clear—unless there was a conspiracy by the Conservative Whips—that only one hon. Member sought to delay the passage of the Bill, and that hon. Gentleman said he did not want to talk the Bill out. In those circumstances, did you not have discretion to put the Question? If you did not, and if those on the Government Front Bench knew that, is not it patently clear that, throughout the morning, there has been organised filibustering to enable the Bill to be talked out and the Conservative party to go into the election as the party which wants to perpetuate discrimination against disabled people? The people of these islands understand that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I remind the House that we cannot continue the debate now. However, I will take points of order so long as they are genuine points of order.

Mr. Arbuthnot: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Some quite unjustified slurs have been made about my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Hayward). My hon. Friend said that he intended not to talk the Bill out, but to make his points. He was prevented from doing that by constant barracking and interruptions from Opposition Members. The longest speech in the debate was made by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris). His speech was longer than that of my right hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People. It was also longer than the speech made by my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) when he moved his Medicinal Products: Prescription by Nurses etc. Bill. Any suggestion that the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill has been talked out by Conservative Members is political posturing and nonsense.

Mr. Skinner: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. You will recall that the Opposition spokesman, my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng) spoke for a couple of minutes. The Minister spoke for about 25 minutes. Other Opposition Members spoke for only a minute or so to allow the Bill to make progress. The Liberal Democrat representative stood up, supported the Bill, and sat down. It should have crossed your mind, Mr. Deputy Speaker, when the request for a closure was made, that you knew that the view of the House in general was that the Bill should be given its Second Reading. It is clear that Tory Members have talked the Bill out. It has been said over the years that the Tory party is the party of organised hypocrisy and it has proved that again today by attacking disabled people around Britain. However, the electorate will have the final say.

Mr. Bill Walker: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. How can Conservative Members be protected from such unwarranted charges? I promised people in wheelchairs that I would speak in the debate today and that I would support the Bill. I did just that and I find it offensive when people who did not attend the debate make such charges.

Mr. McMaster: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I shortened my speech although I had much to say. I cut my speech to a minute or less to ensure the swift passage of the Bill.

In the earlier debate on the Medicinal Products: Prescription by Nurses etc. Bill I intervened in the speech of the hon. Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) and asked whether he would be brief so that we could reach the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill and I received that assurance. What has happened is a disgrace to the House and to the 6·5 million disabled people, their carers and families. I can tell everyone who participated in that disgraceful behaviour that I would rather live with a disability than with their consciences.

Dr. Kumar: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The hon. Member for Kingswood (Mr. Hayward) said that he would not talk the Bill out. It has been said that some Opposition Members were not present for the whole debate. I have sat through the whole debate. I listened to the hon. Member for Kingswood and I sacrificed my speech so that the Bill could make progress. No one can deny that I sat through the whole debate. I am shocked. Six and half million people have watched the conduct of this Tory Government. The Government's days are numbered.

Mr. John Wilkinson (Ruislip-Northwood): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Will you consult the Procedure Committee because I and, I am sure, other hon. Members came to the House especially to vote for the Bill which I believe should go into Committee? There should be a 10-minute limit on speeches in private Member's time.

Mr. Dave Nellist (Coventry, South-East): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I think that you have been placed in an invidious position this afternoon. It is not just the past two hours which have been a problem. The fact is that the previous debate was timetabled by Tory Whips to finish precisely at 12.35 pm, leaving you with only one hour and 55 minutes for the next debate. Would you do what I have just done and look at the list of speakers for the two debates? You will find that in the first debate of four hours, there were 14 speakers. In the second debate on disabled people's civil rights, in one hour and 55 minutes there were 12 speakers.

Surely, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the traditions of debate mean that you have to decide whether to accept a closure motion if there has been sufficient debate. Traditionally, that has been a minimum of two hours. However, the second debate had almost the same number of speakers as the first debate. You would be well within your rights in the Chair to reconsider your decision, and, on the basis of the second debate having had an adequate number of speakers on both sides, now to accept the motion put by my right hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) and, on behalf of my constituents and 6 million disabled people at least allow this worthy Bill to be considered in Committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have allowed a good run on points of order because I realise that there are strong feelings on this matter on both sides of the House. However, I can only repeat that it is the job of the Chair to carry out the Standing Orders and the procedures of the House as they are at present. That has been done. If hon. Members feel that the procedure should be changed, of course they are perfectly free to put their points to the Select Committee on Procedure, which would be prepared to consider them.

MOD Personnel (Injury Compensation)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. David Davis.]

2.43 pm

Mr. John Browne (Winchester): May I thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for selecting this debate?

Ours is a warrior nation and, because of that, the men and women of our armed forces hold a very special place in our hearts—at least in times of war. Sadly, however, in times of peace we are sometimes apt, as in Kipling's famous poem, "Tommy", to take them for granted. Because we truly are a warrior nation, right hon. and hon. Members—probably all of us—yearly on the vigil of Remembrance Sunday, echo those time-honoured words, "We will remember them." It is true that we will remember them. But what about those who are not killed—at least not quite? I refer to those who suffer horrific wounds, but who are saved from death by the miracle of modern science, good luck and their own outstanding mental fortitude. Many of them live on, but they are severely disabled. Do we truly remember them? I think that the honest answer is yes officially, but do we remember them well enough? I believe that we do not.

Regardless of political party, the people of our country feel that the Government should take more, much more, care of injured service personnel. In relation to the armed forces the Government should, above all, be seen as the very model of a good employer. I believe that the armed services are good employers. The Royal Navy, since the time of Nelson, has been ahead of most navies in the world, if not all. The same applies to the Army since the time of Wellington.

However, when an injured service man falls into political hands, I do not believe that we look so good. Too often, there are long and undue delays in receiving compensation and a woeful lack of information is given to the injured and their families. There is an apparent unwillingness to honour moral and financial obligations. On 8 December 1986, the Secretary of State for Defence said:

"members of the Armed Forces, by their very nature of their profession, undertake tasks which ordinary members of the public do not."—[Official Report, 8 December 1986; Vol. 107, c. 85.]

I believe that that is a correct and telling statement which should be writ large on the walls of the offices of my right hon. Friends the Minister of State for the Armed Forces and the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

On 8 December 1986, the Secretary of State went on to invite the repeal of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947. His lead was followed by my hon. Friend the Member for Davyhulme (Mr. Churchill), who introduced the Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987. It was an excellent Bill and I supported it. It allowed armed services personnel, for the first time, to be able to sue the Crown for negligence. However, with the passage of time, certain glaring loopholes have appeared in the Act. I mean no criticism, because the loopholes were not foreseen at the time. The Act was well intentioned and the loopholes have since appeared.

First, the Ministry of Defence was allowed to withhold documents on the ground of secrecy. I believe that that privilege has been abused on a number of occasions. Secondly, it abolished the flexibility previously given to the Secretary of State to make ex-gratia payments. I believe that that flexibility is a vital element of the humane treatment of those injured personnel of the armed forces, especially as, rightly, the Act could not be used retrospectively. I also believe that the Act has left the onus of proof to fall always on the injured service person. That is a heavy onus which could be lifted in some obvious severe cases. If one imagines having both legs blown off and one's body lacerated and, in order to obtain full compensation, being forced to take on the might of the Ministry of Defence in a law suit it soon becomes obvious that such loopholes should be plugged.

In Committee, the then Under-Secretary, for whom I have the highest personal respect, set out the three Government principles for settling cases. He stated that the Government wished to settle out of court in the interests of the plaintiff. He continued:

"we are not seeking to set up legal barriers by employing a raft of lawyers to deter genuine plaintiffs . . . we shall proceed diligently and quickly to reach settlements. We shall not seek to protract cases."—[Official Report, Standing Committee C, 18 March 1987; c. 22.]

He also mentioned the most interesting fact that the civil service estimate of the financial cost of the Act was £13 million a year after 10 years. It is now five years since the Act came into force and the total cost of claims is only £1 million a year. Yet the still deformed bodies of some of our injured service men are living examples of the injustice of under-compensation. The figures speak for themselves and confirm that there is under-compensation.

I come to the case of the three injured Grenadiers, Lance-Corporal John Ray and Guardsmen Adrian Hicks and Shaun Povey of the Grenadier Guards. I do so not to rehash the case—because I believe that there has been a just settlement—but because it is so well-known. Sadly, however, in its settlement, it is still a rare exception. It is also illustrative of the problems.

In the summer of 1989, those three Grenadiers were ordered to prepare a trench on the Batus firing range in Canada. While digging, one of them struck a buried unexploded anti-tank shell fired some years before but then concealed in the ground. The shell exploded, blowing both legs off each of the three Grenadiers. The explosion injured their bodies so badly that despite prompt and efficient casualty evacuation action, it took the best of medical science about two years to nurse them back to sufficient health even to be invalided out of the armed forces.

A board of inquiry was convened. While it concluded that none of the Grenadiers was to blame, it was not even required to investigate either why the blind shell was in an area used for trench digging or whether all safety precautions and briefings had been carried out effectively. Despite that, the House was assured, incredibly, that no blame was attributable. Perhaps that was legal advice, and I do not blame the Minister personally. That is illustrative of the problems that such injured people face—the need to get the facts through and have them heard openly, rather than everything happening behind closed doors.

About 18 months later, when the first Grenadier, Adrian Hicks, was invalided from the Army, the Government appeared to dig in their heels at the very thought of paying compensation, or at any rate compensation anything near the levels paid in civilian life. When Hicks was discharged on 30 December 1990, he was not paid anything other than his unemployment and sickness benefit from the DSS until 15 May 1991, and then only after a ballyhoo had been created by that fine gentleman who fights many such cases, Colonel Terence Otway.

Here were three men cut down in the prime of their youth by devastating injuries. They were mentally drained after a two-year ordeal in hospital and of course extremely depressed, at their immobility. They had no personal real wealth. Yet the mighty Ministry of Defence challenged those mutilated men to prove negligence. Worse still, the same Ministry withheld the full findings of the board of inquiry, even though those findings were vital to the proving of their case. It provided only an abridged version which left out the crucial and damning details.

Where was the spirit of the Government assurances that had been given to the Standing Committee on 18 March 1987? It was ignored and the Government fought those injured men to the very last trench. Fortunately, those Grenadiers were lucky. They were members of a strong and family-like regiment which not only gave them invalid motor cars but provided funds for their lawyers. As hon. Members are aware, pressure was brought in the House, by the media, and in the end the Prime Minister intervened and a just settlement was achieved.

Those Grenadiers were lucky, but a parliamentary answer given in another place on 14 October 1991, showed that many others had not been so lucky. Indeed, on that date there were still unsettled over 1,000 claims, 56 of them stretching back to 1987, five years previously.

I appreciate that there can be legitimate causes for delay. For example, there is need to prove negligence and there must be time for gravely injured men or women to have their physical conditions stabilised so that an assessment can be made of the degree of disability. But why are there so many, and such long, delays? Let us not overlook the trauma and anguish that is caused by such delay.

To help alleviate the situation and reduce the delays, I introduced the Armed Forces (Liability for Injury) Bill, which would have reversed the onus of proof for negligence for compensation for armed service personnel who received severe injuries in the course of their duties——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. I remind the hon. Gentleman that it is not in order on the Adjournment to discuss legislation. I am sure that he can use his ingenuity to make his points without referring to legislation.

Mr. Browne: I respect that remark, Mr. Deputy Speaker. My right hon. Friend the Minister knows the contents and purposes of the Bill. All I ask is, why does his Ministry continue to try to kill the Bill? Only five minutes ago, an effort was made to stop its progress through the House. It is iniquitous that this sort of Bill is not at least allowed to reach its Committee stage. Why is it not allowed a passage? Why is not the Ministry of Defence pushing the Bill forward to ensure fair treatment for the injured?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps I can help the hon. Gentleman. He may refer to changes that he would like to see. So long as he avoids referring to a Bill he will remain in order.

Mr. Browne: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I respect your ruling on that.

I turn now to the provision of information by the Ministry of Defence. The first example is the case of the injured Grenadiers. Why was it not possible to produce the full board of inquiry report into an accident in Canada several years previously? The reason was because the report was restricted. Who made it restricted? The major in charge of the board of inquiry. It is easy for any Minister or senior officer to have that restricted qualification lifted. Why was it not lifted? Why was only a precis given to the guardsmen and their solicitors when the full inquiry showed—I have seen it illicitly—a story with interesting information that would have been important to them in proving their case, but was not given in the precis?

The second case relates to Mark Booth, a parachutist in the Fifth Airborne division. He was gravely injured in a mysterious convoy accident. There have been endless delays and the Ministry has provided the minimum of information. Why? How can it be seen as a good employer? I simply do not understand.

Then we have the case of Conrad Cole, Richard Gillespie and Lee Thompson of the Royal Fusiliers and others who were injured in friendly fire accidents in the Gulf. I fully understand that there are problems finding out exactly what happened. Other nations may be involved, there may be diplomatic problems and so on. But why do we refuse to give information and cause anguish and trauma to the injured men and their parents? Surely some of that information could be given up front rather than always having to be fought for, creating such a bad impression.

I have tabled many questions, particularly on the Grenadier case. Some answers came back. I do not know whether they can be called answers—perhaps I should say, replies. They were not only unhelpful, but almost downright rude. I asked for a list of the claims outstanding under the 1987 Act showing the names, the disability claimed and the date of accident. I did not think that that could be too hard for the Ministry. The answer was:

"No. To do so would be a breach of medical confidentiality."—[Official Report, 21 January 1992; Vol. 202, c. 190.]

Could the Ministry not ask the men concerned whether they minded their names being put on such a list? I doctored the question and tabled a further request, this time just for the names and date of accident. I was told:

"To list the information requested would breach confidentiality and be in contravention of the Data Protection Act."—[Official Report, 27 January 1992; Vol. 202, c. 453.]

If that is true, the Data Protection Act 1988 needs amending urgently.

Other questions relate to the board of inquiry report. I asked whether in convening the board of inquiry report into the Grenadiers at Batus range any requirement was made for it to investigate why the blind round remained in an area used for digging outside the impact area of the live firing ranges. The answer was:

"The convening order directed the board of inquiry to consider all the circumstances that contributed to the accident.—[Official Report, 25 June 1991; Vol. 193, c. 465.]

I have seen that board and my view is that it was not asked and certainly did not make any real investigation into why that round was there in the first place. That was bad.

In the interests of time, I shall skip other examples. Why is the Minister of Defence so intent on secrecy in this area? I do not blame my right hon. Friend personally for that. I can understand that if there was an accident on board a nuclear submarine, there would be a real security risk—but not on a live firing range in Canada, an assault course in some Aldershot depot, or a convoy in Cyprus, or wherever. Why does such a great load of secrecy have to swamp every request for information by the injured men, their legal representatives and their families?

Why cannot the Ministry of Defence understand that by not being open, it increases the anguish for the injured men, their parents and their mates? Over time, that anguish turns into trauma. It also lessens the men's chances of bringing a successful suit against the MOD. That, by itself, must be grossly unfair. It makes the MOD appear so very callous and uncaring, and not at all the good employer that we want it to be. That is to the detriment of the Government in general and to morale in the armed forces in particular.

I have spoken about the flexibility that was eroded in the 1987 Act. It did away with the Secretary of State's ability to make ex-gratia payments to those deserving cases that occurred before the Act came into force. I agree that Acts should not be retrospective; I have always voted against retrospective legislation. However, I wish to cite two cases. Martin Ketterick, a Royal Marine, was on an exercise when a rope on which he was hanging while climbing a cliff face was cut by mistake. I accept that it was a genuine accident. The non-commissioned officer responsible was disciplined, so there must be some element of negligence by the MOD as the employer. Why has not that man been given compensation? He is almost a walking vegetable, yet he lies there without compensation simply because his accident occurred before the 1987 Act came into force. Why are not the Government generous enough to make an ex-gratia payment? Why could not such a system, by amending legislation, be built into the Act?

The second case is that of Andy Konalyk, a parachutist who was training on an assault course. It was pouring with rain and he had mud all over his boots. He was 30 ft in the air, he jumped across a 6 ft gap and one of his feet missed the girder on the other side. He slipped and smashed 30 ft to the ground. Six other people were injured on the very same day on the same assault course, so there must be an element of negligence. That man is severely disabled, so why is he not compensated as he would be in civilian life?

There is a clear, moral obligation to give compensation. Where is the heart in the Ministry of Defence—the same heart that it asks for and inspires in its employees, the members of the armed forces? Why are the Government so laggardly in calling for an urgent amendment to the 1987 Act to make good the gaps?

There is a need for the flexibility to award ex-gratia payments to be given back to the Secretary of State. There should be an obligation on the MOD to provide all relevant documents, especially the board of inquiry report, to the people bringing suit or their legal representatives.

If secrecy is involved, could not the MOD think of some way in which the information could be provided just to the lawyers under the Official Secrets Act? Why is no one pressing for that? While the provision of information is denied, there is an obvious and grotesque injustice.

I have highlighted delay, the lack of information and the lack of flexibility in the giving of ex-gratia payments. I want now to talk about resettlement—the vital transition of a badly injured member of the armed forces from their care.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. Gentleman, but time is moving on. I am sure that he wishes to be fair to the Minister and give him an opportunity to reply.

Mr. Browne: I do, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

At this vital time of transition, the badly injured person moves from the care of the armed forces into local authority care. Such people are often severely injured and they should be prepared early for that transition, not in the last two weeks before they are finally invalided out of the armed forces. My right hon. Friend the Minister was an officer in the Coldstream Guards. He knows that officers in the Foot Guards must visit people in hospital every week. That is not universal practice, however. Surely it should be insisted on that men are visited in hospital, even if they are in a civilian hospital. Sometimes the Ministry does not know where a man is, because he is still in a civilian hospital.

Will the Minister also consider the possibility of ensuring that the Ministry liaises with the local authority concerned, the local office of the Department of Social Security, the Soldiers, Sailors and Airmens Families Association and the Royal British Legion, especially the latter. Peter Godley is outstanding when it comes to helping people with claims, but surely the MOD should be obliged to ensure that such liaison takes place.

The MOD suggested today that men take out insurance. The package is advantageous, although I do not think that it has many advantages over normal holiday packages.

On the whole, insurance is sold rather than bought. I am amazed that the MOD should imagine that 18-year-olds—physically fit and full of idealism—will start thinking at a depot, "I am going to insure myself against accidents." It is unreasonable to expect that.

I believe that it should be a condition of employment for every member of the armed forces to take out insurance. The payments should be deducted from their pay. If the MOD considers that too severe, it could—like an ordinary employer—subscribe to the cost. The insurance should be organised on a bulk basis; if it were arranged for the armed forces as a whole, the rate would probably be considerably reduced.

If the Government do not want that, why do they not insure themselves? They would then be more able to give generously in the event of accidents.

The United States has a veterans' department, which does an excellent job. I sometimes feel ashamed when I see how American veterans are treated—especially the injured—compared to the way in which ours are treated. Will the Minister consider introducing a similar organisation here?

I have left my right hon. Friend very little time, and I do not expect him to give detailed answers now, but I hope that he will be prepared to put his replies in the Library. Will he consider amending the 1987 Act to allow ex-gratia payments and to require the MOD to produce relevant documents?

Will he also agree to lay down enhanced regulations for resettlement on this vital matter of transition, requiring in particular liaison between the MOD and the organisations that I have mentioned? Will he require the MOD to publish status reports, on a three-monthly basis on cases that have not been settled?

[Mr. Browne]

Finally, will he examine in depth the whole question of compulsory insurance and the establishment of a veterans' department?

I thank my right hon. Friend for coming here today, and I apologise for leaving him so little time to answer.

3.3 pm

The Minister of State for the Armed Forces (Mr. Archie Hamilton): My hon. Friend the Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) has raised an important subject concerning the position of Ministry of Defence personnel—both service and civilian—who are killed or injured in the course of their duties. I am grateful for being given the opportunity to explain the position on some of the issues arising out of this matter. It is, however, a complex subject and, as it concerns the whole question of legal liability and the relationship between employers and employees as it is dealt with under the law, I am sure that the House will readily understand some of the background to the subject. However, it may be helpful if I give a short account of the way in which the present legal position on injured personnel has developed.

My hon. Friend mentioned the Crown Proceedings Act 1947, which enabled servants of the Crown to take proceedings against the Crown in the same way that any other employee could proceed against his employer. However, section 10 of the Act prevented the Crown or a member of the armed forces from being sued for damages for injury or death of an on-duty service man due to some negligent act or omission by the service. The House will recall that the law was changed in a Bill presented by my hon. Friend the Member for Davyhulme (Mr. Churchill) and section 10 was repealed in 1987. While this removed the prohibition on members of the armed forces suing other members, or the Crown, it did not alter the law of evidence or the substantive law of tortious liability.

The Ministry therefore has a legal liability to pay compensation to service personnel where negligence can be established by the Ministry or someone acting on its behalf. The effect of the repeal of section 10 was to put service personnel in the same position as the Ministry's civilian employees—or, indeed, any other civilian worker—as regards the right to seek compensation for injuries received in the course of their work.

There has been much debate and a number of proposals have been made on proposals to change the basis of legal liability. They seek to remove some of the perceived disadvantages, particularly for service personnel, in claiming compensation from a Department of State such as the Ministry of Defence. One proposal was to extend the legal rights and remedies of service men to place them in a far more favourable position than Ministry of Defence civilians or any other group of civilian employees, by imposing an absolute liability on the Ministry in removing the requirement for service personnel to prove negligence when taking civil actions for damages against the Crown.

Although no one is more aware than I am of the worth and value to this country of our service personnel, and the risks to which they are exposed, the proposal to change the law in this way cannot be right. It is a fundamental principle of our system of civil law that for one person to seek compensation from another, that person must show that a wrong, causing him damage, has been done to him by the other party. In the sphere of employer's liability, it is not a principle of the law that an employee may claim compensation from his employer whenever he suffers an injury at work, regardless of whether the injury was attributable to an act of negligence and however much he has contributed to his own misfortune. That applies whether claims are settled in or out of court directly between the parties involved. The proposal would be contrary to current legal principles on personal injury and employer's liability under the law of tort and it would have ramifications far beyond the narrow scope of the proposal itself.

That does not mean that Ministry of Defence personnel, service or civilian, are left without any financial benefits if they are injured in the course of their duties. Indeed, the arrangements under service and civilian pension schemes compare very well with best employer practice. Any service man who is obliged to leave the service because of an attributable injury is eligible for pension and disability awards from the Ministry of Defence and the Department of Social Security, which administers the war pension scheme. Those awards are either lump-sum payments or pension payments with an additional lump sum. They are tax free, index linked to cover inflation, related to the degree of disability and reassessed if there is a deterioration in the individual's condition.

Those awards are made automatically, on a no-fault basis, if a service man is invalided as a result of his injuries. He is not required to prove negligence or make any legal claim for damages, with all the risks attendant on that process. Similarly, in the event that a married service man dies as a result of injuries attributable to service, enhanced benefits are paid under the Ministry's pension scheme to his widow and any eligible children. They are also able to benefit under the Department of Social Security war pension scheme. Civilian employees of the Ministry of Defence are eligible for benefits under the civil service pension scheme where injury or illness results in premature retirement, and may receive an enhanced pension for loss of earnings capacity where this is attributable to their employment.

The motion having been made after half-past Two o'clock, and the debate having continued for half an hour, MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER adjourned the House without Question put, pursuant to the Standing Order.

Adjourned at thirteen minutes past Three o'clock.

Monday 20 January 1992

PRIME MINISTER

European Union

Mr. Tebbit: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out the commitments of the United Kingdom under the declaration of the conference within article C of the provisions of a common foreign and security policy of the draft treaty on European union.

The Prime Minister: The declaration has no legally binding effect. It does not alter the fact that unanimous decisions will still require the unanimous support of all member states. It is similar to the provision in the Single European Act calling upon partners to refrain from impeding the formation of a consensus.

Mr. Tebbit: To ask the Prime Minister if, in relation to article E of the provisions of a common foreign and security policy of the draft treaty on European union with regard to matters coming within the common foreign and security policy, he will state within which international organisations and international conferences the United Kingdom will retain its own representation rather than be represented by the presidency of the European union.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom will retain the membership and representation in all international organisations and international conferences it enjoys at present.

Sir Basil Feldman

Mr. Alton: To ask the Prime Minister (1) when he last met Sir Basil Feldman on official business; and what subjects were discussed;

(2) how many times he has met Sir Basil Feldman in the last 12 months; and whether Sunday trading has been discussed.

The Prime Minister: My normal practice is to neither confirm nor deny whether meetings with private individuals have taken place.

Office Costs

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give the cost of running his office in 1989, 1990 and 1991.

The Prime Minister: The cost in 1990-91 was £8,225,816. The cost in 1989-90 was £7,669,276.

Note: Salaries and wages, notional pension liability, administration costs, the costs of office services and the grant-in-aid to the Chequers Trust are included in the costs. The Prime Minister's salary is excluded.

Businesses (Environmental Performance)

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister whether he has any proposals to recognise businesses who improve their environmental performance.

The Prime Minister: The Government's environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance", and last year's first anniversary report on it stressed that all parts of society have a role to play in securing environmental improvements. This applies not least to business.

The Government want to create the right conditions to encourage business to improve its environmental performance and to recognise and reward those businesses which rise successfully to the challenge. On my recommendation, Her Majesty the Queen has given her approval in principle to the introduction of a new Queen's award for environmental achievement.

The new award will recognise product and process development which has major benefits for the environment and which is commercially successful. It will form part of the established Queen's awards scheme alongside business awards for export and technology achievement. It is planned that applications will be sought in June and that the first environment awards will be made on the Queen's birthday on 21 April 1993.

The addition of environment achievement to the Queen's awards builds on the pioneering work of the Royal Society of Arts whose better environment awards for industry have led the way and generated invaluable experience in awards for business in the environmental field. The RSA plans to continue activity in this area in a way which will complement the new Queen's award.

Lord Lieutenants

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the lord lieutenants with the dates of their appointment and expected retirement.

The Prime Minister: A list of lord lieutenants, together with the dates of their appointment and expected retirement, is set out in the table.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all the confirmed cases of BSE in Northern Ireland (a) in 1991 and (b) before 1991 on a county basis.

Mr. Hanley: Following is the information.

County	Number of confirmed cases of BSE
Down	27
Fermanagh	19
Londonderry	26
Tyrone	32
Antrim	55
Armagh	11
Total	170
Prior to 1991
Down	33
Fermanagh	12
Londonderry	12
Tyrone	25
Antrim	42
Total	133

There are 1,533,226 cattle in Northern Ireland, and a total of 308 confirmed cases of BSE have been reported to date.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the location, including the county, of the incinerators which dispose of BSE-infected cattle that are currently operating in Northern Ireland and in each case give the potential capacity and actual capacity for through put each week of infected cattle; whether he has plans to introduce new incinerators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There are two incinerators currently operating in Northern Ireland, one at Dundonald, County Down, and one at Omagh, Co. Tyrone. These incinerators both of which are owned by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland are used for the disposal of a wide range of pathological material, for example, clinical material submitted for diagnostic investigations and post-mortem examination. The Department is currently installing a new incinerator in County Down. The potential capacity—based on 24 hours a day, five days a week operation—and actual throughputs are as follows:

	Bovines Per Week
	Potential	Actual Throughputs[1]
County Tyrone	60	2·0
County Down	75	3·5

[1] Average weekly number of BSE infected cattle.

ENERGY

Advertising Expenditure

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list for the financial years (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91, (c) 1991-92, (d) 1992-93 and (e) 1993-94 actual or projected expenditure on (i) print and (ii) audio-visual media advertising by (1) British Nuclear Fuels Ltd., (2) the Atomic Energy Authority, (3) Nuclear Electric and (4) Scottish Nuclear.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This is a commercial matter for the bodies in question.

Nuclear Materials (Protection)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the United Kingdom has submitted any amendments to the secretariat of the review conference for the convention on the physical protection of nuclear materials to be held in Vienna in July.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. The United Kingdom does not see any need to propose changes in the current international convention.

Euratom

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East on 9 December 1991, Official Report, column 336, he will set out the criteria used in choosing the appointees to the Euratom scientific and technical committee.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The scientific and technical committee must be consulted on any matters where the Euratom treaty so provides. The main areas in question are nuclear research, radiation protection and hazardous waste management. United Kingdom members are chosen for their expertise in these fields.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether, following the reply given by the EC Energy Commissioner to Mr. Llewelyn Smith MEP on 23 July 1991, European Parliament written question 958/91 EN, on United Kingdom plutonium stocks, he will now give the EC Commission permission to make public the amount of plutonium offered to Euratom on the United Kingdom's accession to the treaty of Rome on 1 January 1973.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has regarding the implications for future Japanese reprocessing contracts for Sellafield of the decision taken on 28 November 1991 by the Japanese Government's Science and Technology Agency to survey the safety and requirements to transport plutonium from the United Kingdom to Japan following reprocessing; and if Her Majesty's Government have been contacted by the Japan Atomic Industrial Forum Inc., which is conducting the survey.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I am not aware of any such decision.

Coal Industry

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the Union of Democratic Mineworkers and Lloyds merchant bank about their proposals to apply for all or part of a privatised coal industry and to enable employees in the industry to become shareholders.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have met the Union of Democratic Mineworkers and Lloyds merchant bank to discuss their proposals concerning the coal industry. However, no decisions as to the form or timing of the sale will be made until after the next election.

HSE Offshore Division

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many inspector grade personnel who inspected offshore installations in the Department of Energy prior to 1 April 1991, have not taken up posts in the Health and Safety Executive's offshore division.

Mr. Moynihan: All such staff who were in post on 31 March transferred to the Health and Safety Executive's offshore division on 1 April 1991.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy that an amount equal to that spent on fusion research should be spent on research into non-nuclear renewable energies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: It is the Government's policy to allocate resources to research on energy sources in accordance with the needs of individual technologies and taking due account of their state of development. There is no merit in simply imposing arbitrary equality.

Linkohr Report

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the Linkohr report to the European Parliament regarding European Community expenditure on fusion research.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A copy of this report is in the Department's library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Djibouti-Eritrean Border

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place in the Western European Union concerning the deployment of French troops along the Djibouti-Eritrean border; and if he will make it his policy to request the removal of all foreign troops from the region.

Mrs. Chalker: There have been no discussions in the Western European Union on Djibouti. The deployment of French troops within that country is a bilateral matter for the Djibouti and French Governments.

South Korea

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he, Ministers or officials of his Department, held any consultations with his United States counterpart over the content of the recent intergovernmental agreement concluded with South Korea to sign contracts with British Nuclear Fuels plc on nuclear fuel services for South Korea's nuclear industry.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Yes, there was contact at official level, subsequent to the announcement of the agreement.

Commonwealth of Independent States

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact which negotiations among members of the Commonwealth of Independent States on the deployment and control of their military forces is likely to have on international commitments previously entered into by the governments of the former Soviet Union.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Russia, as the continuing state, takes on all rights and obligations of the former Soviet Union. We have, however, also urged the other former republics to take on those rights and obligations as far as they can apply to them.

The Minsk agreement on armed forces and border troops confirms the legal right of states to create their own armed forces. A high-level working group has been set up at NATO headquarters in Brussels to work with the new states to ensure that they uphold their responsibilities under the CFE treaty.

The Alma Ata agreement on nuclear weapons and the Minsk agreement on strategic forces will have implications for the strategic arms reduction talks agreement between the US and former Soviet Union and the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, NPT. We and our allies are actively pursuing with the former republics the means to ensure that these agreements are fully honoured and that all former republics other than Russia accede to the NPT as non-nuclear weapons states as soon as possible.

Iraq

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 9 December 1991, Official Report, column 321 on Iraqi nuclear scientists, if he will list the categories used by his Department for recording entry visas issued to people from Iraq from 1979 onwards.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Records are maintained according to the category of visa issued—that is, visit, settlement, and categories. In cases where visit or student visas are issued, application forms are retained for two years and then destroyed. No separate record is kept of an applicant's personal details or profession. In cases where visas are issued to settlement or other long-term applicants, application forms, and index cards recording the applicant's personal details—but not profession—are retained for 10 years.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on discussions with his United States counterpart on the terms of the possible accession of Byelorussia, Ukraine and Kazakhstan to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We strongly support accession to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty of these republics as soon as they are in a position to observe the treaty obligations. We have been in close touch with the United States and with out European partners on these matters.

UN Secretary-General

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Secretary-General of the United Nations; what matters were discussed; and what agreements were reached.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I had valuable talks with the new United Nations Secretary-General, Dr. Boutros Ghali, during his visit to London on 13 January. We discussed a range of issues on the UN's current agenda including my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's proposal to convene a high-level meeting of the UN Security Council in New York on 31 January, which Dr. Boutros Ghali welcomed.

Pakistan

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 9 December, Official Report, column 321, if he will state the name of the Norwegian company concerned; and if he will make a statement about United Kingdom assistance once the Norwegian authorities have completed their investigations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Treasury proposes to make a statement when investigations have been completed.

Indonesia

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings have occurred between Ministers of Her Majesty's Government and Indonesian Ministers during 1991; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Six Ministers met their Indonesian counterparts in 1991, either in London or in Jakarta. The Prime Minister also met the Indonesian Minister for Research. Discussions covered a wide range of issues.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the Government contracts between Indonesia and Britain since 1975.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: British companies have signed many contracts with Indonesia since 1975. Details are a matter for the companies involved. In terms of Governmental contracts, we sold obsolete tribal class frigates to Indonesia in the early 1980s.

East Timor

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the numbers of East Timorese (a) killed, (b) tortured, (c) missing feared killed or imprisoned and (d) arrested by the Indonesian security forces, since the occupation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Accurate figures are very difficult to obtain. We believe a figure of 100,000 killed or died of starvation is credible. We have no credible figures of the number tortured, missing or arrested.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government have taken following the Santa Cruz massacre in East Timor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have made representations to the Indonesians on several occasions here in London and in Jakarta. Our position has also been clearly set out in EC and Council of Europe declarations and in the EC presidency statement to the third committee of the UN General Assembly.

We are also in close touch with our partners with the aim of supporting the efforts of the UN Secretary-General in this area.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Parliamentary Human Rights Group concerning the Santa Cruz massacre in East Timor.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received the report of the Parliamentary Human Rights Group on the recent shooting incident in East Timor. Members of the group have also raised with us their concern about the events in Dili.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the reasons for the United Kingdom's abstention on United Nations Security Council resolutions concerning the invasion of East Timor since 1975.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom, along with most other European Community partners, abstained on all resolutions passed in debate in the United Nations General Assembly between 1976 and 1982. We took the view that by so doing, in the company of other countries, we could help the process of reconciliation and the search for a diplomatic solution between Indonesia and Portugal. We continue to hold this view.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his (a) Portuguese and (b) Dutch counterparts concerning East Timor.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend has held several discussions with his EC counterparts on East Timor, before and after the events in Dili in November.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action his Department has taken regarding those East Timorese missing after the Santa Cruz massacre.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Indonesians are well aware of our concerns about those reported missing after shootings. We look to the Indonesian Government to investigate the fate of the missing fully and promptly, as they have promised to do. A further commission has been set up partly for this purpose.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost in 1992-93 of (a) cutting the basic rate of income tax by 1 per cent., (b) increasing the maximum for mortgage interest relief by £5,000, (c) increasing each personal and marriage allowance, including age-related allowance by £1,000 and (d) removing value added tax from granny flats.

Mr. Maude: The information is as follows:

(a) Reducing the basic rate of income tax to 24p would cost about £1·95 billion.

(b) Increasing the ceiling on mortgage interest tax relief by £5,000 would cost about £300 million excluding the effect of behavioural changes following such an increase.

(c) Increasing all personal allowances by £1,000 would cost about £7 billion.

(d) Information on which to make an estimate is not available.

Bingham Inquiry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has given evidence to the Bingham inquiry.

Mr. Maples: Yes.

United States International Affairs Minister

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met Mr. David Mulford, the United States Treasury Under-Secretary for International Affairs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer last met Mr. Mulford on 8 January 1992, when he briefed him on the Japan-United States joint communiqué on world economic growth issued by President Bush and Prime Minister Miyazawa. A copy of the communiqué is in the Library of the House.

Civil Service Pensions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost of requiring that all temporary service in the civil service count in full for pension, as recommended by the Priestley commission in 1956; how many persons would be affected; and at what ranks.

Mr. Maples: An estimate of the cost of allowing unestablished service rendered before 14 July 1949 to reckon in full for civil service pension purposes, including the cost of arrears of pension and increased lump sums, is not available. Information about the number of persons who would be affected and their ranks could only be provided at a disproportionate cost. If only those with such service who qualified for a pension are considered, and no arrears of pension were paid or change made in the basis of calculating lump sum retirement benefits, it was estimated in 1989 that some 100,000 pensioners would benefit at a cost over the next 25 years of the order of £400 million for the civil service alone.

Privatisation

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any further proposals to privatise more industries.

Mr. Maude: Work is in hand on the planned privatisation of Northern Ireland Electricity, British Coal and British Rail. The Government continue to look for new opportunities for returning public sector industry and services to the private sector. Announcements of new candidates will be made in due course.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the levels of manufacturing output in 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Mellor: Indices of United Kingdom manufacturing output can be found on the CSO databank which can be accessed by the House of Commons Library.

Pipe Tobacco

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue has been raised from the increase in duty on pipe tobacco announced in the 1991 Budget; and what proportion this increase represents to the total increased revenue from all tobacco products arising from the 1991 Budget.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The increase in duty on pipe tobacco announced in the 1991 Budget will raise an estimated £5 million in 1991-92. This represents about 1 per cent. of the estimated total increase in revenue from all tobacco products.

Derbyshire County Council

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the chair of the Finance and General Purposes Committee of Derbyshire county council concerning the statements of the Financial Secretary 18 November, Official Report, column 32, concerning Derbyshire county council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I have received a letter.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what would be the cost in a full year of increasing the ceiling for mortgage interest tax relief to £48,000;

(2) what would be the level today of mortgage interest tax relief if it had been indexed for inflation (a) since 1979 and (b) since an upper limit was first imposed on its value.

Mr. Maude: If the mortgage interest tax relief ceiling had been indexed in line with the retail prices index since 1979, it would be £63,000 in 1991-92. With indexation since its inception in 1974 the ceiling would be £131,000. The costs in 1991-92 of increasing the ceiling on mortgage interest tax relief are shown in the table.

Ceiling on mortgage interest tax relief	Cost of increasing the ceiling on mortgage interest tax relief in 1991-92[1]	Total cost of mortgage interest tax relief in 1991-92
48,000	1·1	7·2
63,000	1·4	7·5
131,000	1·8	7·9

[1] The estimates are based on the distribution of existing outstanding mortgages and therefore exclude behavioural effects which could be substantial.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the liquidators of BCCI concerning the emergence of further evidence relevant to his answer of 16 October, Official Report, column 159, concerning employees of BCCI; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: My right hon. Friend has received no representations from the liquidators of BCCI concerning the employees since my answer of 16 October 1991, at column 159.

Deposit Protection Board

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many members there are on the Deposit Protection Board; if he will list the members of the Deposit Protection Board; and what is the budget of the Deposit Protection Board.

Mr. Maples: There are, at present, six members of the Deposit Protection Board. There are three ex-officio members—the Governor of the Bank of England, the deputy governor, and the chief cashier—plus three ordinary members appointed by the Governor. They are Mr. B. Quinn, Mr. R. T. Fox and Mr. T. P. Frost. The appointment of a fourth ordinary member is outstanding, following the resignation of Mr. A. S. Park.

In the year to 28 February 1991, the operating costs of the board were £314,000. For 1991-92, the original operating costs budget was £200,000, buf this will clearly be exceeded due to the extra resources required to deal with BCCI.

Bloodstock Industry

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet representatives of the bloodstock industry to discuss liability for VAT after 1993.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 15 January 1992]: My right hon. Friend has no appointment to meet representatives of the bloodstock industry to discuss value added tax. However, I am always ready to meet representatives of the bloodstock industry to discuss these issues and expect to arrange a meeting shortly.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the aggregate balance of payments in the original six EC countries in each year since 1962, in the EC nine as a whole, after 1973, and in the EC 12 as a whole since 1986, both in value and as a percentage of their total gross national product.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 17 January 1992]: Comprehensive data are not readily available. Details on the balance of payments current account of the European Community individual countries and in total from 1988 are given in the EUROSTAT publication "External Trade Monthly Statistics, Theme 6, Series B, December 1991" a copy of which is in the Library. Further details from the Community's statistical office will be forwarded to the hon. Member when available.

DEFENCE

Research and Development Funding

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the achievements since 1979 of the funding of research and development in universities and polytechnics by (a) the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, formerly the Chemical Defence

Establishment, and (b) the Atomic Weapons Establishment, formerly the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is not our policy to make available detailed information on the outcome of contracts and agreements between the Atomic Weapons Establishment and universities and polytechnics. The director general of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment will be writing to the hon. Member.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many research and development contracts and agreements in universities and polytechnics are currently being funded by (a) the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment and (b) the Atomic Weapons Establishment; at how many universities and polytechnics; and what is the total value of these contracts and agreements.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The AWE currently has 24 research and development contracts or agreements with 15 universities or polytechnics, with a total value of £2·03 million. The director general of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment will be writing to the hon. Member.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many research and development contracts, agreements and projects his Department is currently funding in universities and other institutions of higher education in Britain; what is their total value; and how many of them are classified secret.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The MOD is currently funding in universities and other institutions of higher education in Britain 791 research contracts and agreements with a total value of £71·2 million. One is classified secret.

Semiconductor Materials

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money his Department is giving to the Interdisciplinary Research Centre into semiconductor materials; and for how long this funding is due to last.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The MOD has committed £600,000 to the Interdisciplinary Research Centre on semiconductor materials through the joint grant scheme with the research councils. This is for the three years to March 1992.

Vacation Employment

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many undergraduates and postgraduates from universities and other institutions of higher education are employed during the summer vacation at (a) the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down and (b) the Atomic Weapons Establishment at Aldermaston; and for what purposes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: During the 1991 summer vacation there were 33 students employed at the Atomic Weapons Establishment. The director general of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment will be writing to the hon. Member.

Defence, Research Agency

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are being taken by the Defence Research Agency to encourage universities and polytechnics to bid for his Department's research contracts.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have asked the chief executive of the Defence Research Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Chemical and Biological Warfare Agreements

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many agreements exist between Britain and the United States of America for the exchange of information about chemical and biological warfare; what are the titles of these agreements; how long each agreement has existed; what is the nature of each agreement; and which other countries are involved in each of these agreements.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom abandoned all offensive chemical and biological weapons in the late 1950s. Since then the United Kingdom has been wholly concerned with chemical and biological defence, that is, the provision of effective protective measures for the United Kingdom armed forces.

Regular liaison and exchange of information takes place between the United Kingdom and the United States of America, as well as other allies, in the field of chemical and biological defence under a number of general defence agreements. A United Kingdom-United States of America-Canada memorandum of understanding on chemical and biological defence was signed in 1980, addressing exchange of information on chemical and biological defence research and development, and on production and procurement of chemical and biological defence equipment.

Research Links

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many formal links exist between his Department and universities and polytechnics to reflect commonality of particular research interests; what is the nature of these links; which universities and polytechnics are involved; and how long these links have existed.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Ministry of Defence has links with a wide range of universities and polytechnics including contracts and agreements for technical and non-technical research, involvement in Link projects, and funding for joint grants made with the research councils. The Ministry also supports the Centre for Defence Studies at the university of London.

Research

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at how many (a) polytechnics and (b) universities his Department has funded research in the last three years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Eleven polytechnics and 43 universities.

Education Links

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what formal links exist between universities and other institutions of higher education and (a) the Atomic Weapons Establishment and (b) the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, other than the awarding of research contracts and agreements.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Staff from the Atomic Weapons Establishment, as from other establishments, may be appointed as careers liaison officers to a university. When an undergraduate is taking advantage of MOD-funded bursary schemes, he or she may be allocated a tutor from an establishment, including AWE, with knowledge of the discipline being pursued.

The director general of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment will be writing to the hon. Member about that establishment.

Collaborative Research

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money his Department is contributing towards the Link collaborative research scheme; which programmes are being funded by his Department; and to what purpose.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: So far the MOD has committed £635,000 to Link projects. The programmes being funded are concerned with advanced semiconductor materials, nanotechnology and optoelectronic systems. The MOD participates in areas of work which are relevant to the defence research programme.

Queen Elizabeth Military Hospital

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) service personnel, (b) service dependants and (c) national health service patients were treated as either (i) in-patients or (ii) out-patients at the Queen Elizabeth military hospital, Woolwich, during (1) 1990 and (2) 1991.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The table shows the number of service personnel, dependants and other NHS patients who have been treated as in-patients and out-patients at the Queen Elizabeth military hospital in 1990. Figures for 1991 are not yet available.

Queen Elizabeth military hospital Woolwich

In-patients
Service Personnel	4,055
Service dependents	840
National Health Service	4,196
Others	189
Total number of In-patients	9,280
Out-patients
Service personnel	10,596
Service dependents	1,849
Total number of out-patients	27,703

Facilities Charge

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of the facilities charge paid by United Kingdom forces stationed overseas; whether there are exceptions to the payment of this tax for troops stationed at NATO, the United Nations and other bases which are not run directly by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Service accommodation charges worldwide formerly included elements for domestic rates, which were removed on the introduction of the community charge. Overseas, rates elements were superseded by the facilities charge, representing a contribution to the cost of facilities and amenities available to personnel and their families, from which they continue to derive the same benefit as before. The facilities charge currently ranges from £62 to £276 per annum, or double this in married quarters, depending on the type of accommodation occupied. The average payable is £208 per person per annum.

Personnel serving overseas with international organisations normally occupy rented accommodation, and receive allowances to cover the costs. Rates of these allowances are reduced to take account of the accommodation charge, including facilities charge, that would be payable in service accommodation. Personnel on loan service or exchange postings are subject to special arrangements reflecting local conditions.

Submarines (Fishing Vessel Avoidance)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the document issued to submarine commanding officers in respect of fishing vessel avoidance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. Guidance on the avoidance of fishing vessels forms part of general submarine instructions which are classified.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a recommendation to submarine commanding officers that a record is taken of each breach of the suggested separation zone of 3,000 yd between submarines and fishing vessels; if he will place a record of these annually in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will examine this proposal as part of the wider consideration being given to the safety of fishing vessels and submarines.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he intends to expand the notification scheme between fishermen and the Royal Navy to all United Kingdom waters; what progress has been made on discussions into this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 15 January 1992, Official Report, column 643.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made regarding the recommendation of the fatal accident inquiry into the sinking of the Antares in respect of giving urgent consideration to a separation zone between submarines and fishing vessels of 4,000 yd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All the recommendations of the sheriff principal are being considered, including increasing the separation zone to 4,000 yd for dived submarines. I will make an announcement on this as soon as our consideration and consultation with fishing industry representatives have been completed.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to revise the document issued to submarine commanding officers in respect of fishing vessel avoidance; whether he will seek advice on the matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Advice issued to submarine commanders on this subject was reviewed and amended following the loss of the fishing vessel Antares. It is, in any case, kept under constant review and is revised as and when necessary, taking into account operating experience.

Nuclear Warheads

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the security and safety arrangements in place at the Arzamas-16 weapons research facility near Orenberg in Russia for tactical nuclear warheads withdrawn from deployment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Arzamas-16 is a former Soviet, now Russian, nuclear research and development facility. Appropriate physical and technical security and safety arrangements are believed to be in place.

Uranium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) of 12 December Official Report, column 543, any unsafeguarded uranium used to fuel the BNFL reactors at Calder Hall and Chapelcross has ever subsequently been put under safeguards during or after reprocessing of the fuel.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There have been occasions when, for operational reasons, uranium used to fuel the Calder Hall and Chapelcross reactors has been brought into safeguards during and after reprocessing.

Fishing Industry

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning a meeting between representatives of the Ministry of Defence and representatives of the fishing industry held on 9 December 1991.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This was the first meeting of a sub-group of the fishing industry safety group, set up to consider submarine operations and fishing vessel safety. The meeting was chaired by the Department of Transport and attended by representatives of the fishermen's organisations, of the Ministry of Defence and of the fisheries departments. There was a useful exchange of views and a further meeting is planned.

Submarines

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning plans to equip all Royal Navy submarines with devices to scan VHF channels.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: VHF scanning transceivers have now been fitted to all operational Royal Navy submarines.

Nuclear Weapons (Safety Review)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the nuclear weapons safety review being conducted by his Department has been completed; and what has been the cost to date to support the review.

Mr. Alan Clark: The review is almost complete, and a statement on its outcome will be made in due course. Costs for the conduct and support of the review have not been logged separately from other continuing work in the Department.

US Atomic Co-ordinating Office

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now make it his policy to publish the annual operating budget of the atomic co-ordinating office in Washington DC.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Nuclear Weapons (Information Exchanges)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make it his policy to give the military commanders of each state in the Commonwealth of Independent States a full inventory of United Kingdom nuclear weapons by age, deployment status and location in exchange for comparable information from the CIS.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Successive Governments have taken the view that nuclear deterrence would not be served by divulging information of this kind.

Simon Brittain

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department expects to respond to the telephone messages left by the hon. Member for Nottingham, North at his Department's First Avenue House office regarding the case of Simon Brittain.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Attempts were made to respond to the message which the hon. Member left with the switchboard. I replied on 17 January 1992, Official Report, column 698 to the question the hon. Member tabled about Captain Simon Brittain.

Services Shops

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 514, on President of the Service Institute or President of the Regiment Institute shops, what monitoring is made of decisions of commanding officers in relation to the PSI and PSR, being in competition with the NAAFI; and if he will outline the channels through which NAAFI managers may express their concern on the trading practices of these shops.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No specific machinery is considered necessary to monitor such decisions. NAAFI managers may express concerns either to the commanding officer or through the committees that exist for liaison purposes at local and other levels.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Wind Energy

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his written reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas), Official Report, 9 December 1991, columns 281-82, if he will set out the terms of the paper on wind energy presented by the Ministry's Agricultural Development and Advisory Service.

Mr. Curry: The paper covered the farm and conservation grant scheme available to farmers. Particular attention was paid to energy saving grants the aims of which are to encourage farmers to use renewable sources of energy, to help cut energy loss or to recover energy which would otherwise go to waste. They include, among others, the supply and installation of:

Wind or water powered generators in excess of 5 kW.
Wind powered pumps for field drainage.
Solar Heating panels.

Bovine Somatotropin

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many animal test certificates for bovine somatotropin are currently in operation in the United Kingdom; how many sites and how many cows are affected; in which counties or regions they are operational; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Three companies have current animal test certificates authorising trials using bovine somatotropin products. Together, these permit companies to administer a BST product to a maximum of 1,287 cows on 23 sites, but no cows are currently being treated.

As the hon. Member is already aware, section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968 precludes me from disclosing further details.

Nuclear Waste (Disposal)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been Her Majesty's Government's contribution to date to the EC project Marina on the radiation effects of nuclear waste disposal in coastal waters, in each year since Marina was established; what have been the main findings of the project; and what are the comparative concentrations of radioactivity in waters surrounding the United Kingdom with the waters bordering the shores of each other EC country with a coastline.

Mr. Curry: Staff from this Department provided data, advice and written contributions to technical reports and scientific papers between the start of the project in 1985 and its completion in 1989.

The project, which studies sources of radioactivity in north European waters, concluded that environmental monitoring data in the EC from nuclear site operators, governments and other resources was entirely adequate for demonstrating compliance with dose limits, that maximum individual doses from controlled sources were all within the dose limits recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection, and that population exposure rates due to discharges from civil nuclear sites were a factor of 1,000 less than those due to natural radioactivity.

The range of concentration of caesium 137 activity in the Irish sea and the Baltic sea are similar, with concentrations off Scotland, in the North sea and in the English channel successively lower. Concentrations along the Atlantic coast and in the Mediterranean are at background levels.

Food Irradiation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list each EC country where food irradiation is permitted and the products which can be irradiated in each case; what information he has on irradiation of products from non-EC countries imported into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the following list of food irradiation approvals. The Food (Control of Irradiation) Regulations 1990 establish that irradiated foods may only be imported from countries outside the Community which have legislative controls and enforcement arrangements at least equivalent to those in Great Britain. No country has been approved to supply the Great Britain market with irradiated food.

Foodstuffs listed as approved for irradiation in the EC

Belgium
potatoes
strawberry onions garlic shallots
black/white pepper paprika powder arabic gum spices
(semi)-dried vegetables shrimps
herbal tea

Denmark
spices and herbs

France
potatoes
onions
shallot
spices and aromatic substances (inclusive powered onions and garlic) gum arabic cereal flakes and germs for milk products dehydrated vegetables mechanically deboned poultry meat dry fruits dry vegetables strawberries
frog legs, frozen egg white (liquid) dried or frozen frozen or refrigerated peeled, deheaded shrimp rice flour
aromatic herbs, (frozen) poultry, ground chopped or cut raisins, dried dates, figs and dry apricots

Italy
potatoes onions
garlic

Netherlands
dried vegetables frozen shrimps
fresh shrimps
spices and herbs
poultry
fish fillets
frozen meals for patients who need a special diet.

Spain
potatoes
onions

United Kingdom
any food for consumption by patients who require a sterile diet as essential factor of their treatment.
fruit vegetables
cereals bulbs and tubers spices and condiments fish and shellfish
poultry

Agricultural Land (Planning Applications)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many planning applications affecting grade I agricultural land have been objected to by his Ministry since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The records currently show that a total of 1,993 individual planning applications were objected to in England and Wales during the period 1980 to 1990. However, the records do not show how many of these objections involved grade 1 land.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the confirmed cases of BSE in England (a) in 1991 and (b) before 1991 on a county basis.

Mr. Gummer: The information is as follows:

County	Number of cases 1991 (Provisional)	Before 1991
Bedfordshire	54	69
Cambridge	49	93
Essex	70	112
Hertfordshire	46	110
Lincolnshire	119	218

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the location, including the county, of the incinerators which dispose of BSE-infected cattle that are currently operating in England and in each case give the potential capacity and actual capacity for throughput each week of infected cattle; whether he has plans to introduce new incinerators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: At present there are five incinerator plants in England used for the disposal of carcases of suspect BSE cattle. These are located in Gloucestershire, Hertfordshire, Somerset, Nottinghamshire and Avon. Along with two other incinerator plants in Wales these currently provide enough capacity to incinerate all suspect BSE carcases.

We expect that these facilities, together with another which will become operational shortly, should continue to prove sufficient to incinerate all such carcases.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give a breakdown of the age at death of cattle diagnosed as having BSE during 1991.

Mr. Maclean: The number of confirmed cases of BSE in 1991 in Great Britain by age at onset of clinical signs is as follows:

Age at onset (years)	Number of cases Age known	Age estimated	Total
2	22	24	46
3	2,499	501	3,000
4	5,658	1,485	7,143

Sellafield

Mr. Shore: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has received any applications from British Nuclear Fuels for the release of krypton 85 gas from the Sellafield plant; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Routine discharges of krypton 85 from the Sellafield site are authorised under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. No further applications for the release of krypton 85 have been received.

Food Aid

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tonnes of each food commodity has been given by the United Kingdom to the former members of the USSR since the Maastricht summit; how many tonnes of each commodity donated by the United Kingdom came from intervention stores; and what the net cost has been to the United Kingdom to date.

Mr. Curry: A total of 120 tonnes of British beef has been delivered to the former Soviet Union so far under the EC's Maastricht emergency aid package of 200 million ecu. The remaining 2,080 tonnes of the amount that the United Kingdom agreed to deliver under the tranche of the package was due to leave the port of Hull by the end of last week for St. Petersburg and Moscow. All of this beef is from intervention stocks held in the United Kingdom.

Under the second tranche of the package, the United Kingdom is to supply a further 1,500 tonnes of beef from intervention.

The cost of the meat is covered by the EC. Arrangements to reclaim transport costs of the operation from the EC are also being discussed. The cost to the United Kingdom, other than staff time involved in organising deliveries, will come through our contribution to the EC aid budget of some 18 per cent.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teacher Training

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the present number of students in teacher training colleges; and what were the figures for each of the previous five years.

Mr. Fallon: The information is given in the table.

United Kingdom domiciled students undertaking courses of Initial Teacher Training in England

Academic year	Total number[3]
1985-86	31,554
1986-87	33,082
1987-88	35,173
1988-89	36,195
1989-90	38,167

Research Councils

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much was allocated to each polytechnic by research councils during 1990-91; and how much was allocated by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The following allocations were made to polytechnics by each of the research councils in 1990-91:

AFRC Polytechnic	£000
Bristol	74
East London	26
Lancashire	80
Oxford	145
Total	325

Notes:

1. These figures include research studentships, industrial fellowships and postdoctoral fellowships as well as research grants.
2. The figures for SERC are for the academic year 15 September 1990 to 31 August 1991. The figures for the other research councils are for the financial year 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991.

The following allocations were made by the PCFC for research in 1990-91 as the final tranche of a National Advisory Board initiative launched in 1988-89.

Student Loans

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in respect of student loans schemes (a) the most recent figure for loan applications received, (b) the number of loans received, (c) the value of the loans and (d) the total costs incurred in administering the scheme in the Greater Manchester area.

Mr. Alan Howarth: As at 15 January 1992, the Student Loans Company Ltd. had received 7,474 applications for loans for the academic year 1991-92 from students attending institutions in the Greater Manchester area and had paid 7,269 loans worth £3·4 million. The company will very shortly pay fees totalling £30,308 in respect of correctly completed eligibility certificates received from those institutions up to 31 December 1991.

EC Research Contracts

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to establish a fund so that contributions can be granted towards the unfunded costs on EC research contracts received by United Kingdom higher education institutions.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Universities already receive substantial funding for research as part of their block grant from the Universities Funding Council. It is for institutions to determine their use of block grant and other funding according to their own priorities. This includes support for European Community research projects. Improved cost recovery on commercial research projects by universities would free substantial resources for other purposes, including European Community research.

School Visits

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list the schools he has visited in the Greater Manchester area since his appointment as Secretary of State for Education and Science.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has not visited any schools in Greater Manchester since his appointment in November 1990.

Education Staff

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report for each local education authority the latest estimate available to him of the numbers of (a) qualified teachers employed in schools, (b) unqualified teachers employed in schools, (c) teachers employed as inspectors or advisers, or otherwise than directly in schools, (d) teachers and classroom assistants, playground and school meals staff working in schools, (e) administrative staff working in schools, (f) caretakers, cleaning and maintenance staff working in schools, (g) administrative staff working on education other than in schools and (h) any other employees of the education department, respectively.

Mr. Fallon: The following two tables show the numbers of qualified and unqualified teachers employed in nursery, primary and secondary schools in January 1991. Information on inspectors and advisers is not collected and it is not possible to separately identify teachers employed otherwise than in schools. Data on education support staff and administrative staff in schools are not yet available for publication. Information is not collected centrally on items (f) to (h).

School Buildings

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the current capital allocation to allow authorities to replace old and outdated school buildings which are unsuitable for operating the national curriculum in practical orientated subjects.

Mr. Fallon: Between 1986-1987 and 1989-1990, the last year for which we have final figures, total capital expenditure on maintained schools was over £2·25 billion. This is a substantial sum of money, which has enabled local education authorities and the governors of voluntary-aided schools to make significant improvements to the stock of inadequate school buildings, including facilities for operating the national curriculum in practical oriented subjects.

For its part, the Government have significantly increased the level of annual capital guidelines—ACGs—and capital allocations to voluntary-aided and grant-maintained schools over the last three years to over £700 million in 1992-93. ACGs have increased from £410 million in 1990-91 to £472 million in the current year and £524 million in 1992-93. Grants to voluntary-aided schools have risen from £109 million to £131 million to £150 million over the same period.

Specific further emphasis on improving facilities for teaching technology is the aim of the £25 million technology initiative for 1992-93.

Education Funding

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the funding of (a) city technology colleges and (b) schools run by local education authorities.

Mr. Eggar: City technology colleges receive Government grants for recurrent funding. Recurrent costs are calculated on the basis of pupil expenditure figures for LEAs which maintain schools in similar urban areas. This is paid to colleges as per capita grant on the basis of pupil numbers, along with earmarked grants for specific purposes. During the colleges' five-year build-up, per capita grant contains provision for extra administrative costs and to compensate for diseconomies of scale.

Schools maintained by local authorities are funded according to authorities' formula funding mechanisms as set down in statutory schemes of local management. National criteria for schemes require that at least 75 per cent. of school budgets should be distributed with reference to pupil numbers.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide figures of cost per pupil for each of the regions in England for primary and secondary schools for the last five years.

Mr. Fallon: In the last five years for which actual spending information is available, average school-based spending by region in nursery and primary schools and in secondary schools was as follows:

Net institutional expenditure[1] per pupil, nursery and primary schools[2]

Region	1985-86 £	1986-87 £	1987-88 £	1988-89 £	1989-90 £

Yorkshire and Humberside	1,110	1,280	1,425	1,640	1,755

[1] Net institutional expenditure covers the direct costs in schools of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the costs of school meals, home to school transport, LEA central administration, and financing costs of capital expenditure. The figures in the tables are derived from local education authorities' returns of their spending to the Department of the Environment and of their pupil numbers to the Department of Education and Science.

[2] Spending on nursery and primary schools is not collected separately.

Note:

The figures exclude those for the following authorities as their spending returns were not available: 1985-86, Merton, Newham; 1986-87, Haringey, Newham; 1987-88, Ealing, Haringey, Sheffield, Berkshire; 1988-89, Haringey, Manchester, Wakefield; 1989-90, Haringey, Hounslow, Manchester, Wakefield, North Tyneside.

City Technology Colleges

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the Government's programme for opening of new city technology colleges is on target.

Mr. Eggar: The CTC programme is making excellent progress. Thirteen colleges are already established and running, and two more will be open by autumn next year. In addition, the extension of CTC principles and practice into the rest of the maintained system is now under way. Indeed my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 15 January the establishment, with the joint support of British Aerospace, of Hutton grammar school in Lancashire as the first voluntary-aided technology school.

Primary Education

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list his Department's projection of primary school numbers for each school year until 1996-97.

Mr. Fallon: Projections to 1996-97 of pupils in maintained nursery, primary and middle deemed primary schools in England, together with the actual number in 1990-91, are as follows. Figures relate to full-time equivalent pupils expressed in thousands.

	Number
1990-91	3,946
1991-92	3,982
1992-93	4,033
1993-94	4,102
1994-95	4,160
1995-96	4,233
1996-97	4,285

Pupil Testing

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the pilot nature of the proposed key state 3 testing; and whether he intends to publish the results of this pilot testing.

Mr. Eggar: A national pilot of mathematics and science examinations will be held in June 1992. I strongly encourage all schools to take part in this as the best possible preparation for the first compulsory examinations in 1993. I intend to publish national analyses of the results, and I expect schools to report the results of individual pupils to their parents.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he envisages any role for local education authorities in key stage 3 testing.

Mr. Eggar: LEAs have a general duty to secure the successful implementation of the national curriculum and its testing arrangements in the schools they maintain. In particular, the Government are supporting £45 million worth of LEA expenditure on national curriculum testing for 1992-93 through grants for education support and training. LEAs are specifically encouraged to direct some of that funding towards preparing teachers for testing 14-year-olds.

Technology Schools Initiative

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the money available for the recently announced technology schools initiative is new grant allocation or if it will be included in an authority's capital allocation as supplementary credit approval.

Mr. Eggar: The technology schools initiative is being funded from part of the new money made available for education capital spending for 1992-93. Projects in grant-maintained and voluntary-aided schools will be supported through grant payments; those in county and controlled schools through supplementary credit approvals to the LEAs concerned. The revenue consequences of supplementary credit approvals will be fully reflected in an authority's standard spending assessment in future years.

School Transport Statistics

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the actual amount spent by each education authority on school transport for 1989-90; and if he will give for each authority the percentage of pupils entitled to free school transport and the number of pupil miles provided.

Mr. Fallon: Education authorities' expenditure on home to school transport in 1989-90 is shown in the table. Information on the number of pupils entitled to free transport and on the number of pupil miles provided is not collected centrally.

2. The figures are derived from authorities' returns of their spending to the Department of the Environment. N/A indicates that a return was not received.

Derbyshire College of Higher Education

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the application for polytechnic status by Derbyshire college of higher education since 16 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: We have received a number of representations, including from the mayor of Derby, the chairman of the education committee of Derbyshire county council and a number of hon. Members. Officials of the Department met the director of the college, together with the directors of some other colleges on 9 January, to discuss questions about institutional titles. Although my right hon. and learned Friend's announcement on 16 December made it clear that he does not expect to approve further applications for polytechnic designation, the route to a university title is not closed for institutions which are not polytechnics. Following consultations with the representative bodies of higher education, my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 15 January 1992, Official Report, column 582, the criteria which must be met.

St. Faith's School, Winchester

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the status of St. Faith's school, Winchester, with regard to grant funding for expansion.

Mr. Fallon: I understand that the governors of St. Faith's currently plan to carry out improvements to the school in two phases, and that the costs are expected to be within the limit for minor works improvement projects at voluntary-aided and special agreement schools—£250,000. The Government have allocated £334,000 for such work in Hampshire in 1992-93. It is for Hampshire local education authority, in consultation with the governors and the diocesan authorities, to determine the allocation of these resources locally.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Procedure Committee Reports

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proposals, arising out of the outstanding reports and recommendations of the Procedure Committee, he intends to bring before the House.

Mr. MacGregor: The Select Committee on Sittings of the House will inevitably have implications for our procedures, including matters dealt with by the Procedure Committee such as length of speeches. Unless particular proposals for procedural change can be wholly divorced from the matters being considered by the Select Committee—and the recent review of the European Standing Committees which I am currently considering may come into this category—I do not think it would be sensible to deal with them in isolation, in advance of the Select Committee report, and I do not intend to do so.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Duchy Costs

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what costs to the Exchequer are involved in his duties, including transport; and in what circumstances a ministerial car is used by him.

Mr. Chris Patten: My office is expected to have costs of £89,862 in the current financial year. I use my ministerial car only when undertaking duties as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and in my capacity as a Government Minister.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Director of Public Prosecutions

28. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to review the role, position and powers of the Director of Public Prosecutions.

The Attorney-General: I do discuss with the Director of Public Prosecutions, as part of the annual planning cycle, his role—and that of the Crown Prosecution Service—in the criminal justice system. There are no plans to change his statutory position or powers.

CPS (Disclosure Guidelines)

29. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any plans to amend the guidelines issued in 1981 relating to disclosure by the Crown prosecution service; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No. The question of disclosure has ceased to be one of good practice—as under the guidelines issued by my predecessor in 1981—and is now a matter of rights and obligations. Further guidelines would not be a suitable means of effecting any modification deemed necessary.

Serious Fraud Office

31. Mr. Favell: To ask the Attorney-General how many overseas visits have been made by Serious Fraud Office staff since 5 December.

The Attorney-General: Five overseas visits have been made by Serious Fraud Office staff since 5 December 1991 in the course of current inquiries.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions of City institutions for fraud were brought by the Serious Fraud Office in 1991; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: In 1991 the Serious Fraud Office commenced prosecutions in 14 different cases against 45 individual defendants. Proceedings were concluded during 1991 in 25 cases and trials were commenced but not concluded in three others. In the same period 45 defendants were convicted of or pleaded guilty to one or more criminal offence and eight defendants were acquitted at court of trial. The conviction rate of 85 per cent. which indicates the effectiveness of the Serious Fraud Office in investigating and prosecuting serious or complex fraud. The figures are not susceptible to classification in the manner suggested by the hon. Member's questions.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Attorney-General if he will call for a report from the Director of the Serious Fraud Office on property stolen from the National Union of Mineworkers discovered in the course of the Serious Fraud Office investigation of Mirror Group Newspapers.

The Attorney-General: No. No allegations of this nature have been brought to the attention of the director of the Serious Fraud Office in the course of the investigations of Mirror Group Newspapers or at all.

Covenants

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Attorney-General what discussions he has had with the Law Reform Committee about the enforcement of covenants.

The Attorney-General: There have been no discussions with the Law Reform Committee about the enforcement of covenants. The Law Commission issued a report on "Transfer of Land: Obsolete Restrictive Covenants" (Law Com. No. 201, HC 546) in July 1991. The Lord Chancellor is considering the commission's recommendations.

Northern Ireland Court of Appeal

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases he referred to the Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland in 1991; and what were the grounds in each case.

The Attorney-General: In 1991 I referred two cases to the Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland. One case was referred under section 36 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 on the ground that the sentences were unduly lenient. The other case was referred under section 15 of the Criminal Appeal (Northern Ireland) Act 1980 on a point of law arising under section 18(1)(b) of the Prevention of Terrorism Act 1989.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Attorney-General how many court actions relating to mortgage repossessions there were in the Heywood and Middleton constituency since 1979.

The Attorney-General: The number of mortgage possession actions entered and orders made in the county courts of Bury and Oldham, which cover the Heywood and Middleton area respectively, is given below. This information is only available from 1987. Not all the orders made will have resulted in the issue and execution of warrants of possession.

Union Flag

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General why the Union flag was not flown on the flag poles at the courthouse in Armagh city on Christmas day 1991; what new arrangements will be made to fly the Union flag on appropriate dates at this location; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Union flag was not flown at the courthouse in Armagh city on Christmas day through oversight.

Cases (Government Representation)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General in how many cases Her Majesty's Government have been represented by (a) the Attorney-General and (b) other barristers in each year since 1979.

The Attorney-General: My predecessor represented the Government twice in 1979, and I represented the Government as Attorney-General twice in 1989. Those figures do not include cases in which I represented the Government as Solicitor-General or cases in which the Attorney-General does not represent the Government but acts for the crown as guardian of the public interest. The other information sought by the hon. Member could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Treaty of Rome

Mr. Alun Michael: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list all items of United Kingdom legislation which have been or are being subjected to legal challenge in the European Court (a) on the grounds of an alleged conflict with article 30 of the treaty of Rome, (b) on the grounds of an alleged conflict with another article of the treaty or (c) on some other grounds, together with the date on which each challenge was instituted and the date of the court decision.

The Attorney-General: The following cases in which items of United Kingdom legislation are in issue are currently before the European Court of Justice, having been referred pursuant to article 169, 178, 215 or 177 of the treaty:

Cases C279/89, C30/90 (Article 169).
Case C55/90 (Article 178 and 215).
Cases C169/91, C304/90, C191/90, C306/88, C232/88, C370/90, C251/90, C271/91, C64/91, C63/91, C9/91, C243/90.

Details of these cases are set out in the annex.

Summaries of cases concerning the United Kingdom in which the court has already delivered judgment are contained in the six monthly White Paper on Developments in the European Community, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Caribbean Basin

35. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom aid to the Caribbean basin.

Mrs. Chalker: I attach considerable importance to our aid programmes for the Commonwealth countries and the British dependent territories in the Caribbean. Expenditure is around £40 million a year.

Rain Forests

36. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent applications for development assistance are vetted beside the need to conserve untouched virgin tracts of rain forest jungle.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government's policy is to encourage sustainable management of all tropical forests. All ODA projects are vetted for their environmental and social impact. Where our assessment is that damage could result, we insist on designs being changed or the project not proceeding.

EC Overseas Development

37. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with Britain's EC partners on EC overseas development matters in the last month.

Mrs. Chalker: I last discussed development issues with my EC colleagues at the Development Council in Brussels on 28 November 1991. My officials are in frequent contact with their opposite numbers in the Commission and other member states.

Liberia

38. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what overseas aid is at present being given to Liberia; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: In the current financial year we expect to spend around £547,000 on humanitarian aid in response to the Liberian emergency, some £90,000 on the training of Liberians in the United Kingdom, £15,000 on other technical co-operation costs, and £159,000 to cover our share of guarantee payments due on Liberian loan defaults to the European investment bank.

World Population Conference

39. Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Minister for Overseas Development will address the British parliamentary group's population and development conference for European parliamentarians on the subject of the European agenda for action on world population; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I much regret that I will be unable to attend this conference, because of my forthcoming visit to southern Africa. My noble Friend the Earl of Caithness has agreed to attend in my place. My officials will play a major role in support to European Action on World Population. I look forward to the conclusions of the conference with considerable interest.

Eastern and Central Europe

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions the Minister for Overseas Development has had with her ministerial colleagues representing the other member states of the European Community on the question of aid to eastern and central European countries.

Mrs. Chalker: There have been frequent discussions with other EC members at both ministerial and official level on this subject.

Baltic States

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much overseas aid has been granted to date by the United Kingdom to each of the three Baltic states; and what are the estimated totals for the current year.

Mrs. Chalker: The know-how fund has committed £468,920 to date on technical assistance projects for Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. Many of the projects cover all three countries. A list is given in the table. A further £452,500 has been allocated to projects which are scheduled to begin before the end of the current financial year.

Debtor Countries

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries whose debts have been written off by Her Majesty's Government, and those countries whose debts have been reduced by two thirds, in the last six months.

Mrs. Chalker: Debt cancellation of up to two thirds is a feature of the proposals for enhanced debt relief made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in Trinidad in 1990. We are delighted that in mid-December, as a direct result of these proposals, the Paris Club began implementing enhanced debt relief on Trinidad terms. Nicaragua and Benin were the first countries to benefit and I hope, and expect, that they will shortly be followed by other poor and indebted countries which are undertaking economic reform. The United Kingdom will continue to push for improvements in the terms offered, along the lines of the Prime Minister's original Trinidad terms proposals.

Third World Debt

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action his Department is proposing over the cancellation of third world debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government believe that, for those poorest countries whose efforts to achieve economic growth have been hampered by the heaviest debt burdens, debt relief has an important role to play. We were delighted to achieve Paris Club consensus in mid-December, when government creditors began to implement enhanced debt relief on Trinidad terms for the first time. This advance was a direct result of the proposals made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, as Chancellor, in 1990. The United Kingdom will continue to push for full implementation, by all creditors, of the original Trinidad terms proposals which addressed the entire stock of a country's official debt and allowed for increased concessionality.

Southern Africa

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of aid in 1991 in southern Africa was for educational purposes.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1990 (the latest calendar year for which figures are available), British bilateral aid in total and for the education sector for the countries of southern Africa was as follows:

Recipient[1]	Aid[2] £ million	Education sector[3] £ million	Per cent
Angola	1·2	0·2	17·0
Botswana	6·6	1·7	26·0
Lesotho	5·8	0·9	15·0
Malawi	30·1	2·1	7·0
Mozambique	25·4	0·2	1·0
Namibia	1·5	0·4	28·0
South Africa	6·3	4·2	66·0
Swaziland	2·1	0·4	19·0
Tanzania	22·3	1·7	8·0
Zambia	24·0	3·0	12·0
Zimbabwe	14·6	1·3	9·0
SADCC	6·3	0·1	2·0
Total	146·2	16·2	11·0

[1] Member states of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference plus South Africa (programme of assistance for black South Africans).

[2] Gross bilateral aid, excluding investments by the Commonwealth Development Corporation and narcotics-related assistance funded by the Home Office and diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth office.

[3] Assistance provided mainly in the form of technical co-operation, including teacher and other related training, provision of experts and consultants, funding of volunteers and the supply of books and other materials. Figures exclude training in non-education-related subjects.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Dr. Malde Modwadia

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will pay compensation to Dr. Malde Modwadia of 245 Goodwood road, Leicester, following his acquittal at Northampton crown court on 8 January 1992.

Mr. John Patten: If Dr. Malde Modwadia applies to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary for compensation his application will be carefully considered in accordance with the current relevant arrangements for the payment of compensation.

Prisons

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by year on 1 December for the 10 years to 1991, and for each of Her Majesty's prison establishments in the United Kingdom, the number of prisoners held at each establishment, by category.

Mrs. Rumbold: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inmates have been displaced in the last two years as a result of the discovery of design faults in new prisons in England and Wales.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am sorry that the information requested is not available, but very few prisoners would have been transferred for these reasons.

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of rectifying each design fault which has been found since 1982, in new prisons in England and Wales; and if he will specify the prisons concerned.

Mrs. Rumbold: The available information on expenditure incurred in rectifying design faults found since 1982 in new prisons in England and Wales is as follows:

HM prison, Frankland (opened 1982)
Modification to workshops	300,000
Improvements to windows	180,000
Upgrading of utilities	133,000
Enhancement of fire precautions	114,000
	727,000
HM prison, Stocken (opened 1985)
Flooring	30,000
Repairs to heating system	235,000
Repairs to staff quarters	250,000
	515,000
HM young offenders institution, Thorn Cross (opened 1985)
Sports hall roof	100,000
Modifications to boiler house and heating system	181,000
	281,000
HM prison, Garth (opened 1988)
Modifications to kitchen	250,000
Other work	15,000
	265,000
HM young offenders institution, The Mount (opened 1988)
Improvements in security	280,000

Comparable figures are not readily available for other new establishments, where in a number of cases negotiations on liabilities for defects are in progress.

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison staff have been transferred on a temporary or permanent basis in the last two years as a result of additional prison building work necessitated by the discovery of design faults in prisons in England and Wales.

Mrs. Rumbold: No staff have been permanently or temporarily transferred from new prisons as a result of design faults in the last two years.

From time to time it may be necessary to transfer staff when refurbishment work is undertaken to bring older prisons up to modern standards, but no statistical information is recorded about the number of officers transferred for this purpose.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by year on 1 December for the 10 years to 1991, and for each of Her Majesty's prison establishments in the United Kingdom, the number of prison officers in post, and by sex.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Police Interrogation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he expects to install video recording equipment at all police stations to be used during the interrogation of suspects;

(2) if he will list the police stations that currently use video recordings of interrogation of suspects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no current plans to introduce video-recording of interviews of suspects in all police stations. Interviews with suspects are being video-recorded in stations in the forces of West Mercia and West Midlands, and at Edmonton station in the Metropolitan police. An independent evaluation will be completed in the spring of 1992. Further action will depend on consideration of this evaluation and will take into account the fact that this is an issue which falls within the terms of reference of the Royal Commission on criminal justice.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the revenue forgone by the provision of a concessionary television licence to people living in sheltered housing in certain circumstances.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is estimated that about £40 million per year is forgone as a result of the concessionary licence scheme.

South Yorkshire Police

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable on the locations in South Yorkshire, where potential high-risk crime victims have been issued with free mobile telephones by the South Yorkshire police force; and if he will show in his answer how many have been distributed per location.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This pioneering scheme, called Safelink, has been devised by the South Yorkshire police and is sponsored by Vodafone Ltd., which is providing 16 portable pre-programmed mobile telephones free of charge on a one-year trial basis. Fifteen of the telephones are currently issued to high-risk victims of crime so that they can contact the police quickly if they feel threatened; seven are located in Sheffield, three in Doncaster, two in Barnsley and one each in Bolton-on-Dearne, Rotherham and Stocksbridge.

Muslim Parliament

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had from the Muslim Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have received no direct representations from the self-styled Muslim Parliament.

As the reaction of many other Muslims has shown, this body is not representative of Muslims generally in this country. We will continue to maintain close contacts with other Muslim bodies which make representations to us against the background of respect for the rule of law. Britain is a diverse and tolerant society, but we cannot accept any form of separatism nor any attempts to incite the community to civil disobedience.

Extradition

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests for extradition of citizens of countries with which the United Kingdom has no reciprocal extradition treaty arrangements have been made by the British Government in each of the past 10 years; how many have been successful; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The United Kingdom has made two extradition requests in the past 10 years to countries with which no formal extradition arrangements have been concluded, in 1987 and 1989. One person returned voluntarily before the request could be considered; the other could not be found.

Royal Commission on Criminal Justice

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the Royal Commission on criminal justice to report.

Mr. John Patten: When it was established in March 1991, the Royal Commission on criminal justice was asked to make every effort to complete its work within two years. It held its first meeting in June 1991 and we understand that it is seeking to adhere to the two-year timetable.

Criminal Records

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the crimes for which records are kept indefinitely by police; and if he will indicate the kinds of data held in such records.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Crime information collected by police forces, and the length of time it is kept, are matters for chief officers to determine. The Association of Chief Police Officers has published a code of practice for police computer systems which provides guidelines for the review and removal of data. A copy of the code is in the Library.

The code recommends that detected crime reports should normally be kept for no longer than six years, except where legal proceedings, appeals or reviews are still pending at the end of that period. Reports of undetected crime should normally be kept for no longer than 10 years, unless relating to serious crime such as homicide, assaults causing serious injury, rape, buggery, kidnapping; serious cases of arson, robbery and burglary; and criminal use of firearms and explosives. These reports should be reviewed every five years thereafter.

Mrs. Ahmed Yusuf Mako

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reach a decision on the application for refugee status made in October 1989 by Mrs. Ahmed Yusuf Mako, reference A450605.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Mrs. Mako's application is now under consideration, and we expect to reach a decision shortly.

Category A Prisoners

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many high-risk category A prisoners there were in prisons in England and Wales on 31 December 1991; of what offences these people had been convicted; and how long each of these prisoners had spent, up to 31 December 1991, as high-risk category A prisoners.

Mrs. Rumbold: On 31 December 1991 there were 106 high-risk category A prisoners in custody in England and Wales. This figure includes convicted and sentenced prisoners, unconvicted (remand) prisoners, and convicted prisoners awaiting sentence. A range of offences is involved including murder, robbery and offences associated with terrorism. Information on time spent as high risk category A prisoners is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long high-risk category A has been in operation as a category in prisons in England and Wales; and how many prisoners in total have been placed in this category since it came into being.

Mrs. Rumbold: The classification of prisoners as high-risk category A was introduced in its present form in 1988. Other information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time that prisoners remain as high-risk category A prisoner.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information in the form requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what difference in treatment results as a consequence of prisoners being categorised as high-risk category A.

Mrs. Rumbold: In maximum security (dispersal) prisons, the difference in treatment between category A high-risk prisoners and those at standard risk is apparant only in the supervision arrangements for receiving visitors. Visits involving high-risk inmates are more closely supervised. Where high-risk prisoners are held in local prisons, additional security measures may be applied according to local circumstances. When a high-risk category A prisoner is taken outside an establishment, additional escort measures may be applied according to circumstances at the time.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the amount spent on advertising the rights of overseas voters under the Representation of the People Act 1989 for each financial year at current prices, plus the amount projected for expenditure in the current year.

Mrs. Rumbold: Spending on advertising the rights of overseas voters under the Representation of the People Act 1989 occurred only in the financial year 1990-91. The sum involved was £705,000 (£691,000[1] at current prices). No advertising expenditure is planned in the current financial year.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve levels of electoral registration prior to the 1992 general election; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have already undertaken a number of steps to support electoral registration officers in their task of compiling an accurate register for 1992, as in previous years. We conducted a nation-wide advertising campaign designed to encourage people to register, and produced publicity material aimed at encouraging young people to register. Research continued into the working methods of electoral registration officers, and the results were used to inform guidance and advice to registration officers.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the amounts spent on advertising for electoral registration for each financial year from 1979 at current prices, plus the amount projected for expenditure in the current year.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is given in the table:

1980-81	nil	n/a
1981-82	80,000	151,000

n/a—not applicable.

Note: All figures are rounded to nearest £1,000.

The electoral registration budget for the financial year 1992-93 is £642,000.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the amount spent on electoral registration (a) by his Department and (b) by local authorities in the years (i) 1988-89, (ii) 1989-90 (iii) 1990-91 and (iv) 1991-92, respectively, showing also the figures at 1988-89 prices.

Mrs. Rumbold: Details of local authority spending on electoral registration are not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

1988-89	472,000	472,000
1989-90	481,000	456,000
1990-91	1,070,000	998,000

[1] Source of Media Inflation Index: Advertising Association Press/TV and DMB & B estimate.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what expenditure has been incurred by his Department on the electoral registration of expatriate voters; and what are the numbers who have registered to vote in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Rumbold: Advertising campaigns to inform British citizens living abroad of their voting rights were undertaken in 1986, when the overseas franchise was introduced by the Representation of the People Act 1985; and in 1990, upon the extension of the qualifying period from five to 20 years, under the Representation of the People Act 1989. The total costs were £279,000 and £705,000 respectively.

There are 34,454 overseas electors on the 1991-92 electoral register.

Motorists (Assault Charges)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest available annual figure of motorists who have been (a) charged with and (b) convicted of, assault against (i) pedestrians, (ii) cyclists and (iii) other motorists (1) in the Metropolitan police area of London and (2) for England and Wales; and if he will also give these figures for the preceding nine years.

Mr. John Patten: Information held centrally does not distinguish motorists from others charged or convicted of assaults.

Police Traffic Departments

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest available annual figure of civilian staff working in police traffic departments (a) in the Metropolitan police area of London and (b) for England and Wales; and if he will give the figures for the preceding nine years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table gives numbers of traffic wardens for the years 1982 to 1990. Other civilian support staff assigned by the Metropolitan police to its traffic division are also shown, from the earliest available year. Information on civilian staff in traffic divisions, other than traffic wardens, for provincial forces is not available centrally.

Motorists (Criminal Charges)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest available annual figures of motorists who have been (a) charged with and (b) convicted of (i) failure to accord precedence at zebra and pedestrian crossings, (ii) failure to stop at a red or amber traffic light, (iii) speeding, (iv) drunken driving, (v) illegal use of bus lanes and (vi) reckless driving respectively, (1) in the Metropolitan police area of London and (2) for England and Wales; and if he will also give these figures for the preceding nine years.

Mr. John Patten: Information held centrally does not distinguish offences of illegal use of bus lanes from other offences of neglect of traffic directions.

Complete information on the other offences is readily available only for 1987 to 1989 and is as follows:

Number of proceedings and findings of guilt for certain motoring offences in England and Wales and the Metropolitan Police District 1987-1989

[1] Includes also offences of neglect of pedestrian rights in controlled areas, on pelican crossings, in playstreets etc in addition to zebra and pedestrian crossings.
[2] Includes also offences of failing to comply with traffic signs, stop signs and double white lines etc in addition to traffic lights.

The information for 1990 and 1991 is not yet available. Information on findings of guilt only for the last three offence categories shown in the above table for the years 1980 to 1986 may be found in "Offences relating to motor vehicles, England and Wales", supplementary tables. Copies of each year's volumes are in the Library.

Prison Dog Service

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for the restructuring of the prison dog service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: An internal review of the organisation of the prison dog service was commissioned during 1991 from the prison department management services group. It has recently submitted a draft of its final report and this is currently being considered within the prison service headquarters.

Wolds Prison

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what mechanisms exist permitting Group 4 to vary the contract price in respect of the Wolds prison should the inmate population exceed its normal level for a sustained period of time.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government's contract with Group 4 Remand Services Ltd. for the management of Wolds remand prison provides for variations to be made to the services required of Group 4, and for such fair and reasonable adjustments to be made to the payment under the contract as may be attributable to the variations made. Such variations could include changes to the level of occupancy.

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps Group 4 is required to take to ensure that the levels of (a) medical care, (b) diet and (c) education standards in the Wolds prison are sufficient to meet the needs of the prisoners.

Mrs. Rumbold: The requirements placed on Group 4 Remand Services Ltd. as to the level of medical care, diet and education which it is to provide at Wolds remand prison are set out in the specification for the operation of the prison, a copy of which was placed in the Library on 2 May 1991.

Naturalisation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current backlog of applications for naturalisation under section 6 of the British Nationality Act 1981.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As at 16 January 1992, the number of applications for naturalisation awaiting determination was 41,194, of which 3,431 were complete but for the applicants swearing at oath or making an affirmation of allegiance or were waiting for the issue of a certificate.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applicants for naturalisation are awaiting interview by the Metropolitan police; and what is the date of the earliest applicant.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As at 16 January 1992, there were 734 applications for naturalisation referred to the Metropolitan police for interview which were awaiting return to the Home Office. Of these, the earliest date of application is 18 August 1986.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Insolvency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list by year, for the last 10 years, the number of companies his Department has referred to the High Court to be wound up due to trading while insolvent.

Mr. Redwood: The Secretary of State has generally no power to present a winding up petition solely on the basis of insolvent trading. However, following inquiries under the Companies Acts 1985 and 1989, the Insurance Company Act 1982, the Financial Services Act 1986 or the Criminal Justice Act 1987 if it appears that it is expedient in the public interest to do so, he may presen. a petition for a company to be wound up. The table lists the number of winding-up orders made on petitions presented by the Secretary of State for each of the last 10 years.

Number of companies wound up on the petition of the Secretary of State

	Number
1981	16
1982	2

Postal Services

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is the status of the Green Paper on the development of the single market for postal services;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the Green Paper on the development of the single market for postal services.

Mr. Leigh: I understand that the EC Commission currently expects to publish its Green Paper on European postal services within the next few weeks. As soon as copies are available, I shall place one in the Library.

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his policy with regard to the continuation of a door-to-door postal service throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Leigh: As the citizens charter White Paper made clear, the Government are fully committed to the continued provision of letter services which serve all the United Kingdom's 24 million addresses.

Mint and Boxed

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Queen's award for export achievement was given to the company Mint and Boxed; and what was the value of that award to the company.

Mr. Redwood: The Queen's award was granted to the company on 21 April 1991. The award does not involve any monetary prize.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he became aware of possible financial irregularities at the company Mint and Boxed; whether he has been asked to use his powers under the Companies Act 1985 to investigate that company; and whether any investigation is under way.

Mr Redwood: The possible financial irregularities were brought to the attention of my Department in July 1991. This matter is currently being investigated by the police and it would not be appropriate for me to comment further.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many staff were employed in the Insolvency Service in the years 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Redwood: The number of staff in post in the Insolvency Service at 31 December in the years 1989, 1990 and 1991 was as follows:

	1989	1990	1991
Permanent	1,372·5	1,441·5	1,511·5
Casual	14·0	30·5	111·0
Total	1,386·5	1,472·0	1,622·5

Liechtenstein (Companies)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the amounts recovered in each of the past four years by (a) the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation, (b) provisional liquidators, (c) administrators and (d) receivers appointed in connection with private companies from companies based in Liechtenstein.

Mr. Redwood: I have no such information.

Liquidators

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what review and assessment he has undertaken of the adequacy of the supervision and control of the level of fees charged by liquidators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Prior to 1986 there were complaints from creditors that there was inadequate knowledge of the basis on which liquidators' fees were calculated and that it was therefore difficult to challenge the amount of them. The Insolvency Act sets out how remuneration should be calculated and makes provision for the supervision and control of that remuneration by creditors, either through a liquidation committee or in general meeting. I am anxious that creditors take steps to exercise that control which includes the power to make application to the court for an order to reduce remuneration which they consider excessive. Where creditors do not resolve on the matter, remuneration may be taken equivalent only to that payable where an official receiver acts as liquidator.

TRANSPORT

Car Safety

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide information on current car rear seat belt wearing levels for adults and children separately and for all rear seat occupants for (a) all cars and (b) cars manufactured after October 1987.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows:

Rear seat passengers:
Percentage wearing seat belts—October 1991 survey

	All cars	Post-1987 cars (Registration E prefix and later)
Adults	41	58
Children under 14 years of age	79	88
All	63	76

London Underground (Safety)

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report by the Health and Safety Executive on London Underground Ltd.'s quantified risk assessment methodology.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that the Health and Safety Executive is currently in possession of the latest updated risk assessment work from London Underground Ltd.. The HSE is awaiting LUL's supporting executive summary which will be available by 24 January and on receipt of this, it will then provide a report as soon as possible.

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many London Underground fires have been reported to the London fire brigade in each of the quarters since 1 April 1990, distinguishing between incidents dealt with by the fire brigade, incidents dealt with by London Underground's own staff before the fire brigade arrived, and cases where no cause or source of fire was found by either London Underground staff or the fire brigade.

Mr. Freeman: I understand from London Underground that the information is as follows:

Incidents	Dealt with by London Fire Brigade		Dealt with by London Underground Ltd.		No cause or source found
	1990-91	1991-92	1990-91	1991-92	1990-91	1991-92
First quarter	134	88	721	265	1,237	860
Second quarter	103	88	187	281	1,411	768
Third quarter	66	39	124	155	1,194	652
Fourth quarter	88	—	167	—	1,100	—
TOTAL	391	215	1,199	701	4,942	2,280

These figures show that the general trend in the number of incidents is decreasing.

Tyre Laws

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to extend the new tyre laws and the MOT test to cover spare tyres and to make it mandatory for all vehicles to carry a spare wheel.

Mr. Chope: There is no legal requirement for a car to carry a spare wheel, although manufacturers supply them in almost all cases. If used on the vehicle, they must comply with the Construction and Use Regulations (SI 1986 No. 1078 (as amended)), which include the new tread depth requirements. Bearing in mind that supply is practically standard on new cars, and that punctures are now relatively rare, I have no plans to make carrying a spare wheel compulsory.

The MOT test does not apply to matters not subject to the Construction and Use Regulations, and consequently does not apply to the carrying of spare wheels. I have no plans to alter this arrangement.

British Rail (Performance Standards)

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hampshire, North-West of 19 December, Official Report column 239, if he will make a statement setting out the performance standard for British Rail on its services from Grateley, Andover, Whitchurch, Overton and Basingstoke which, if not achieved, will trigger compensation payments by British Rail to season ticket holders.

Mr. Freeman: The individual performance targets for each of the fifteen route groups of Network SouthEast and the related compensation arrangements will be set out in the BR passengers charter shortly. Monitoring of performance already occurs and the targets will apply from January 1992.

Bus Lanes

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he holds for England and Wales on restrictions placed on privately hired buses and coaches making use of designated bus lanes and traffic light filters for buses.

Mr. Freeman: Traffic orders governing the use of bus lanes and signals on local roads are the responsibility of local highway authorities. At present the measures would normally not include coaches or private hire vehicles unless specifically signed. No central records of such local regulations are kept.

Pedestrian Crossings

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last discussed with the police and traffic authorities the need to take measures to enforce motorists' respect for pedestrian rights at zebra and pelican crossings.

Mr. Chope: The Department meets regularly with the police and highway authorities to consider traffic and pedestrian issues. Pedestrian crossing facilities are being reviewed.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give annual figures for road deaths for the last 10 years for which figures are available including the number of (a) children and (b) adults who have been hit by cars on or near pedestrian crossings in (i) the Metropolitan police area of London and (ii) England and Wales.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is given in the table:

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek to amend the law to increase the distance at which motorists are required to stop at zebra crossings.

Mr. Chope: This distance is given in regulation 5 (schedule 3) of the "Zebra" Pedestrian Crossing Regulations 1971 and has proved to be satisfactory in practice. I have no proposals to amend these regulations.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he holds for England and Wales on (a) the numbers of outstanding applications for pelican or zebra crossings and (b) the time taken for applications to be processed.

Mr. Chope: The installation of zebra and pelican crossings is a matter for the local highway authority. Most crossings are on local authority roads. Application to the Secretary of State is not necessary and central records are not held.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will update departmental standard TD 4/79 "Pelican Crossings: Pelican Crossing Operation" to increase the amount of time for pedestrians to cross the road.

Mr. Chope: Departmental standard TD 4/79 was amended by departmental standard TD 28/87 and a copy is in the Library. The time for pedestrians to cross the road was increased then.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received the report from the Transport and Road Research Laboratory on new techniques to identify sites for pelican crossings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: TRRL has recently published two reports: on delays to pedestrians while waiting to cross the road, and on accidents to pedestrians at or near zebra and pelican crossings. These are being used to formulate policy for crossings including the identification of suitable sites for pelican crossings.

Cyclists (Accidents)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest available annual reported figure of cyclists who have been (a) injured and (b) killed in road traffic accidents in (i) the Metropolitan police area of London and (ii) for England and Wales; and if he will also give these figures for the preceding nine years.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is given in the table.

Pedal cyclist casualties in the Metropolitan police area of London, and England and Wales: 1981-1990

Plutonium (Transport)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details about the last consignment of plutonium that was flown from a United Kingdom airport to (a) another airport in the United Kingdom and (b) an airport abroad, including (i) dates of transit, (ii) quantities and (iii) destinations; and what is his policy in respect of allowing future such consignments to be transported by air.

Mr. McLoughlin: The policy is that all transport of radioactive materials to and from the United Kingdom shall comply with the International Atomic Energy Agency regulations.

Only in certain cases do movements of radioactive material have to be notified to my Department.

Traffic Lights

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department's trials into new pedestrian facilities at traffic-signalled junctions including the use of infra-red devices to detect the presence and movement of pedestrians.

Mr. Chope: I hope to do so shortly.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress on the siting of video cameras at traffic lights.

Mr. Chope: Automatic cameras have been installed at a number of traffic light controlled junctions in various parts of the country and more are being installed.

Thameslink

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock), of 6 December, Official Report, column 234, if he will set out the reasons for which the Government concluded that British Rail's proposed private Bill on Thameslink was premature.

Mr. Freeman: The Thameslink 2000 scheme has a substantial funding requirement and there are many other investment projects which will be competing for British Rail's resources over the next few years. It is not clear that this scheme should take priority. In the light of this, my right hon. and learned Friend considered that it would be premature to seek powers to take forward the project before proper consideration had been given to all the competing claims for the available resources in the context of British Rail's corporate plan.

Pavements

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department is taking to monitor the provisions of the Road Traffic Act 1990 with respect to the condition of pavements.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his answer, 17 January 1992, Official Report, col. 657]: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to the street works provisions of the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991. These provide, in sections 71 and 139, for reinstatements of the street (including pavements) following street works to comply with prescribed specifications of materials and standards of workmanship. The Government have commissioned consultants to advise on appropriate arrangments for monitoring the effects of the Act.

Utilities' Street Works

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what consultations he has had with representatives of local authorities concerning procedures for carrying out the inspection of utilities streetworks.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his answer, 17 January 1992, Official Report, col. 657]: On 31 December 1991 my Department wrote to local authority associations and other interested organisations to consult them about draft regulations and a draft non-statutory code of practice on various aspects of the arrangements for inspection of undertakers' street works. The draft code of practice was prepared by a joint committee of local authorities' and undertakers' representatives.

Cliff Rescues

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give figures showing the number and location per sector of incidents relating to the use of cliff rescue equipment by Her Majesty's coastguard service between Montrose and Easthaven.

Mr. McLoughlin: The figures for 1989, 1990 and 1991 are as follows:

1989—Three incidents recorded:

Person with suspected broken leg recovered by Arbroath RNLI inshore lifeboat. Cliff team in attendance.

Girl with suspected broken ankle recovered by cliff team from top of cliffs at Carlen Heugh Bay.

Helicopter lifted boy with head injuries from cliffs at Auchmithie. Cliff team in attendance.

1990—Two incidents recorded:

Search for missing person along cliffs north of Arbroath. Nothing found.

Sector officer investigated sighting of a motor bike at the foot of cliffs at Auchmithie. False alarm.

1991—One incident recorded:
Person down cliff 3 miles NE of Arbroath. Both Arbroath and Montrose cliff teams assisted in the person's recovery by helicopter.

Trust Ports

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what directions he has given regarding the disclosure of information relating to bids for trust ports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend has made no such formal directions. However, officials of the Department wrote recently to the chairmen of those trust ports currently seeking privatisation asking them to delay making any public announcement of their board's recommendation as to the successful bidder for the port until my right hon. and learned Friend had had an opportunity of considering the recommendation and of deciding whether to give his consent. This was because my right hon. and learned Friend might not give his consent to a recommendation; and, if he did not, it would be misleading and unhelpful to the bidders for the board to have announced its recommendation publicly. The Department has not attempted to prevent bidders from making public information about their own bids.

ENVIRONMENT

Community Charge

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the amount raised by community charge equalisation—the amount raised through the community charge for giving to the less well-off local authorities; and whether there are any arrears with any local authority failing to provide the money so raised.

Mr. Key: There are no provisions requiring any amounts collected by way of community charge in one area to be transferred to less well-off authorities in other areas.

Housing Grants

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the level of grant under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 is expected to be for the current year.

Mr. Yeo: The Department of the Environment is providing £4·5 million in section 73 grants to voluntary organisations throughout England in 1991-92. This will rise to £6·1 million in 1992-93—an increase of around 30 per cent. in real terms. Local authorities also have powers to give grants under section 73, but they are not required to report on these to the Department.

Town and Parish Councils

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of town and parish councils following his consultations on unitary authorities.

Mr. Key: We believe that parish and town councils merit further consideration, particularly in the light of the many suggestions for their role in a world of unitary authorities.

We have received the results of a survey by Aston university of the existing role of parish and town councils and will publish its final report shortly. We are commissioning further work which will provide a detailed picture of the organisation, management and resources of selected parish and town councils.

This research will feed into our deliberations on the future role of local councils, and we shall consider whether to produce a further consultation paper about it.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the work and powers of parish and town councils for consideration in his consultation on unitary authorities.

Mr. Key: In response to our consultation paper "The Structure of Local Government in England" we received 1,106 representations mentioning the role and functions of parish and town councils. Copies of the responses have been placed in the House Library.

Tyre Recycling Plant, Wolverhampton

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now approve a city grant for the Elm Energy and Recycling (UK) Ltd. proposed site for a tyre recycling plant in Wolverhampton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Department are currently appraising an application for city grant to develop a tyre recycling plant and a decision on the proposal will be made as soon as possible.

Green Alliance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West, Official Report, 12 December, columns 494-5, if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting with the Green Alliance by officials of his Department and others on 13 December, to which he makes a reference.

Mr. Baldry: Officials representing 11 Departments met the author of the Green Alliance report "Greening Government" on 13 December to discuss ways of improving environmental coverage in the 1992 departmental reports. It was a very fruitful meeting and the recommendations from it have been passed to those Departments who were unable to attend. We intend such interdepartmental meetings of the "green guardians" in Departments to be a regular feature of the Government's implementation of its environmental strategy as set out in the White Paper "This Common Inheritance".

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his final report on the local authority financial settlement for 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend expects to publish the reports on the local government financial settlement shortly.

Departmental Permanent Secretary

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he is making with the appointment of a new Permanent Secretary at his Department.

Mr. Heseltine: An appointment will be made in due course.

Departmental Debts

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards prompt payment of departmental debts to small firms.

Mr. Heseltine: It is the policy of my Department to ensure that payments, including those to small firms, are made promptly within the period stipulated in the appropriate contract or within 30 days of receipt of a valid invoice.

My Department is conscious of the cash flow problems that small firms may encounter if the payment of valid invoices is not made promptly and my officials monitor payment performance and make regular returns to the Department of Employment which intend to publish them in due course.

Self-build Projects

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what initiatives his Department has undertaken to encourage self-build projects.

Mr. Yeo: The Housing Association has a statutory responsibility to promote and assist self-build societies. It provides general advice on how to set up a group and on the use of consultants. The Housing Corporation has recently introduced a pilot programme of grants to enable self-build groups to buy their homes on shared ownership terms. Subject to the consent of the Secretary of State, local

Urban Regeneration

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a breakdown of the Government's urban regeneration expenditure by category of expenditure for each year since 1980 in constant prices.

Mr. Key [holding answer 16 January 1992]: Under the Action for Cities initiative several Government Departments are making a substantial contribution to urban regeneration, through a wide range of programmes. Since 1980, my own Department's urban group of programmes has spent as follows:

	Outturn prices (£ million)	At 1991-92 constant prices
1981-82	162	290
1982-83	283	473
1983-84	325	520
1984-85	[1]450	685
1985-86	436	629
1986-87	429	599
1987-88	483	640
1988-89	555	683
1989-90	[2]756	878
1990-91	895	958
[3]1991-92	604	884

[1] Includes for 1984-85 onwards other Government Departments' contributions to the Urban Programme.
[2] Includes City Action Teams from 1989-90 onwards.
[3] (estimated).

Individual programme expenditure for 1991-92 is as follows:

	£ million estimated outturn
Urban Programme	242·4
City Grant[1]	55·5
Derelict Land Grant	75·6
Urban Development Corporations	501·5
City Action Teams	8·1
Total	884

[1] Includes Urban Development Grant.

Programme information for previous years is available in relevant public expenditure White Papers and Departments' 1991 annual reports.

Urban Funding

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of urban funding, in money terms and percentage terms, went to each standard region in 1990-91.

Mr. Key [holding answer 16 January 1992]: In 1990-91, my Department provided specific resources under its urban group of programmes to each region as follows:

	1990-91
Northern	136·8	14·90
North West[1]	99·5	10·90
Merseyside	67·0	7·30
West Midlands	99·4	10·80
East Midlands	28·7	3·10
Yorkshire and Humberside	80·6	8·80
London	385·8	42·10
South West	17·6	1·90
South East[2]	0·2	0·02
Eastern[2]	0·5	0·05

[1] DoE Region excludes Merseyside.
[2] Derelict Land Grant only.

Royal Parks

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of companies short listed for the maintenance contract for each of the royal parks.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 16 January 1992]: We will be publishing the names of the successful contractors for the royal parks garden and landscape maintenance contracts shortly. However, the names on the select tender list are commercial in confidence and will not therefore be published.

Right to Buy

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to propose amendments to housing law such that all local authority tenants entitled to the right-to-buy, who are offered transfers to an assured tenancy with a housing association, must be informed of their loss of entitlement to the right-to-buy on acceptance of such a transfer, and must be financially compensated if information on the loss of right-to-buy entitlement is not provided by the housing association prior to the signing of their transfer acceptance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 17 January 1992]: No. Local authority tenants whose homes are transferred to a housing association have their right to buy preserved. A local authority tenant who moves to a different property owned by a housing association will be offered an assured tenancy which does not carry the right to buy, but the tenants guarantee issued by the Housing Corporation under section 36A of the Housing Associations Act 1985 calls on the association to explain this.

Advertising Expenditure

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for the financial years (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91, (c) 1991-92, (d) 1992-93, and (e) 1993-94 actual or projected expenditure on (i) print and (ii) audio visual media advertising by UK Nirex Ltd.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply. This is a management matter for the company.

SCOTLAND

Emissions

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish information on the (a) gross and (b) per capita emissions in Scotland of (i) agricultural CH_4, (ii) non-agricultural CH_4, (iii) CO_2 from land use change and (iv) CO_2 from industrial usage.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 20 December 1991.

Ewes

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether enzootic abortion in ewes is a notifiable disease; what criteria is applied to the notification of diseases tested by the Veterinary Investigation Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Enzootic abortion in ewes is not a notifiable disease either in the United Kingdom or the European Community. The main criteria applied to the categorisation of a disease as notifiable are that national action is needed to control or eradicate it and that its uncontrolled spread among farm animals could be severely detrimental in economic, trade or public health terms.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the confirmed cases of BSE in Scotland (a) in 1991 and (b) before 1991 on a regional basis.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information for Scotland is set out in the table.

Region	Cases confirmed before 1991	Cases confirmed during 1991 (provisional)
Borders	35	50
Central	24	19
Dumfries	164	183
Fife	53	29
Grampian	158	109
Highland	48	30
Lothian	20	11
Orkney	10	3
Shetland	3	—
Strathclyde	231	155
Western Isles	1	—

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the location, including the region, of the incinerators which dispose of BSE-infected cattle that are currently operating in Scotland and in each case give the potential capacity and actual capacity for through put each week of infected cattle; whether he has plans to introduce new incinerators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are eight incinerators which dispose of BSE-infected cattle currently in Scotland. They are located at Aberdeen (Grampian), Ayr, (Strathclyde), Edinburgh (Lothian), Inverness (Highland), Kirkwall (Orkney), Lerwick (Shetland), Perth (Tayside) and St Boswells (Borders).

My right hon. Friend is satisfied that these provide enough capacity to incinerate all suspect BSE carcases, and has no plans to introduce new incinerators.

Sheep HLCA

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will add a 50p premium to the sheep hill livestock compensatory allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We will announce the rates for the 1992 HLCA scheme as soon as possible.

Foresterhill Hospital

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the costs incurred by Grampian health board as a result of the application by management at Foresterhill hospital unit for trust status; and if he will provide a breakdown of the costs by each identifiable category.

Mr. Lang: I refer to the replies given to the hon. Member for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Hughes) at col. 339.

WALES

Swansea Council (Expenditure)

13. Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the leaders of Swansea city council to discuss council spending.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Council spending is discussed at the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance, a meeting of which my right hon. Friend chaired on 13 January.

Labour Statistics

14. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the level of unemployment in Wales in (a) November/December 1981, (b) November/December 1986 and (c) currently.

Mr. David Hunt: In December 1981, 1986 and 1991, the levels of seasonally adjusted unemployment in Wales were 136,000, 162,000 and 121,600 respectively.

Maastricht Agreements

15. Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will next meet European Commissioner Millan to discuss the effect on the economy of Wales of the agreements reached at Maastricht.

Mr. David Hunt: I was due to meet Commissioner Millan this morning but due to illness he has unfortunately had to cancel his visit to Wales.

Inward Investment

16. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the value of inward investment in Wales since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: Based on information provided by companies at the time of their decision to invest, 575 overseas investment projects have been recorded since 1979 promising over 71,000 new and safeguarded jobs and capital investment in excess of £3 billion. These excellent figures do not include investment from elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

Economic Prospects

17. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for the Welsh economy during 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: The essential ingredients for recovery are in place—we have low inflation rates, lower interest rates and rising real incomes. I am confident that the diversified nature of the Welsh economy, together with our success in attracting investment from both home and abroad, will ensure that Wales will emerge from the recession in a strong position.

Homelessness

18. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest number of homeless persons in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The number of people within households accepted as homeless by housing authorities in Wales under the Housing Act 1985 in the third quarter of 1991 was 6,156.

Housing Opportunities

19. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about new housing opportunities for the people of Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The agenda for Action for Housing in Wales, published last November, sets firm objectives and clear targets for encouraging home ownership, creating greater diversity of choice and supply in the rented sector and for improving the quality of both the housing stock and the levels of occupants.

General Practitioners (Targets)

20. Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of general practitioners in Wales are meeting the (a) higher and (b) lower targets for children's immunisation, pre-school boosters and for cervical cytology tests.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The latest date for which figures are available reflect payments made to general practitioners on 1 April 1991.

	Higher target payment per cent.	Lower target payment per cent.
Children's immunisation	41	36
Pre-school boosters	30	33
Cervical cytology tests	42	49

Rural Rental Housing

21. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many houses to rent he expects to be built as part of his rural initiative; and how many he expects to be built for purchase.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I expect the investment we propose to make in rural housing in 1992-93 to lead to at least 1,225 new units. It is for local authorities in consultation with Housing for Wales and other partners, to determine the mix between homes for rent and homes for purchase.

Cataract Operations

22. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the contractual number of cataract operations funded by his Department at the treatment centre in Bridgend for the current financial year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: For the available period in 1991-92 the Department's contract with the ophthalmic treatment centre at Bridgend general hospital is for a minimum of 275 cataract and 25 other ophthalmic operations.

Cardiac Services

23. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of cardiac services in south-west Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer to the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 13 January.

Rechem International

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what dates in the last 10 years Rechem International exceeded its consent discharge limit for polychlorinated biphenyls into the public sewer; and if he will specify what the excess levels were in each instance.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Traffic Speed Limits

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress there has been with the use of 20 mph speed limits on Welsh residential roads; what review he has made of the procedures involved; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A circular was issued in April 1991, to all local highway authorities in Wales, giving guidance on the use of 20 mph speed limit zones and a number are considering suitable areas. Before making the necessary orders they are required to obtain the Secretary of State's consent. I am not aware of any problems with the procedures and await the first application.

Trawsfynydd Lake (Radiation)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the results of the MAFF fisheries inspectorate monitoring with respect to the annual external and internal organ lifetime permitted internal radiation doses received by anglers who use and live near Trawsfynydd lake.

Mr. David Hunt: The current annual dose limit to members of the public recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) is 1 millisievert (mSv) per year. No distinction is made between external and internal sources, both components being included if relevant. When setting the limts for doses, ICRP recognises that radionuclides taken into the body may remain there for different periods.

For 1990, the fisheries radiological inspectorate of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has calculated the following estimated dose rates for the most highly exposed group of local anglers at Trawsfynydd; 0·07 mSV from the consumption of fish caught in the lake (internal); 0·01 mSv from the inhalation of airborne sediment (internal); and 0·02 mSv from occupancy of the lakeside (external) making a total of 0·10 mSv to members of this group in 1990. This total is well within the internationally recommended safety limit of 1 mSv per year referred to in my reply of 18 December at columns 357-38.

Health Service Expenditure

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) on 3 December 1991, Official Report, columns 99-100, if he will publish figures for NHS expenditure for Wales after adjustments for NHS pay and prices have been taken into consideration.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 17 December at columns 137-38.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of those currently unemployed in Wales are under 25 years of age; what was the corresponding figure for 1971 and 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: In October 1991 32·3 per cent. of all unemployment claimants in Wales were under 25 years of age. The earliest comparable month for which data are available is October 1983, when the corresponding figure was 42·8 per cent.

GPs (Night Calls)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what proposals he has put (a) to general practitioners in Wales and (b) to family health services authorities in Wales to help reduce the problem of night-time calls;

(2) what steps he intends to take to ensure that any measures aimed at curbing the increase in night-time calls to general practitioners in Wales do not discourage those who are in genuine need of advice or help.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: One of the basic aims of the new contract for GPs is to make it more responsive to patient needs and demands. Requests for night visits reflect patient demand and the Government will not do anything that might prejudice the proper provision of general medical services in cases of genuine need. The decision as to whether a night visit should be made in any particular case is and must be governed by a GP's clinical judgment.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to exclude charges from any steps aimed at reducing night-time calls on general practitioners in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: There are no proposals and never have been to charge patients for night-time calls. The article which appeared in the Wales on Sunday newspaper was based on a misunderstanding. The £45 referred to in the article is the fee paid by the FHSA to the GP for visiting a patient on his list. The hon. Gentleman's comments in the report alleging that it was part of a government plan to privatise the NHS are revealed for the nonsense they are. I advise the hon. Gentleman to check his facts before making baseless statements which could mislead and cause needless worry.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the location, including the county, of the incinerators which dispose of BSE-infected cattle that are currently operating in Wales and in each case give the potential capacity and actual capacity for throughput each week of infected cattle; whether he has plans to introduce new incinerators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: At present there are two incinerators in Wales used for this purpose, located in Dyfed and Clwyd. These together with incinerators located in England currently provide enough capacity to incinerate all suspect BSE carcases. I expect that these facilities will continue to prove sufficient to incinerate all such carcases from Wales.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the confirmed cases of BSE in Wales (a) in 1991 and (b) before 1991 on a county basis.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of cases of confirmed BSE in Wales on a county basis (a) in 1991 (b) before 1991 is as follows:

County	1991	Before 1991
Clwyd	288	287
Dyfed	1,019	1,015
Gwent	123	186
Gwynedd	63	73
Mid Glamorgan	35	60
Powys	191	232
South Glamorgan	44	66
West Glamorgan	6	13

Redundancies

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce specific measures to alleviate the effects of redundancy upon the workers recently declared redundant by Denis Ferranti Meters at its factory in Gwynedd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: In July of last year we announced a substantial package of measures to help unemployed people back into work. This includes expert advice, help in looking for a job, extra training and a new work experience programme through employment action. This new package, together with other measures already in place, amounts to the most comprehensive set of programmes we have ever had to alleviate unemployment and help those who have lost their jobs.

In addition my Department, the Welsh Development Agency and other Government agencies also operate a wide range of other measures aimed at combating unemployment. The Welsh Office and all the other bodies will continue to look for, and respond swiftly to, development opportunities that arise which have the potential to reduce unemployment.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the figures for male unemployment in Newport, Gwent and Wales at the latest available date.

Mr. David Hunt: In December 1991, there were 5,466, 15,155 and 97,065 unemployed male claimants in the Newport district, Gwent and Wales respectively.

Neighbourhood Hospital, South Glamorgan

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 509, what additional information his Department sought from the South Glamorgan health authority on 23 December regarding its application for approval in principle for the construction of the new neighbourhood hospital on the site of the former St. David's hospital; when the original application for approval was made; and how many other requests his Department has made before 23 December for additional information.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 16 January 1992. Our Department required South Glamorgan health authority to comply with the mandatory Capricode health building procedures following earlier guidance given to the authority in July 1991.

Quangos

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new quangos he plans to establish during 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1992 my present plans include the establishment of the Wales Youth Agency and, subject to the Further and Higher Education Bill receiving Royal Assent, the Further and higher education funding councils for Wales.

Heart Operations

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) of 13 January, Official Report, column 507, what other initiatives have been undertaken since the target for heart operations per annum was set; and in what ways the option appraisal on how to make good the balance of the target will differ from the other initiatives.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: In addition to the developments outlined in my answer to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 13 January 1992, we have already invested in excess of £7 million capital and over £5 million revenue to improve cardiac facilities, including vital support services, at the University Hospital of Wales (UHW) in order to increase capacity to 600 adults and 100 paediatric open heart operations per annum, with cardiology at an appropriate level.

Since 1989-90, a further £1·1 million has been made available to South Glamorgan health authority to contract, on behalf of all south Wales DHAs, for additional adult cardiac surgery at other specialist centres following assessment of patients at UHW. An additional £0·5 million has enabled UHW to undertake an increased number of angioplasty and valvuloplasty procedures on Welsh patients.

Clwyd health authority, which secures its cardiac services from specialist centres in England, has also received additional central funding, on a recurrent basis to increase provision for its patients.

Pending the establishment of the paediatric cardiac unit at UHW, as an interim measure, services have been procured from the specialist children's hospital in Bristol for which nearly £400,000 additional funding has been provided.

The option appraisal will establish the alternatives available for meeting the balance of 400 adult operations in the light of the latest estimate of need, capacity created by the development programme already announced, medical and technological advance and the opportunities available.

I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for giving me the opportunity to set out the progress being made in the Welsh NHS in this speciality.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 508, whether the attempt to recover the improperly paid sum to the past chief executive of the Development Board for Rural Wales, was directed at (a) Dr. Skewis alone, (b) the chairman of the board alone or (c) both, indicating in which order.

Mr. David Hunt: I understand that recovery has been sought from Dr. Skewis, who has declined a request from the Development Board for Rural Wales for re-payment of the sum paid in respect of untaken leave.

Hospital Provision

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 510, what involvement the NHS directorate in Wales had in the decision to set up the review of hospital provision in South and Mid Glamorgan.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Directorate officials discussed the proposal with those concerned, but the decision to proceed and on what basis was made by the health authorities and the College of Medicine alone.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress he has made in fulfilling the undertaking in respect of the possible effects of groundwater given in 1990 to the House of Commons Select Committee which examined the Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill.

Mr. David Hunt: The Select Committee which considered the private Bill requested in May 1990 that a further year's work on groundwater modelling be undertaken by Hydrotechnica. It required a three-month consultation exercise to be carried out, following which I would make my decision. The Committee specified that I should allow public funds to be put towards the construction of the barrage only if I was satisfied that all the relevant economic, technical and safety criteria could be met. When the private Bill fell in April 1991, I announced that I would none the less continue to honour the commitment to that Committee.

The further year's work ended in August 1991, and the consultation period began on 25 September that year. Copies of the report, together with the response of Cardiff Bay development corporation, were laid before the House. The start of consultation was announced by means of a public notice in the press and received widespread media coverage. People and organisations who had taken a particular interest in the subject were also notified individually. The consultation period ended on 31 December, but I have also taken account of the few representations which came in after this date.

In view of the complexities of the issues concerned, I commissioned Mr. Roy Stoner, director of the Institute of Irrigation Studies at the university of Southampton, to act as my independent expert adviser. A copy of his advice is attached to this letter. Mr. Stoner has read the Hydrotechnica report, the development corporations's response and all of the submissions received as part of the consultation exercise.

I received some 140 responses to the consultation exercise, of which 89 were "pro-forma" letters expressing general concerns about groundwater, with particular reference to the writers' houses. A large number of the other representations also expressed fairly general concerns about groundwater and the protected property line. A small number of submissions discussed the issues in depth, and these were analysed individually in Mr. Stoner's report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. I have considered most carefully all the evidence in the report from Hydrotechnica, the development corporation's response and representations during the three-month consultation period.

Taking each of the criteria set by the Select Committee in turn, I shall deal first with safety. Having considered all of the evidence, I have no reason to think that the predicted groundwater levels, even in what Hydrotechnica predict to be the "extreme case", will present any risk to safety when considered together with the proposed remedial measures.

Some respondents referred to the separate issue of river flooding in their submissions. I note in this context that the National Rivers Authority, the body with statutory responsibility, has commented:

"during events equivalent to design events for the flood defences, the barrage will not reduce the levels of protection provided and may create a worthwhile improvement".

On the technical criterion, I am satisfied that the remedial measures for buildings envisaged by the development corporation, together with the additional drainage recommended for certain sensitive areas, are technically feasible. However, I noted with interest the suggestion by Mr. Stoner that the possibility of de-watering wells should be investigated. In view of the prospect of reducing the disruption to householders, I have asked the corporation to commission a study of this proposal. I am also grateful to Mr. Stoner for his suggestion that the protected property line should be extended in two areas. I am disposed to accept his recommendation.

Finally, on the economic criterion, I note that the costs of remedial works should the "extreme case" materialise would be some £9 million greater than the costs for the "most likely" case included in the financial memorandum. I have therefore re-considered the economic appraisal on the basis of the "extreme case" figures. The result shows only a marginal reduction of the return on the barrage. I also note that de-watering wells, if practicable, could considerably reduce costs, but I have not relied on this in making my decision.

I am therefore satisfied that all of the criteria relating to groundwater—safety, technical and economic—can be met. Subject, therefore, to parliamentary approval for the Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill, I propose to make public funding available for the construction of the barrage.

Local Authorities (Capital Spending)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are local authority capital expenditure allocations for 1991-92 and for 1992-93 for each local authority in Wales; and what is the percentage increase (i) in cash terms and (ii) in real terms.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding reply 17 January]: Local authorities no longer receive capital allocations. Since 1990-91 these have been replaced by credit approvals. Basic credit approvals for 1991-92 and 1992-93 for individual authorities are shown in the following table. These are unhypothecated to individual services. In addition, local authorities also receive direct capital grant and supplementary credit approvals for specific schemes/services such as projects of national importance, road schemes, urban programme and housing grants. In total for Wales these are £262 million for 1991-92 and £320 million for 1992-93.

Plant Breeding Station

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied with the experimental work carried out at the Welsh plant breeding station at Gogerddan, Cardiganshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have been asked to reply.

The Welsh plant breeding station (WPBS) at Gogerddan is a constituent part of the AFRC Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research (IGER) which has other sites at Hurley in Berkshire (due for closure in 1992) and at North Wyke in Devon. The AFRC is an independent body and is responsible for approving programmes of work carried out at its institutes.

I understand that AFRC is just completing a major £5·75 million redevelopment of the Gogerddan site to improve research facilities and house staff relocated from Hurley, and is taking over the Trawsgoed experimental husbandry farm from MAFF as a research farm. This will enable the institute to pursue a basic and strategic research programme approved by AFRC aimed at developing environmentally sensitive grassland-based animal agriculture.

HEALTH

Clinical Trials

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to require ethics committees to maintain long-term storage of the records of people involved in scientific clinical trials to enable long-term follow up to be carried out if it later emerges that this should be done to check for an unexpected long-term, or slow to develop, after-effect.

Mr. Dorrell: Research ethics committees have no powers to gain access to or require the long-term storage of the records of people involved in scientific clinical trials. Hospitals are currently required to keep the medical records of all patients, including those involved in trials, for a minimum of eight years after the end of treatment. In addition, a recent EC directive (91/507/EC, adopted on 19 July 1991 and shortly to be implemented in the UK) requires the person responsible for marketing a medicinal product to keep codes, identifying patients involved in the trial, for a minimum of 15 years. This additional requirement should further facilitate the identification of clinical trial subjects.

Causes of Death

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing the causes of death of men aged over 65 years and women over 60 years in each month from January 1988 to the latest convenient date, identifying separately the numbers who died from hypothermia.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is not readily available in the form requested. Annual figures showing deaths by cause are published in "Mortality Statistics: Cause", Series DH2, copies of which are available in the Library.

The table shows deaths registered in each month from January 1988 to September 1991, for men aged 65 and over, and women aged 60 and over. It includes deaths from all causes and from hypothermia. It also shows deaths where hypothermia was mentioned on the death certificate.

NHS (Awards)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what grounds he introduced an age limit on the payment of distinction and meritorious service awards to doctors and dentists within the national health service; and if he will now reconsider his decision.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Awards made close to retirement age are not in the best interests of the service.

Trust Funds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether health authorities, health trust executives and non-executive directors are required to comply with the Charities Acts and the Trustees Investment Acts when dealing with matters involving the authorities' charitable trust funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: When undertaking their duties in respect of charitable trust funds held by the NHS, health service trustees need to comply with all appropriate legislation, including the Acts mentioned.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the increase in expenditure on computer hardware and software, management salaries and other costs in respect of each first wave trust hospital and its respective hospital authority in the year before trust status and the projected increase in these costs in the first year of operation of the hospital trust, showing the information by regional and district health authority and trust hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for (a) the Bradford hospitals NHS trust and (b) the Doncaster royal infirmary and Montagu NHS trust (i) the number of business plans published and (ii) to whom they were distributed and circulated.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has not published any trust business plans for 1991-92. Trusts are free to decide for themselves whether to publish their plans. No central record is kept of whether they do. The Government have made it clear that trust business plans for 1992-93 and subsequent years will be published. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. R. Walker the chairman of the Bradford hospital NHS trust and Mr. C. Bryant the chairman of the Doncaster royal Infirmary and Montagu NHS trust, for details.

Care Homes, Manchester

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of private care or nursing homes in the Greater Manchester area who have had their registration cancelled under the Registered Homes Act 1984 during 1990 and 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have been notified of one cancellation of registration for a residential care home.

Mortality Statistics, Manchester

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the rates of perinatal mortality and infant mortality in the area health authorities in the Greater Manchester area in 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is shown in the table. The perinatal and infant mortality rate for 1991 is not yet available.

Disabled People (Footwear)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to revise MHM50 dealing with footwear for disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The revision of the MHM50 booklet is in the work programme for 1992.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of electors in the 1992 provisional electoral register for each district and parliamentary constituency in England and Wales and the equivalent numbers on the 1991 register.

Mr. Dorrell: Numbers of people on draft electoral registers in England and Wales are not available centrally. The Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys sent out RPF29 inquiry forms asking local electoral registration officers (EROs) for information about the new 1992 registers on 16 January. EROs have been asked to make returns by 16 February—the date on which these registers come into use.

In Vitro Fertilisation

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement concerning the level of charges for licences to practice to be levied by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority on small clinics which currently offer in vitro fertilisation to couples; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 17 July 1991 at column 194.

The fee structure is designed so that fees are based on the amount of treatment activity at a treatment centre. Smaller centres pay less than larger ones.

South Derbyshire

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those capital schemes in southern Derbyshire district which have involved sums of over £1 million since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is as follows:

Scheme	Completion date	Cost £ million[1]
Derby city hospital phase 1	20 December 1985	3·6
Derby royal infirmary phase 2	2 October 1985	3·7
Derby royal infirmary (kitchen and dining)	29 June 1987	3·34
Ilkeston community hospital	16 April 1987	3·8

[1] Capital works only; approved tender sum plus direct contracts (fees and equipment not included).

Radiation

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many claims against Exeter health authority relating to excessive doses of radiation have been made; how many have been settled; how many are outstanding; when he expects these to be settled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: A total of 106 claims have been made to date. Of these 79 have been settled, a further six are under negotiation and 21 remain outstanding. The 21 outstanding represent claims which have been notified but where medical evidence indicates there may be no basis for any payment or where the claim is not currently being pursued. The health authority sends regular quarterly reports to all local hon. Members on this matter. The most recent report was issued on 16 January.

Electors

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the total number of electors registered in each parliamentary constituency in England for 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991 showing an aggregate for the country for each of those years; and if he will list the percentage changes that have taken place in each case compared with the previous year's figures.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Asthmatics

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding free prescriptions for asthmatics.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: During the last 12 months, 36 letters from hon. Members and 15 letters from members of the public have been received.

Child Health

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about progress towards implementing the proposals of the committee on child health services in 1976 (Cmnd. 6684).

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We continue to subscribe to the general principles of the Court report, particularly the emphasis it gave to the integration of child health services. This was a central theme of our guide on the welfare of children and young people in hospital, which will be developed further in the complementary guidance that we plan to issue on community child health services.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the effect of the internal market on cross-boundary flows for paediatric cases.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Contractual arrangements introduced by health authorities for children's services provide for the great majority of referrals. There have been few difficulties in arranging extra-contractual referrals.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consider making immunisation against certain diseases a precondition of children attending school.

Mr. Dorrell: No. We recommend that all children should be immunised against diphtheria, tetanus, polio and whooping cough by three doses of vaccine at age two, three and four months, and against measles, mumps and rubella by one dose at age 12 to 15 months. It is essential that these immunisations are completed at an early age to achieve the most effective levels of protection for the community. Under the present system that objective is being achieved. The latest estimates available show the following rates of immunisation nationally:

Diphtheria, tetanus, polio—92 per cent. by 12 months of age
Whooping cough—88 per cent by 12 months of age
Measles, mumps, rubella—90 per cent. by 24 months of age

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) for each district health authority, how many extra-contractual referrals for paediatric cases have been (a) made, (b) funded and (c) not been funded since the introduction of the internal market in April 1991;

(2) how many district health authorities have negotiated contracts for paediatric care outside their authority boundaries; and if he will list them.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instruct all district health authorities to report annually on arrangements for child health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We monitor the quality of child health services—in the same way as other health services—through a continuous review of NHS authority preformance. In addition, the patients charter introduces a new right to information which will ensure health authorities and hospitals make available much more information about local services and performance, including child health services.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the implementation of Government circular, "The welfare of children and young people in hospital" HSG(91)1.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The guide has been very well received both within the national health service and among voluntary organisations and special interest groups concerned with the welfare of children. Last autumn the Royal College of Nursing held four regional conferences on implementation of the guidance in which the Department participated. It is already in general use as a reference document in the negotiation and agreement of contracts for child health services.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that parents throughout the United Kingdom possess a standardised health record for each of their children; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have supported the introduction nationally of a model parent-held child health record produced by a working party led by the British Paediatric Association. The Department will shortly be writing to all health authorities, family health services authorities and NHS trusts in England, commending the use of these records. We shall also be issuing guidance on how copies of the record can be obtained, together with notes on implementation.

The introduction of parent-held records in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it his policy to introduce free prescriptions for asthmatics;

(2) if he will undertake to examine the feasibility of phasing out prescription charges on drugs used for potentially life-threatening complaints.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to extend the range of conditions which currently attract free prescriptions on medical grounds. There are already wide-ranging exemption arrangements, underpinned by the separate scheme for remission on the grounds of low income, which ensure that no one need be deterred from obtaining any necessary medication on financial grounds. Nearly 80 per cent. of NHS prescriptions items are currently dispensed free of charge.

Children's Needs

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities have set up liaison committees to consider the multiple needs of children across health, education and social services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Mental Illness

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of mental illness admissions in each half-yearly period from 1987 to the most recent both nationally and in each standard health region; and in each case what is the proportion of total admissions the figure represents.

Mr. Dorrell: Figures for admissions on a half yearly basis are not readily available. Final figures are not yet available but the table provides provisional estimates for admissions to NHS hospitals and hospital units in England for each financial year 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Meningitis

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list notified cases of meningitis in Derbyshire for each of the past 10 years for which figures are available, together with details of notified cases over recent months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is given in the table:

Year	Number of cases
	All meningitis	Meningococcal Meningitis
1981	11	4
1982	15	2
1983	34	22
1985	22	13
1986	42	22
1987	40	17
1988	35	11
1989	40	19
1990	41	23
1991	48	21

Project 2000

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the allocation of college places on Project 2000 courses to enrolled nurses.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The hon. Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien) referred to such a case in the House on 13 January at column 717, and I am inquiring into it. No other representations have been received. Project 2000 courses are designed for new entrants to nursing, not for people who already hold a nursing qualification.

Psychiatric Prisons

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has currently under consideration any plans to discharge any prisoner in a long-stay psychiatric prison into the care of the City of Newcastle upon Tyne social services department.

Mr. Dorrell: We are not aware of any such plans.

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled Employees (Dismissals)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many registered disabled people have complained of dismissal contrary to section 9(5) of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 since 1981; how many of these cases were referred to the committees for the employment of people with disabilities; how many of these cases were then referred by those committees to him with a recommendation for action; and of these referrals, in how many cases was action taken by him.

Mr. Jackson: The employment service's local disablement resettlement officers (DROs) receive a small number of complaints each year from registered disabled people who think that their dismissal may have been contrary to section 9(5) of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944. However, the precise number of complaints made since 1981 is not known. All complaints are investigated by my officials.

On three occasions since 1981 dismissals of registered disabled people, by employers not employing the 3 per cent. quota of registered disabled people, have been referred to the local committee for the employment of people with disabilities for a report.

The 1944 Act does not require the committees to make recommendations in their reports to Ministers. Their reports are made in confidence for the use by Ministers in coming to a decision on appropriate action in each case.

There have been no prosecutions of employers in this period.

Health and Safety Executive Offshore Division

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspector grade staff have transferred into the Health and Safety Executive offshore division since 1 April 1991 from (a) other parts of the Health and Safety Executive, (b) the Department of Energy and (c) the Department of Transport; and in each case, how many were initially engaged in (i) policy and (ii) operational work.

Mr. Forth: The number of inspector grade staff who have transferred into the offshore safety division of the Health and Safety Executive on or after 1 April 1991 is as follows:

Department	Number	Of whom policy	Of whom operational	Personnel and training
Department of Energy	[1]39	nil	38	1
Department of Transport	nil	nil	nil	nil
Other parts of Health and Safety Executive	25	3	21	1

[1] One inspector has since retired.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applicants for inspector grade posts in the Health and Safety Executive's offshore division have been offered employment since 1 April 1991; and how many of these (a) are now in post and (b) have refused employment.

Mr. Forth: Since 1 April 1991, 39 applicants have had formal offers of appointment and 19 of them are now in post. A further 16 applicants are either negotiating a suitable starting date or are to respond to offers of employment. Four applicants have refused offers of employment.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspector grade posts in the Health and Safety Executive's offshore division remain unfilled; and what is the planned time scale for these posts to be filled.

Mr. Forth: It is the intention of the Health and Safety Executive to increase the number of inspector grade posts to 122 by 1 April 1992. On 15 January 1992 there were 82 staff already in post, and 40 unfilled posts. There are, in addition, six successful candidates from the first two recruitment campaigns due to join in the next month or so and 37 who are still being processed. While they may not all be in post by 1 April 1992, the target should be achieved shortly afterwards.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspector grade posts are planned for the Health and Safety Executive's offshore division for the years ending 31 March 1992, 1993 and 1994; and how many were planned for the year ended 31 March 1991.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Executive's offshore safety division currently plans to have 122 inspector grade posts by 1 April 1992.

Further expansion by about 50 posts is currently being planned for 1 April 1993, details of which will be contained in the Health and Safety Commission's plan of work for 1992-93, due to be published in the spring. At present, the increase anticipated for 1 April 1994 will take the numbers to around 200 inspectors.

Planning for the year ending 31 March 1991 was the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy. There were, however, 39 inspector posts in the Department of Energy's petroleum engineering division when it was transferred to the Health and Safety Executive.

Training Credits

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out, by the relevant training and enterprise council, the overall number of training credits available, and the take-up at the latest available date.

Mr. Jackson: As at 8 December 1991, 31,506 training credits has been issued within the 11 pilot schemes; 15,672 of these have already been used by young people to obtain high quality training of their choice. This number continues to rise.

The table shows the figures set out by pilot areas:

Starts—at 8 December 1991

TEC/lec	Credits issued	Starts
Birmingham	3,387	2,565
Bradford	3,159	2,105
Devon and Cornwall	7,193	4,579
Grampian	5,168	[1]941
Hertfordshire	3,086	672
Kent	541	172
North East Wales	463	226
Northumberland	1,189	1,292
South and East Cheshire	4,134	981
SOLOTEC	795	650
Suffolk	2,391	1,489
Total	31,506	15,672

[1] These figures represent credits issued and starts at 30 November 1991. This is due to different accounting periods for Scottish Enterprise.

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether his Department has made any evaluation of the method of assessment used in the national vocational qualification system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Since 1986, the Employment Department has been continually developing and evaluating methods of assessment for NVQs. Key areas investigated have been performance in the work place, skills/proficiency testing, assessment of knowledge and understanding, and accreditation of prior learning.

Radiological Emergencies

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) 27 November 1991, Official Report, columns 557-58, he will set out the reasons why EC directive 89/618/EURATOM was not transposed into United Kingdom law by the required date of 28 November 1991.

Mr. Forth: The implementation period of two years is shorter than that for other Euratom directives. Implementation was not assisted by the publication of guidance for member states on implementing the principal articles of the directive only eight months before the implementation date.

I am advised from the European Commission that the UK are not alone in the late implementation of this directive. Nevertheless, progress on implementation continues. The Health and Safety Commission has published for consultation draft proposals to implement the directive. Regulations will be made as soon as comments have been considered and the proposals have been scrutinised by the European Commission. Article 30 of the Euratom treaty requires a three-month consultation period to allow the European Commission time to comment on the UK's finalised implementation proposals.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has for the implementation of European Council directive 89/618/EURATOM in relation to informing the general public about health protection measures to be applied, and safety steps to be taken, in the event of a radiological emergency.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answer given in reply to the hon. Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. O'Hara) on 13 January 1992, at column 457.

Wakefield TEC

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the current membership of the board of Wakefield training and enterprise council meets the criteria set out in the original TEC prospectus.

Mr. Jackson: Yes, Sir.

Jobcentres

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of jobcentres in England and Wales for each year since 1980.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Labour Statistics

Sir Peter Blaker: to ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimate of the number of people in work, whether employed or self-employed, in Blackpool in (a) November 1981 and (b) November 1991.

Mr. Forth: Information available for employees in employment is from the censuses of employment for September 1981 and September 1989. The estimated numbers of employees employed in the Blackpool travel-to-work area at the two census dates were 102,300 and 105,200, respectively.

The available estimates for the number of self-employed in local areas are from the census of population for April 1981 when there were 18,200 in Blackpool.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received supporting the introduction of cold weather credits.

Mr. Scott: We have received several representations from different sources concerning the introduction of cold weather credits, and I have written directly to the convener of the Campaign for Cold Weather Credits setting out the Government's position.

The Government has recently introduced substantial improvements to the cold weather payments scheme: from this winter, payments are being made automatically to those who are entitled; a forecast trigger has been introduced; and the capital limit has been abolished bringing a further 400,000 people into the scheme. We will continue to keep the scheme under review.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of making one week's cold weather payment, assuming 100 per cent. take-up on a nationwide temperature trigger.

Mr. Scott: The estimated cost would be £13·5 million.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total cost in each of the last five winters of making cold weather payments.

Mr. Scott: The total costs are set out in the table. The administrative costs are not available for winters before 1989-90.

Year	Payment costs £ million	Administrative costs £ million
1990-91	8·6	3·6
1989-90	0·4	0·1
1988-89	0·0025	Not available
1987-88	0·5	Not available
1986-87	10·2	Not available

From this winter payments are now made automatically by computer rather than clerically at correspondingly reduced costs.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make ex-gratia payments to those entitled to cold weather payments in Halifax who would have qualified had the readings been taken at Peckett Well instead of Bingley for the period 7 to 13 December;

(2) what are the figures for the period 7 to 13 December at the weather stations at Bingley and Peckett Well;

(3) why it was decided to take readings at the national weather stations at Bingley near Calderdale instead of from the one in Calderdale.

Mr. Scott: Ex-gratia payments are not appropriate in these circumstances because there have been no failures or delays by officials. The Meteorological Office uses the weather station at Wilsden to provide the Benefits Agency with the temperature information for the Halifax area that is used to trigger cold weather payments. It advises us that Wilsden is climatologically representative for the Halifax area, and we have no plans to change this weather station link. The Meteorological Office confirms that the weather stations used for the scheme must be equipped to provide the information in the form and speed needed; those at Bingley and Peckett Well are not so equipped.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants in Halifax would be entitled to the cold weather payment if it had been awarded for the recent seven-day period.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the dates of the periods during which the cold weather payments were triggered since the scheme began in his Department's cold weather scheme areas served by the metering stations at (a) Boulmer and (b) Eskdalemuir.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how many additional payments of cold weather payments would have been paid in the Borders region during the recent period earlier this winter when the scheme was triggered by temperatures at Eskdalemuir if the previous system of temperature monitoring had been retained.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hours of Work

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support claimants in 1988 received transitional protection as a result of the re-definition of full-time work in April 1988 from 30 hours to 24; and how many continued to receive this in subsequent years to 1991.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the table:

Date	Number receiving protection
April 1988	155
April 1989	51
April 1990	17
April 1991	3

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to disseminate information to the public about the amended definition of full-time work to 16 hours for income support, family credit and housing benefit, respectively.

Mr. Jack: We are evaluating a wide range of media advertising options to provide a good general coverage about the effects on individuals of the "hours change". In addition we plan to write to all people who are receiving income support and working between 16 and 24 hours a week to explain how the new rules will affect them. The leaflets and claim forms for income support, family credit and housing benefit will be amended to reflect the change.

Income Support and Family Credit

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state (a) the total number of recipients of income support and total expenditure and (b) the total number of recipients of family credit and total expenditure for 1989 and at the latest date for which figures are available segregating these figures to show the number of (i) lone parents and (ii) their dependants, included in the total figures in each case.

Mr. Jack: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. The available information is given in the table.

Income Support
Numbers—
total	4,155,000	4,165,000
lone parents	825,000	855,000
dependants of lone parents	1,419,000	1,496,000
	£ million	£ million
Expenditure—
total	7,675	8,545
lone parents (and their dependants)	2,028	2,279
Family Credit
Numbers—
total	305,000	315,000
lone parents	118,000	123,000
dependants of lone parents	185,000	197,000
	£ million	£ million
Expenditure—
total	425	484
lone parents (and their dependants)	176	188

Notes:

1. Numbers represent the estimated average numbers receiving benefits at any one time.
2. 1990-91 expenditure is estimated out-turn.
3. It is not possible to identify separately the expenditure attributable to dependants.

Concessionary Coal Payments

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of claimants in receipt of (a) income support, (b) housing benefit and (c) community charge benefit who are having reductions made to their benefits on account of receipt of moneys in lieu of concessionary coal paid by National Coal.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mortgage Interest

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the annual cost to the Exchequer of paying mortgage interest in full from the beginning of a claim for social security benefits.

Miss Widdecombe: Help with mortgage interest is given through income support. During the first 16 weeks of a claim from a person under age 60, half the eligible interest is included; the full interest may be included after this period, or from the outset where the claimant or his partner is aged 60 or over.

We estimate that the cost of paying mortgage interest in full from the beginning of the claim in all cases would be in the region of £75 million per year at 1991-92 prices.

Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1990 Annual Statistical Enquiry and the 1986/7/8 Family Expenditure Surveys.

Pension Age

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about his proposed consultation on equalisation of the state pension age.

Miss Widdecombe: On 18 December we published our discussion paper "Options for Equality in State Pension Age" (Cm 1723). The paper sets out relevant information to help inform public discussion on this important issue. Comments are welcome and should be received by the Department by 30 June 1992.

Pension Funds

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will institute an inquiry into the position of pensioners of the Floform pension fund arising from employment at Floform, Welshpool, in the light of the Maxwell affair; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce measures to ensure that pensioners receiving pensions arising from employment at Floform, Welshpool, are able to continue receiving their occupational pension entitlement during investigations into the whereabouts of pension moneys removed from the Maxwell pension funds; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for protecting the interests of members of occupational pension schemes rests with the trustees of the scheme concerned. Current legislation provides that if a scheme that is used for contracting out of the state earnings-related pension scheme has insufficient funds to pay the premiums necessary to buy the members back into SERPS those premiums may be treated as paid and the members position in SERPS restored.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any proposals for reform of the statutory provisions relating to the control of pension funds; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 20 December at columns 374-75.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will specify, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 512, which of the new backup offices for the Child Support Agency will deal with payments and disbursements and its administration in Wales.

Mr. Jack: From April 1993 the Child Support Agency will tailor methods of payment and disbursement to suit the needs of each individual. These transactions can be made directly between individuals or via financial institutions. The Dudley Child Support Agency centre will for those maintenance applications originating in Wales, determine the levels payable upon receipt of the appropriate form by post or personal contact at local offices. The centre will also be responsible for recording information and if required administer payments and disbursements. From September 1993, when the Birkenhead centre becomes operational, such child maintenance cases for Wales, will be divided between it and the Dudley centre.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list how many Benefits Agency area offices are, in the last and the current financial year, restricting community care grants and other social fund assistance to (a) high-priority cases, (b) both low and high-priority areas and (c) have money left over after meeting all legitimate applications for such assistance.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Income Support Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the numbers of claimants of income support in respect of mortgage interest both nationally and in each standard region, for 1989, 1990 and the most recent date in 1991 distinguishing between claimants who are (a) unemployed, (b) economically inactive, including pensioners or long-term sick and (c) claimants who are working less than 24 hours a week.

Miss Widdecombe: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as is available as soon as possible.

Council Tax

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the effect of his proposed steepening of the taper to 20p in the pound for the proposed council tax on (a) the costs of council tax benefit to the Government and (b) the combined tax and benefit withdrawal rate on an additional £1 of income on a low-paid earner paying tax and national insurance, and claiming family credit, housing benefit and council tax benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: The higher taper needs to be considered in the context of the introduction of 100 per cent. maximum rebates from April 1993, and the decision not to adjust income-related benefit levels on the introduction of the council tax, despite the fact that people will no longer be expected to meet a minimum contribution of 20 per cent. of their community charge. The total cost of the amounts included in income-related benefit levels to help towards the 20 per cent. contribution is estimated to be £580 million in the current year and around £680 million in the next financial year. Retaining the same taper as in community charge benefit, 15 per cent., would have entailed expenditure, in current terms, some £60 million higher than the 20 per cent. taper proposed. Overall, benefit entitlement under the new tax will extend to claimants with broadly the same levels of income as those helped by community charge benefit.

The marginal deduction rate of a low-paid earner paying tax and national insurance contributions who is also in receipt of family credit, housing benefit and council tax benefit will increase slightly from 96 per cent. to 97 per cent.

Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1987 and 1988 Family Expenditure Surveys at 1991-92 prices and estimated council tax levels.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide whatever information is available to him regarding the numbers of persons, and as a percentage of their populations, who have an income at or below (a) 60 per cent. and (b) 50 per cent. of average earnings in each EC country.

Mr. Jack: There are no comparable statistics available on average earnings in the member states of the European Community (EC). As a consequence, it is not possible to provide the information requested.

Tuesday 21 January 1992

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Criminal Legal Fees

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Attorney-General if the Lord Chancellor will raise the level at which criminal legal fees are referred to the central taxation units from £4,000 to £8,000 for a trial period.

The Attorney-General: No. The central taxing teams were established only 10 months ago for the purpose of determining claims over £4,000. They are still settling into their role and it would be premature to consider changing it.

When a number of claims for less than £4,000 are linked to claims for between £4,000 and £8,000, circuit taxing directors have authority to release these claims to the court for determination and this is done wherever possible. This enables the teams to concentrate on those cases which properly require their expertise. The Lord Chancellor keeps the progress of the teams under close review.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Alton: To ask the Attorney-General when he received an invitation from Hull city council for him to join them in an enforcement action against illegal Sunday trading; and what was his response.

The Attorney-General: The town clerk and chief executive of Hull city council wrote to me on 11 September 1991 and 29 November 1991 and invited me to co-operate with local authorities in enforcing the provisions of the Shops Act 1950. He was informed on both occasions that I did not consider that it was appropriate for me at present to intervene. I explained my views in the answer which I gave to the private notice question from my hon. Friend the Member for Orpington (Mr. Stanbrook) on 27 November 1991 at column 913.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Treaty of Rome

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements have been made to ensure that copies of the consolidated treaty of Rome, as amended at Maastricht, are available (a) to Members of Parliament and (b) to members of the general public; and when these arrangements will be put in place.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A total of 838 copies of the draft treaty on European union agreed at Maastricht were made available to Members of Parliament on 16 December 1991. The text is now being prepared for signature, provisionally scheduled for 7 February. The final text of the treaty will then be published as a Command Paper. Once this has been laid before the House, it will be available to the public through HMSO.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to Saudi Arabia about financing the military training of young muslims in Afghanistan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since the US/Soviet agreement of last September to halt arms supplies to both sides in Afghanistan we have urged the Saudis, both bilaterally and with our EC partners, to provide only humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan. The Saudi Government have told us that they fully support the efforts of the UN Secretary-General to find a political solution to the conflict.

Immigration

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the present number and current waiting time for interviews of (a) men and (b) women in (i) Bombay, (ii) New Delhi, (iii) Karachi and (iv) Islamabad, who are seeking entry visas to join either their wife or husband in the United Kingdom, as of 14 January.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As at 14 January, the numbers of husbands and wives waiting for a first interview for an entry clearance to join their spouses in the United Kingdom, together with the estimated waiting times in months, are:

	(a) Husbands	((b) Wives	Waiting time
(i) Bombay	73	238	3
(ii) New Delhi	80	158	3
(iii) Karachi	40	41	2
(iv) Islamabad	978	690	3

There is no difference in the waiting times for husbands and wives.

Libya

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the provisions of treaty and other international law underlying Her Majesty's Government's assessment that the Government of Libya is not a competent authority to investigate and try the two Libyan nationals named in the warrant issued by the Lord Advocate.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not international law which has led us to the conclusion that it would be wholly inappropriate for Libya to try the accused. The reasons for our conclusion are contained in the written reply I gave the hon. Gentleman on 17 January 1991, at column 713.

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will supply a copy of the prosecution evidence against the Libyan citizens alleged to be responsible for the murders at Lockerbie to the Libyan court inquiring into the case.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. As the Lord Advocate said in his statement on 14 November 1991, proceedings became active for the purpose of the Contempt of Court Act 1981 when the sheriff granted warrants for arrest and he could not therefore comment on the evidence on which the charges are based. The statement made by the Lord Advocate contains details of the allegations against the accused. Copies of the statement are available in the Library of the House.

British Visas (Teheran)

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to start issuing the full range of British visas in Teheran.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As I said to my hon. Friend on 17 January, at column 712, visas for some categories of visitors from Iran are already issued by our embassy in Tehran. We expect to expand the operation in stages as circumstances allow.

Iran

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for Ministers or officials of the Iranian Government to meet their British opposite numbers in London and Teheran.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are in regular contact with the Iranians through diplomatic channels in both London and Tehran. There have been occasional contacts at ministerial level.

Commonwealth of Independent States

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to reorganise his Department following the break-up of the former Soviet Union and establishment of the Commonwealth of Independent States.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Over the past five months the FCO department that deals with political questions in the former Soviet Union has been reorganised and reinforced to take account of the independence of former Soviet republics. Departments dealing with economic aspects, including the know-how fund, are devoting increased time and resources to the member states of the Commonwealth of Independent States; and the redeployment of further resources in the area is now being considered. Interdepartmental co-ordination has also been strengthened.

East Timor

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for his Departmental library a copy of the Yorkshire Television's "First Tuesday" programme broadcast on 7 January on the massacre of civilians at the Santa Cruz cemetery in East Timor in November last year; and what recent representations he has made to the Indonesian Government over these murders.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have a copy of the broadcast. The Indonesian authorities have been made fully aware of our views and those of the European Community on the incident.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the continuing occupation of East Timor by Indonesia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Indonesian authorities are well aware that we do not recognise their annexation of East Timor. We continue to support the efforts of the UN Secretary-General to bring about a solution.

North Korea

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about how North Korea was able to build a military grade plutonium production reactor outside international safeguards based on blueprints of the United Kingdom military magnox plants at Calder hall, Sellafield.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Technical information about the Magnox reactors at Calder hall, Sellafield has been in the public domain for over 25 years. We continue to urge the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to fulfil her obligations under the non-proliferation treaty and sign an agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency which would place all of her nuclear facilities under safeguards.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Kingdom as a depository state for the nuclear non-proliferation treaty was consulted by the respective Governments of North and South Korea during their recent successful negotiations to establish a full nuclear safeguards inspection regime at nuclear facilities in North Korea.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The recent joint declaration between the Republic of Korea and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea which provides, inter alia, for mutual inspection of each other's nuclear facilities is a wholly bilateral agreement which does not fall within the remit of the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons—NPT. While we naturally welcome the conclusion of the agreement, we still look to the DPRK to fulfil her obligations under the NPT and sign a fullscope safeguards agreement with the IAEA.

Soviet Troops

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Governments of the Baltic states on the continuing presence of Soviet troops in Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: President Landsbergis of Lithuania raised the matter of former Soviet troops in the Baltic states with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and me when he visited the United Kingdom in October 1991. The President asked Her Majesty's Government for their support in demanding the complete withdrawal of the former Soviet forces. We were happy to give our support.

Although we have not received any direct formal representations from the Baltic states on this matter since October, the Baltic states have raised it since at bilateral and multilateral meetings.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the relevant authorities on the continuing presence of Soviet troops in the Baltic states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: HM ambassador to Russia has raised our concerns over the presence of former Soviet troops in the Baltic states with the authorities of the Commonwealth of Independent States. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs also discussed this matter with the President of the Russian Federation on 20 January. We have expressed the hope that early agreement will be reached on a timetable for the withdrawal of these forces.

Southern Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will take steps to ensure that the continued conflict and instability in southern Somalia is on the agenda for the current month's New York summit on the role of the United Nations.

Mrs. Chalker: We do not expect the Heads of Government Security Council summit to address regional issues in detail.

Kenya

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Kenyan Government about the recent detention of Professor Wangari Maathai by the Kenyan authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Professor Wangari Maathai is one of a number of Kenyan citizens arrested for alleged participation in a press conference held on 10 January at which President Moi was accused of planning an imminent military coup.

Professor Maathai has been charged with publishing false rumours under section 66 of the Kenyan penal code and has been released on bail. Her case will be heard on 27 January. She has categorically denied that she was ill-treated while in police custody.

ENVIRONMENT

Rating Appeals (Bournemouth)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against the 1990 rating assessments in the Bournemouth area are outstanding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Appeals against 1990 rating assessments in the Bournemouth area are dealt with by the Dorset valuation and community charge tribunal. At the end of 1991 the tribunal had outstanding some 9,100 such appeals in respect of the whole of Dorset.

Valuation and community charge tribunals are independent bodies. The prioritisation and timing of cases is primarily a matter for them. However, the Department wrote to all English tribunals in June 1991 urging them to progress 1990 list appeals as quickly as possible.

Community Charge Register

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures exist to protect single women listed in the community charge register from being trageted by mail order firms, telephone canvassers and door-to-door salesmen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The extract of the community charges register which each charging authority must hold available for public inspection may show only property addresses and chargepayers' surnames and initial letters of any other names. It may not provide any indication of sex. Registration officers may not supply the extract to any other person except so far as it is necessary to permit inspection.

Boundary Commission

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the areas where the Boundary Commission is carrying out reviews in the county of Essex.

Mr. Key: The Local Government Boundary Commission is carrying out reviews on the Greater London-Essex boundary and also on the parish boundaries of Rochford district council.

Right to Buy, Northamptonshire

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many dwellings were owned by each district council in Northamptonshire at the time that the right to buy was introduced; how many are owned at the latest date; what percentage that is of the original figure; and how many uncompleted applications there are at the latest date.

Mr. Yeo: The information available from local authorities' annual housing investment programme returns is as follows.

Number of dwellings owned by the authority at 1 April

	1980 (1)	1991 (2)	(2) as percentage of (1)
Corby	13,628	8,143	60
Daventry	6,082	4,133	68
East Northamptonshire	6,047	4,849	80
Kettering	6,626	5,016	76
Northampton	12,925	16,350	126
South Northamptonshire	5,745	3,859	67
Wellingborough	7,750	6,009	78

Right to buy was introduced in October 1980. Changes in local authorities' dwellings stocks include other losses and gains apart from sales through the right to buy. In the case of Northampton district council, the 1991 stock reflects the acquisition of some 6,400 dwellings from the Commission for New Towns in April 1985.

Information on uncompleted applications to these authorities is not collected centrally.

Council Tax

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to relieve householders whose property has been repossessed from the liability to pay either the community charge or the council tax on more than one property.

Mr. Key: Since 1 April 1991 no standard community charge has been payable where the person subject to the charge is the mortgagor and the lender is in possession under the mortgage. We intend to continue this provision under the council tax.

Burley-on-the-Hill, Rutland

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is now in a position to announce his decision on the planning appeal regarding Burley-on-the-Hill, Rutland, a grade one listed building.

Mr. Yeo: The Secretary of State is in receipt of the inspector's report and will announce his decision soon.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the failures of security in the privatised Property Services Agency that permitted unauthorised individuals access to Government safes and cabinets.

Mr. Yeo: PSA Services has not yet been privatised and is still a Government Department. The accounting officer will be giving evidence to the Public Accounts Committee on 27 January on the report of the Comptroller and Auditor General which comments on the accounting problems relating to security furniture. The Government will, of course, consider any report the committee makes on this issue.

The computer recording the accounting material had no data on it which would facilitate access to Government safes and cabinets. Unauthorised access to it would not have created any threat to security.

Gipsies

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his decision on the application by Bassetlaw district council to build a permanent site for gipsy travellers at Fox Covert, Worksop, Nottinghamshire.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend expects to reach a decision shortly, and I will write to the hon. Member.

Local Authority Members

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to review the present system of payment of allowances to members serving on local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The new system took effect in April 1991. It will be reviewed after a year's operation, in consultation with the local authority associations.

Rents

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the extent to which private landlords reduce the rent charged to their tenants after a rent officer has assessed a market rent for housing benefit subsidy purposes which is substantially lower than the initial rent charged.

Mr. Yeo: We have no evidence as to whether the rents asked by private sector landlords reflect the assessments of market rents provided by rent officers to local authorities for housing benefit purposes. Rent officers interpret the rental market, which is influenced by many factors.

National Parks

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the Government's response to the Countryside Commission's review of national parks.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for Wales have today published the Government's response to the national parks review. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

The Government are grateful to the Countryside Commission for initiating a review of the policies and practices of the national parks in England and Wales. The review was undertaken by an independent panel under the chairmanship of Professor Ron Edwards. He and his team are to be congratulated on their work, which was wide ranging and thorough.

The Government reiterate in the strongest terms their commitment to the national parks. We have addressed those recommendations, drawn from the review, which were commended to us by the Countryside Commission and the Countryside Council for Wales. Our response is a positive one which reflects our concern to ensure the future of the parks into the next century and strikes a balance between the park purposes of conservation and public enjoyment on the one hand and the needs of those who live and work in them on the other. We are confident that our response is the firmest assurance to all those who cherish the parks that their future is secure and that the proper protection and management of Britain's finest landscapes is assured.

The response confirms our intention to create all national park authorities as independent bodies, as the Lake District and Peak District already are, though still within the local government framework. We propose further detailed consultation on the membership of national park authorities designed to secure, among other things, truly local representation and to explore the establishment of local consultative bodies for each park to ensure that the views of those who live and work in the parks are fully taken into account in the policies and practices of park authorities.

The Government intend to restate national park purposes to refer expressly to quiet enjoyment and understanding and to conservation of the wildlife and cultural heritage; to take steps to ensure that responsibility for detailed planning in their areas should rest with national park authorities; and to invite local highway authorities, where they have not already done so, to delegate rights of way responsibilities to national park authorities.

The Government's objective is that major development should not take place in the national parks save in exceptional circumstances, but, if it is, the work should be done to high environmental standards. Because of the serious impact that major developments may have on the natural beauty of the parks, applications for such development must be subject to the most rigorous examination. In our response, we have developed a single test against which all major proposals should be considered.

We also intend to consider further the countryside agencies' recommendations that there should be a statutory duty on Ministers and public agencies in the exercise of their responsibilities as they affect national parks. In considering the wording of such a duty, it will be necessary to recognise that it cannot simply override the purposes or objectives of individual Ministers or public bodies but should be designed to ensure that they take national parks' purposes into account in any situation where there is a potential conflict.

The Countryside Commission endorsed the review panel's conclusion that the New Forest should be formally recognised as a national park with a tailor-made constitution. The New Forest is a uniquely valuable area in landscape and nature conservation terms and it deserves the strongest protection in keeping with its national and international importance, while accepting the review panel's conclusion that it would not be appropriate to establish the New Forest as a national park under the 1949 legislation. We believe, however, that the recommendations put forward by the New Forest committee—on which the national and local government bodies with interests in the forest are represented—provide a sound basis for achieving improved protection. The Government therefore intend to take steps to designate the New Forest area as one of national significance within which the strongest protection of landscape and scenic beauty should apply. With this would be linked a mechanism for funding and statutory status for the committee to reflect its role in co-ordinating the management of the area. The position would be essentially analogous to that of the Broads which enjoys the same degree of protection as a national park but has its own institutional arrangements tailored to the local situation. Following local consultation legislation will be needed to implement these proposals.

The Government look to the Countryside Commission and the Countryside Council for Wales to work closely with the national park authorities in carrying forward those recommendations of the review panel which do not call for direct Government action.

Watch Tower House

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local residents and preservation societies at the prospect of substantial extensions to Watch Tower house in the site zoned as green belt on the Ridgeway at Mill Hill; and if he will give an assurance that he has no plans to alter Government policy in a way that would facilitate further developments on this site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 20 January 1992]: No representations have been received about proposed extensions to Watch Tower house on the Ridgeway at Mill Hill in the London borough of Barnet.

It is for the local planning authority to consider any applications for planning permission, having regard to their recently adopted unitary development plan and to determine applications in accordance with the plan unless material considerations indicate otherwise.

The Government's policy on green belts remains as set out in planning policy guidance note 2 and circular 12/91. There are no proposals to alter the policy that:

"Inside a Green Belt, approval should not be given, except in very special circumstances, for the construction of new buildings or for the change of use of existing buildings for purposes other than agriculture and forestry, outdoor sport, cemeteries, institutions standing in extensive grounds, or other uses appropriate to a rural area".

Renewable Energy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West, 13 December, Official Report, column 554, he will list the energy organisations to which he sent the policy planning guidance notes on renewable energy, to which he makes reference.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 20 January 1992]: The energy organisations to which the draft planning policy guidance notes were sent are as follows:

PRIME MINISTER

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister what steps Her Majesty's Government intend to take in the current year to achieve full compliance with United Kingdom obligations under article VI of the United Nations nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

The Prime Minister: The Government's policy continues to be to work for secure defence at the lowest possible level of armaments, both conventional and nuclear, building on the arms reductions announced by us and others in 1991. The immediate priority is to ensure full compliance in the Commonwealth of Independent States with the arms control undertakings of the former Soviet Union.

United Nations Security Council

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out the plans Her Majesty's Government have to promote the role of the United Nations in (a) disarmament and (b) environmental protection, during the United Kingdom presidency of the United Nations Security Council in 1992.

The Prime Minister: We hope that the high-level meeting of the United Nations Security Council which I shall be chairing on 31 January, will stress the importance the council attaches to arms control, to the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction, and to responsibility in the export of conventional arms. We are also playing a full part in the preparations for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in June.

EC (United Kingdom Contribution)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the size of the net contribution made by the United Kingdom to the EC; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so. The Fontainebleau mechanism negotiated in 1984 continues to provide a significant abatement to our contributions, with a cumulative benefit of some £12·5 billion by the end of 1992.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Indonesia

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Indonesian Government with regard to President Suharto's accelerated transmigration programme.

Mrs. Chalker: We have not had any recent discussions with the Indonesian Government on this subject.

Bulgaria

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to increase the amount of aid to Bulgaria; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The know-how fund was extended to Bulgaria in February 1991 to provide British advice, skills and training in assisting the transition to democracy and a market economy. In this first year an initial range of projects has been developed involving some £1·3 million of commitments mainly in the financial, management, employment and public administration sectors. I expect the programme to expand as more know-how fund projects are identified.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet his EC counterparts to increase the amount of food aid to Bulgaria; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The need for food aid for central and eastern European countries is kept under close review by the Council and Commission. Aid to these countries will be considered by the Council on 3 February. Neither Her Majesty's Government nor the Commission is aware of any Bulgarian requests for food aid this winter.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools (Performance Information)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will specify the information to be made available to parents and the general public concerning a school's performance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We issued on 10 January a consultation document covering our proposals for the publication of performance information in 1992. Copies of the document were placed in the Library.

We shall extend the content and coverage of our proposals from 1993 using the powers to be made available under the Education (Schools) Bill.

Special Education

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if Her Majesty's inspectorate will continue to employ inspectors with a specific responsibility for and experience in special educational provision; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what measures he proposes to ensure that the proposed local school inspection teams take account of provision of special education; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what plans he has to ensure that the Department continues to receive information and independent advice on special education from Her Majesty's inspectorate.

Mr. Eggar: Under the Education (Schools) Bill, Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools will be under a duty to keep the Secretary of State informed about the quality, standards and efficiency of education in schools, and to advise the Secretary of State on specific issues either on request or as the chief inspector sees fit. The provision of information and advice on special educational needs will therefore form part of the chief inspector's duties. The arrangements made to meet this responsibility will be a matter for the chief inspector.

The Bill will also place a general duty on registered inspectors to report on quality, standards and efficiency when carrying out inspections under the new arrangements. Provision made for pupils with special educational needs will fall to be considered under each of these headings. I am confident that the chief inspector's guidance to registered inspectors will deal with the need to cover this aspect in every school inspection.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money his Department has spent on producing its citizens charter proposals, arising from production, distribution and publicity costs.

Mr. Eggar: The citizens charter promised publication of a charter for parents and an updated Guide to the national curriculum. The total cost as at 31 December 1991 of producing, distributing and publicising the parents charter was £1·853 million. The estimated cost to date of producing and distributing the guide to the national curriculum is £0·423 million; no publicity costs have been incurred.

Seven-year-old Children (Testing)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science why it was decided to abandon the undertaking to local education authorities that the tests for seven-year-old children would not be published.

Mr. Eggar: Parents and others involved in education have every right to see the results nationally and at local level: the assurance given when collecting the results was that neither individual schools' nor individual pupils' results would be identified. This assurance has been honoured by my Department.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science why it was decided not to moderate the tests for seven-year-old school children undertaken in 1991 to ensure consistency of testing between local education authorities.

Mr. Eggar: Consistency of testing seven-year-olds was secured through the use by all schools of standard tests against the clear criteria of the national curriculum; the guidance to all schools provided by the School Examinations and Assessment Council—SEAC—and the duty on local education authorities, under the oversight of SEAC, to monitor and ensure the consistency of their schools' assessments in relation to national standards.

Examination Statistics

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many boys and girls passed one of more A-level subject for each year from 1985-86; and how many pupils gained one or more O-levels from 1985-86 both in absolute terms and as a percentage of the 17-year-old population for A-level subjects and as a percentage of all maintained school leavers for O-level subjects.

Mr. Eggar: For the academic years 1985-86 to 1989-90, the latest year for which information is available, the numbers and percentages of pupils gaining one or more A-level or O-level passes in maintained schools were as are shown in the following table.

School leavers with one or more A/AS passes
Maintained schools—England

	Number of leavers (thousands)			As a percentage of the 17-year-old population
	Boys	Girls	Total	Boys	Girls	Total

East Devon College of Further Education

Sir Robin Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science for each of the financial years 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94, whether it is Government policy that any surplus of revenue over expenditure should be at the disposal of the governors of East Devon college of further education at Tiverton or that it should be paid over to the local education authority.

Mr. Eggar: For 1991-92 the treatment of any surplus of revenue over expenditure is determined by the provisions of the scheme for local management of further education colleges in Devon.

The position in 1992-93 and thereafter will be subject to the passage of the Further and Higher Education Bill currently before Parliament. It is proposed that the balance of a college's income and expenditure in local authority accounts for 1992-93 will transfer to the new corporate body to be established under the legislation. Regulations will be drawn up under which such balances can be determined and attributed to colleges. Wherever possible, that will be by reference to the arrangements set out in the local management scheme for the local authority concerned.

Subject to the financial memoranda agreed between individual colleges and the Further Education Funding Council (England), which, from April 1993, will fund institutions, it is intended that any surplus of revenue over expenditure after that date will be at the disposal of the new corporate bodies.

Higher Education

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the number of students in advanced education now and in 1979.

Mr. Alan Howarth: There were 1,103,700 higher education students in Great Britain institutions in the academic year 1990-91 compared with 777,800 in 1979-80.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the number of students attending polytechnics this year; and what was the corresponding figure for 1987.

Mr. Alan Howarth: There were 317,500 students attending polytechnics in England in the academic year 1990-91, compared with 242,200 in 1987.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the number of students currently in higher and university education; and what were the numbers in 1979, 1983 and 1987.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The numbers of students in higher education in Great Britain universities, polytechnics and colleges, including the Open university and the centrally funded colleges in Scotland in the years 1979, 1983 and 1987 were 777,800, 871,300 and 1,066,700 respectively. Numbers of students in academic year 1990-91, the latest for which information is available, were 1,103,700.

Universities

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessments his Department makes of the comparative level of achievement of British universities relative to those in other countries.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Comparisons between education systems are notoriously difficult. However, statistical comparisons based on internationally accepted definitions show that the proportion of the relevant age group gaining higher education qualifications in the United Kingdom is among the highest in Europe. Her Majesty's inspectorate, as part of its foreign travel programme, compares and contrasts the quality of provision in higher education institutions at home and abroad.

Foreign Students

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the number of foreign students with places at universities, and the approximate revenue generated.

Mr. Alan Howarth: In the academic year 1990-91, there were 56,409 students from overseas attending full-time courses at universities in Great Britain. Universities received a total of approximately £232 million in tuition fee income from these students.

Illiteracy

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the extent of adult illiteracy in the United Kingdom; what definition he uses of illiteracy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: There are very few adults in the United Kingdom who cannot read or write at all, but there are substantial numbers who cannot cope with the demands of everyday life. They cannot, for example, fill in forms, check pay-slips or give the correct change. Such people are often described as being "functionally illiterate".

The adult literacy and basic skills unit—ALBSU—which advises the Government, estimates that 5·5 million people in England and Wales have some difficulty with reading, writing, spelling and basic mathematics. That cannot be a precise figure, but there is no doubt that there are still many people requiring help.

The Government give high priority to basic skills—that is literacy and numeracy—education for adults. Local education authorities are currently the main providers of this, but central government also gives support, to ALBSU, and through a number of central initiatives. Grants to ALBSU have increased more than six-fold over the past decade, to over £3 million in 1991-92.

The Further and Higher Education Bill, which is currently before Parliament, will strengthen the position of basic skills. The further education funding councils will be under a specific duty to secure adequate provision of basic skills education for adults.

Such provisions should make the best use of whatever facilities and expertise are available and should be readily accessible to local communities.

ENERGY

Renewable Energy

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects the renewable energy advisory group strategy review to be reported to him; and what arrangements he proposes to make to publish its contents.

Mr. Moynihan: The report of the renewable energy advisory group is expected by April and it will be published shortly after that.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his oral statement to the House on 5 November, Official Report, columns 329-31, on the 1991 Renewable Energy Order, what is his most up-to-date estimate of the amount of up-and-running installed capacity measured on a declared net capacity basis, on 1 January 1993, 1994 1995, 1996 and 1997, based on an equivalent basis to the 472 MW of capacity to be installed by 1 January 1998.

Mr. Moynihan: Orders setting a non-fossil fuel obligation specify the amounts of non-fossil sourced generating capacity that the regional electricity companies must have available during the periods covered by the order, and the regional electricity companies must satisfy the Office of Electricity Regulation that they have made arrangements to secure that capacity. However, the amount of such capacity that is actually available to the regional electricity companies at any particular time will largely depend on the extent to which new projects are able to obtain planning permission, and any other necessary consents, and to go forward to commissioning.

Major Energy Users Council

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what date he has set for his meeting with the Major Energy Users Council; what is the proposed agenda for the meeting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: I have offered to meet the Major Energy Users Council to discuss electricity prices; a meeting has been arranged for next month.

Advanced Gas-cooled Reactors

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those advanced gas-cooled reactors belonging to Nuclear Electric which have their main steam and hot reheat steam pipework manufactured from 0·5 per cent. chrome, 0·5 per cent. molybdenum and 0·25 per cent. vanadium (CMV) alloy steel.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This is an operational matter for Nuclear Electric plc.

Uranium (Dounreay)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy on what date he was first advised of the recorded disappearance of 10·1 kg of highly enriched uranium from Dounreay.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department was advised of the nuclear materials discrepancy at Dounreay on 3 December 1991.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimate he has made of loss of revenue to Dounreay reprocessing plant following its closure after the recorded disappearance of 10·1 kg of highly enriched uranium.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None. This is a commercial matter for the management of the Atomic Energy Authority.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what aspects of the accounting procedures at Dounreay are to be re-assessed following the recorded disappearance of 10·1 kg of highly enriched uranium from Dounreay.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The inquiry report into the nuclear materials discrepancy at Dounreay has just been received and is being studied by officials of my Department. I will consider what information may be provided when examination of the report and its findings have been completed.

Dounreay

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy on how many occasions in the past three months he has had (a) written and (b) telephone communication with the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority about the operations of Dounreay nuclear reprocessing plant.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have regular contact with the UKAEA regarding all aspects of their activities, including those carried out at Dounreay.

Sudbury House

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the arrangements for disposal of Sudbury House by Nuclear Electric; and what proportion of the proceeds will be taken by the Exchequer.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The arrangements for any disposal of Sudbury House are a commercial matter for Nuclear Electric plc. Any proceeds from disposal would remain in the public sector.

Gas Pipelines

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the process whereby gas pipelines are granted planning permission; what provisions exist regarding public inquiries in relation to gas pipelines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The following procedures apply.

Gas pipelines over 10 miles long which are authorised by the Secretary of State for Energy under section 1 of the Pipelines Act 1962 receive deemed planning permission under section 5 of the Act except in those cases where a local planning authority maintains an objection. In these circumstances a planning inquiry is held.

Gas pipelines 10 miles long or less are covered by section 2 of the Act and must have planning permission from the relevant local planning authority.

British Gas has permitted development rights under the General Development Order 1988 which gives it a general grant of planning permission.

THE ARTS

Works of Art (Exports)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will list the items for which the issuing of export licences was withheld on the recommendation of the reviewing committee on the export of works of art during the half-year ended 31 December 1991, specifying in each case the valuation and whether an item was eventually exported or retained, with particulars in the latter event of the acquiring institution; if he will list any items for which licences have been withheld but the final disposal of which is not yet decided, specifying in each case (a) the valuation and (b) the relevant time limit; and whether a press notice will be issued from the Office of Arts and Libraries covering the information given in his reply, including that relating to the outcome in individual cases.

Mr. Renton: The information is as follows:

Press notices have already been issued announcing the acceptance of all of these items and the allocations that have been made to date.

Museums and Galleries (Attendance)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1991 reported by the national museums and galleries in England for which he is responsible, broken down into the individual institutions, but including their outstations, with figures in each case of the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1990.

Mr. Renton: The estimated number of visitors during 1991 to the 11 national museums and galleries for which I am responsible are as follows:

	Estimated attendance in 1991	Percentage change from 1990
British Museum	5,410,422	+6·5
Imperial War Museum	1,045,144	−16·9
National Gallery	4,300,000	+16·8

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Truro Office

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he expects to make a decision on the future of his Department's regional office in Truro;

(2) how many jobs will be lost if his Department's Truro office is closed.

Mr. Curry: The location of the Ministry's regional service centre for Devon and Cornwall has been the subject of a further study, the results of which are currently being assessed.

Regional Reorganisation

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many jobs will be lost in total as a result of his Department's regional reorganisation; and what are the net financial savings expected.

Mr. Curry: It is projected that the regional reorganisation will result in a net loss of about 150 posts across the country as a whole and a net annual financial saving of about £3 million. The saving will be fully realised in 1993-94, by which time the restructuring, which will improve the cost effectiveness and efficiency of the Ministry's services, will have been completed. Where posts are to be lost, every effort is being made to find staff alternative jobs. We are doing all we can to avoid compulsory redundancies.

Fallen Stock

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated cost to the industry of the disposal of fallen stock; and what measures he proposes to take to limit the impact of this cost.

Mr. Maclean: The costs of disposing of fallen stock will vary according to the method, location, nature of the carcase, including species, size and condition and the current market prices for animal by-products. It is for the livestock sector, as with other industries, to find ways of disposing of its waste, and to meet the costs involved.

Ear-tagging

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance he proposes to give to farmers to offset the costs of ear-tagging livestock.

Mr. Maclean: Farmers meet the cost of statutory cattle and deer identification, and of other identification measures for commercial purposes. I have no plans to alter this.

Sea Fish Industry Authority

Mr. Franks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make an announcement about the review of the Sea Fish Industry Authority carried out by fisheries departments.

Mr. Curry [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1991, c. 189]: The Government have carefully considered the additional comments received from the fishing industry and other interested parties about our proposals for action arising from the review of the Sea Fish Industry Authority —SFIA.

Fisheries Ministers have now reached decisions as follows. We call on the SFIA board to make proposals to reduce the levy by £1 to £7·40 a tonne. This would represent a substantial reduction in the cost of the SFIA to the industry, as the majority of those who pay the levy clearly want. At the same time, a reduction to £7·40 rather than £7, as originally proposed, would take into account that some of the SFIA's costs have increased, and allow scope for a somewhat greater range of services to continue.

Subject to the statutory procedures for publicising a proposal to change the levy, it will be for the SFIA board to decide on the exact range of operations to be continued at this new rate. It would be open to the board to include an element of generic advertising which parts of the industry still support.

Ministers have further decided that the levy should not be extended to salmon or trout, or to canned and bottled fish, nor applied on an ad valorem basis; and that the conversion rates for deriving the levy rate on fish fillets should remain unchanged.

We are asking the SFIA to agree plans with the industry for greater industry participation in the advisory committees which will cover the work of SFIA departments. We look to the industry to co-ordinate their nominations for seats on the SFIA board.

We request the chairman of the SFIA to follow up the reviewers' recommendations for improvements in its organisation, structure and efficiency, in consultations with fisheries departments.

Ministers believe that this programme of action will help the industry and the SFIA to continue to promote an efficient seafish industry and one which will be able to meet the challenges for the future.

WALES

Integrated Development, South Wales

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales who are the members of the monitoring committee of the industrial south Wales integrated development operation; what are their occupations and who appoints them.

Mr. David Hunt: There are 72 members of the industrial south Wales integrated development operation monitoring committee, comprising officers representing central and local government, other public and private sector bodies, and the European Commission, under the chairmanship of the Welsh Office, which is responsible for appointing members to the committee.

Mineral Policy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review the mineral policy guidance notes of January 1988 to take into account the provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the Planning and Compensation Act 1991.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Minerals planning guidance notes—MPGs—are kept continuously under review in order to take account of legislative and other changes. Two MPGs were issued in January 1988—MPG1 "General Considerations and the Development Plan System" and MPG2 "Applications, Provisions and Conditions"—and we intend to review MPG1 to reflect recent changes in the development plans system. A draft is expected to issue for consultation later this year.

Mineral Planning

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to review mineral planning guidance note 3 on opencast coal mining and mineral planning guidance note 6 on guidelines for aggregates provision.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Although its operation is continuously monitored, there are no current plans to revise minerals planning guidance note 3. Minerals planning guidance note 6 on aggregates provision is currently being revised and a draft is expected to issue for consultation later this year.

If the hon. Gentleman has any representations he wishes to make on these notes I would, of course, be happy to consider them.

Coal Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total annual coal tonnage currently produced in the coalfield areas of Wales and used in power stations outside Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Between 350,000 and 400,000 tonnes of Welsh coal are used annually in power stations outside Wales.

Waste Disposal Sites

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment has been made by his Department on the impact of the changes in public sector waste disposal upon the number of waste disposal sites in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: None. Local authorities have yet to finalise their new arrangements for waste disposal.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all disused mineral excavation sites used as general waste disposal sites in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not maintained centrally.

Traffic Congestion

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will meet Shotton town council to discuss his plans to build the third Dee crossing;

(2) if he will meet Queensferry town council to discuss plans to alleviate traffic congestion;

(3) if he will meet the community council of Sealand to discuss the impact of traffic congestion upon the environment;

(4) if he will meet Connahs Quay town council to discuss the impact of traffic congestion upon the environment.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies I gave him on 20 December 1991, at column 361, and 14 January 1992, at columns 547-48.

School Inspectors

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his response to the Adams report on the future of Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools service in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 13 January 1992, at column 506.

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1991 reported by the National Museum of Wales, including its outstations, with the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1990.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A total of 683,743 people visited the National Museum of Wales during 1991, an increase of nearly 2 per cent. on the attendance reported by 1990.

Neath and Port Talbot Hospital

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when it is now expected that the first contract will be entered into for the building of the new Neath and Port Talbot general hospital; and how much money has been allocated for its construction in each year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Subject to availability of funds, I understand that West Glamorgan health authority anticipates work commencing towards the end of 1992. Details of the all-Wales capital building programme for 1992-93, and the funds to be allocated for each constituent scheme will be announced by my right hon. Friend in due course.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his parliamentary answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, North, 15 January, Official Report, column 587-88, what will be the remuneration of the chairman of the Further Education Funding Council for Wales, the chairman of the Higher Education Council for Wales and the chief executive of the two councils; and if he will state their expected hours of work, terms of secondment and length of term of appointment.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Chairman of the Further Education Funding Council for Wales will be paid £18,500 on the basis of two days commitment a week. The chairman of the Higher Education Funding Council will be paid £10,000 on the basis of one day a week. The chief executive will be paid £50,000 per annum. The appointments will not be made until the Further and Higher Education Bill receives Royal Assent. The chairman will be appointed for a three-year term and the chief executive for five years. The individuals will be engaged as chairmen and chief executive-designate from dates still to be determined.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what policy considerations will govern his choice of chairman or chairwoman for the Development Board for Rural Wales for the three years commencing 1 April; and when he expects to make an announcement.

Mr. David Hunt: I always give the very fullest consideration to all relevant factors relating to each public appointment for which I have responsibility. I will announce this appointment at the appropriate time in the light of these considerations.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Alcohol Tax

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to protect the United Kingdom spirits industry against the effect of EC proposals in relation to taxation of spirits.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 13 January, at columns 444-45.

Share Ownership

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 445, what percentage of the adult population own shares in (a) privatisation issues and Abbey National combined only, (b) privatisation issues and TSB combined only and (c) privatisation, Abbey National and TSB combined only.

Mr. Maude: The 1991 Treasury-stock exchange survey showed that 1 per cent. of the adult population in Great Britain had combined shareholdings in Abbey National and privatisation issues only. Figures for combined shareholdings in TSB and privatisation issues only and combined shareholdings in Abbey National, TSB and privatisation issues only are not available.

Central Office of Information

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a copy of the latest corporate plan of the Central Office of Information.

Mr. Maples: The Central Office of Information's corporate plan is commercially sensitive and contains information that would weaken COI's negotiating position if it were disclosed. I do not therefore propose placing a copy of the corporate plan in the Library.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to reply to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth's letter of 29 August 1991 about Mr. A. Wiles of Rugby.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 21 January. I apologise for the delay in replying.

Tax Allowances and Reliefs

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the effect on Treasury revenues in a full year in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93 of introducing an upper limit on all income tax allowances and reliefs of (i) £10,000, (ii) £15,000 and (iii) £20,000 a year, (1) with the current tax allowances and reliefs, (2) limiting all personal tax allowances except the single person's allowance to the basic rate, (3) limiting relief on contributions to personal pensions to the basic rate and (4) limiting relief on employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes to the basic rate, giving the total revenue in each case and the numbers of people affected;

(2) if he will estimate the effect on Treasury revenues in a full year in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93 of introducing an upper limit on all income tax allowances and reliefs of (i) £10,000, (ii) £15,000 and (iii) £20,000 a year, (1) limiting relief on contributions to personal pensions and occupational pension schemes to the basic rate, and (2) combining (1) with a limiting of all personal tax allowances except the single person's allowance to the basic rate, giving the total revenue in each case and the numbers of people affected;

(3) if he will estimate the effect on Treasury revenues in a full year in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93 of introducing an upper limit on all income tax allowances and reliefs of (i) £10,000, (ii) £15,000 and (iii) £20,000 a year, and limiting all personal tax allowances except the single person's allowance to the basic rate, (1) limiting relief on contributions to personal pensions to the basic rate, and (2) limiting relief on employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes to the basic rate, giving the total revenue in each case and the numbers of people affected.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that imposition of the specified limits for allowances and reliefs within the current income tax system would yield the following amounts in a full year at 1991-92 levels of income:

Limit £	Yield £ million
20,000	140

After restriction of the relevant allowances and reliefs to the basic rate, the estimated further yield from imposing the specified limits would be as follows:

Full year yield at 1991-92 incomes levels

£ million

After restriction to the basic rate of:	Limit for total allowances and reliefs £10,000	£15,000	£20,000
(a) All personal alllowances except the basic personal allowance	510	230	130
(b) Relief for personal pension contributions	490	190	110
(c) Relief for employees' contribution to occupational pension schemes	520	230	130
(d) Allowances and reliefs in (a) and (b)	440	190	110
(e) Allowances and reliefs in (a) and (c)	480	220	130
(f) Reliefs in (b) and (c)	430	180	110
(g) Allowances and reliefs in (a), (b) and (c)	420	180	110

The number of people with total allowances and reliefs in excess of £10,000 is about 635,000. The corresponding figures for £15,000 and £20,000 are about 75,000 and 35,000 respectively. The estimates of revenue yield do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of the changes. It is not possible to provide detailed information for 1992-93.

Life Expectancy

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the life expectancy rates for each year between 1985-86 and 1990-91 for males and females for (a) Scotland, (b) England, (c) Wales, (d) Northern Ireland, (e) Great Britain and (f) each of the member states of the European Community; and what information he has on (i) Finland, (ii) Norway, (iii) Sweden and (iv) Switzerland for the same period.

Mr. Maples: The information that is currently available is given in the table. Expectations of life are normally calculated for calendar years, but for some of the countries outside the United Kingdom the expectations are the average for three or more years centred on the year in the heading to the column.

European Parliament Budget

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking following the adoption by the European Parliament of a budget for 1992 in excess of that permitted by Community legislation.

Mr. Maude: In view of doubts about the legality of the budget adopted by the European Parliament, the Council is considering the basis for legal action later this month.

In the mean time the Government do not consider that they should treat the budget as agreed; or that contributions by the United Kingdom, in excess of the amounts required under Community legislation in the event of a budget not having been adopted, may be paid directly out of the Consolidated Fund under section 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1992, but will instead have to be paid out of moneys voted by Parliament in estimates. Parliamentary approval of this new service will be sought in a new estimate for the budget of the European Communities—class XX, vote 1. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £150 million monthly will be met from repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund. An advance was made on 3 January 1992 in respect of the first instalment.

Departmental Staff

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government Departments at 1 October 1991.

Mr. Meller: On 1 October 1991 there were 561,903 staff in post in central Government. Of those, 498,735 were non-industrials and 63,168 were classified as being in industrial work.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Company Accounts

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress is being made on the implementation of the EC directive on small and medium-sized company accounts.

Mr. Redwood: My Department has today issued a consultation document inviting comments on draft regulations to implement the EC directive on small and medium-sized company accounts.

These draft regulations, and our decision to bring the directive into force well in advance of the required date, give a clear indication of the Government's commitment to continue to reduce the regulatory burden on small companies.

The directive enables EC member states to reduce accounting requirements, and to increase the maximum financial limits defining small and medium-sized companies by 25 per cent.

In addition to implementing the directive, the regulations would exempt small companies from a number of existing accounting requirements, as foreshadowed in the current programme of work under the deregulation initiative, which I announced on 18 December 1990.

Copies of the consultation document have been placed in the Library. Views are invited by 19 March.

Environmental Information

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if Her Majesty's Government intends to take additional powers to require companies to provide information on environmental matters.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

The Environmental Protection Act 1990 contains requirements for companies carrying out prescribed processes to provide information on environmental matters to enforcing authorities and inspectors, and for enforcing authorities to maintain public registers. The Government do not see any need for additional powers at present.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the results in increased trade that resulted from visits made by Ministers within his Department to Iraq in the past four years.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 20 January 1991]: Only one DTI Minister has visited Iraq in the past four years. The visit was to attend the meeting of the UK-Iraq joint commission in 1988. It is impossible to gauge its effect on bilateral trade.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Citizens Charter

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money his Department has spent on producing its citizens charter proposals, arising from production, distribution and publicity costs.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Since the launch of the citizens charter the Home Office has not incurred any production, distribution or publicity costs in taking the initiative forward.

Armley Prison

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations have been made to him over the past year about staffing levels at Her Majesty's prison, Armley; and what concern has been expressed about the number of staff available to search visitors with hand-held metal-detecting equipment.

Mrs. Rumbold: Staffing levels at Her Majesty's prison, Leeds, were the subject of discussions between management and the local branch of the Prison Officers Association in July 1991 and new target staffing figures have been agreed. The availability of staff for searching is an area which has been identified for further review. Leeds is one of the prisons holding category A inmates for which the Home Secretary has agreed X-ray machines and walk-through metal detectors should be provided. An order has been placed for the equipment and Leeds should receive it in the next few weeks. Hand-held metal detectors are available for use by staff in the visits area and are used where warranted by the circumstances.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when hand-held metal-detecting equipment for searching visitors was first made available at Her Majesty's prison, Armley; and on how many days since then the equipment has not been used to search visitors because of insufficient staff.

Mrs. Rumbold: The date when hand-held metal detectors were first issued to Her Majesty's prison, Armley is not readily available but was prior to October 1986.

The equipment is used to screen-selected visitors including those to prisoners considered to present a high risk to security. There is no record of detectors not being used because of a shortage of staff.

Remand Prisoners, Bradford

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice was given to prison authorities over the placing of prisoners on remand for offences arising from a violent incident in Bradford earlier this year.

Mrs. Rumbold: I understand from the chief constable of West Yorkshire and the governor of Leeds prison that it was not considered necessary to make special arrangements in respect of the location of the prisoners concerned. No advice from the police on the question of location was therefore passed to the prison.

Mrs. Rumbold: I understand from the chief constable of West Yorkshire and the governor of Leeds prison that it was not considered necessary to make special arrangements in respect of the location of the prisoners concerned. No advice from the police on the question of location was therefore passed to the prison.

Prison Security

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will arrange for the installation of X-ray and metal detecting equipment at Her Majesty's prison, Armley, Leeds, to be expedited; and what steps are being taken to ensure that sufficient staff are available to ensure that the equipment will be operational at all times;

(2) by what date all of Her Majesty's prisons within the United Kingdom will have X-ray and metal-detecting equipment available; and whether additional staff will be required at any of Her Majesty's prisons to ensure such equipment is operational at all times.

Mrs. Rumbold: As my right hon. Friend announced following the report of the inquiry by Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons into the escape of two prisoners from Her Majesty's prison Brixton on 7 July 1991, it is intended to install X-ray machines and metal detector portals into prisons holding category A prisoners. His statement concerned prisons in England and Wales, the position in Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

A contract for the provision of X-ray machines to 23 designated prisons has been let. Deliveries will commence in February and continue into May. Deliveries are being arranged so that each prison, including Her Majesty's prison Leeds will have one X-ray machine by 31 March 1992 with further machines being supplied later.

Staffing requirements will be determined by the area manager for each establishment. It is anticipated that additional staff will be required and financial provision has been made.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training is being given to the staff of Her Majesty's prisons within the United Kingdom in the operation of X-ray and metal-detecting equipment.

Mrs. Rumbold: The contract which has been let to supply the X-ray machine to selected prisons in England and Wales includes basic training, of one day's duration, for 20 staff from each establishment and supervisors' training, of two days duration, for two staff from each establishment. Additional training in the interpretation of X-ray pictures is being arranged.

In addition, arrangements are being made to train a radiation protection supervisor for each establishment. Training in the use of metal detectors is much more straightforward and will be provided at the establishment by prison staff.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total cost of supplying x-ray and metal-detecting equipment to prisons in the United Kingdom in the current year; where the equipment is manufactured; what is the minimum delivery date; and what is the total cost of training staff in the use of such equipment.

Mrs. Rumbold: The estimated cost of supplying x-ray machines to selected prisons in England and Wales in 1992 is £1·6 million. Metal detecting equipment will cost a further £75,000.

The equipment is manufactured in Croydon. It is estimated an initial delivery of one machine per establishment will be completed by 31 March with the remaining machines installed by the end of May.

Metal detector portals are purchased as required.

The total cost of training staff to use this equipment is estimated at £150,000.

Immigration Rules

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to make changes in the immigration rules.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have today laid before Parliament a statement of changes in the immigration rules which adds to the list of countries and territorial entities whose nationals need visas for the United Kingdom, the following former constituent republics of the Soviet Union: Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kirgizstan, Moldovia, Russia, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Ukraine, Uzbekistan. The effect of this will be to ensure that those Soviet nationals who required visas continue to do so. At the same time the opportunity has been taken to remove from the list the United States Pacific trust territories for which a visa requirement is no longer necessary.

Coopers and Lybrand

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the projects, the purposes, and the cost of his Department's use of the Coopers and Lybrand group since 1989.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Coopers and Lybrand group have assisted my Department with 10 projects since 1989. Details are as follows:

1989

1. Review of the suitability and performance of PIMIS in the Glasgow/Liverpool Passport Office.
2. External Audit: Justice Clerk's Account.

3. Magistrates Courts Agency Costings of the start-up and running.
4. Review of EFS paperwork.

5. MIS Consultancy.
6. Review of MICROB.
7. Restructuring of HMIC.
8. Review of Computer Production Planning Systems (MICROSS).

1991-92

9. Warehouse Distribution System for Supply and Transport Branch.
10. MIS for Prison Service Industries and Farms.

Royal Navy Reserve

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the occasions when port divers from the Royal Navy Reserve have rendered assistance to police and other civil authorities in England and Wales in the last five years; and if he will make a statement on the effect of the closure of the Royal Navy Reserve port diving branch on such authorities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not held centrally, but, as far as I am aware, there have been no occasions when such assistance has been rendered in England and Wales during the last five years and I do not anticipate that the closure of the Royal Navy Reserve port diving branch will have any effect on such authorities.

Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if privately run prisons will take prison inmates who are on rule 43.

Mrs. Rumbold: Yes.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the same prison rules that exist in state run prisons will apply to privately run prisons.

Mrs. Rumbold: Yes, the substance of the rules will largely remain the same. Some changes will however be necessary to reflect the different terminologies in use in the two systems and the different circumstances, such as the division of a governor's duties between the director and the controller of a contracted-out prison.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who will appoint boards of visitors of privately run prisons; whom they will be responsible to in making observations on the running of such prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: As in the case of other boards of visitors, members of boards of visitors of privately run prisons will be appointed by the Home Secretary under section 6(2) of the Prison Act 1952 and will be required to make an annual report to him under prison rule 97. They will have the same right of access to him to make comments and observations as boards of visitors in state-run prisons.

Empty Commercial Premises

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to stop unauthorised entry into, and trading use of, empty commercial premises.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary published in November a consultation paper on squatting which considers the problems caused by the unlawful occupation of commercial premises. Copies of the document have been placed in the Library. The Government will decide what form any further action should take in the light of the responses to this consultation exercise.

Obscene Publications

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, following the publication of the Marquis de Sade's "Juliette", he has any plans to meet book publishers in the United Kingdom to discuss the publication of books openly advocating sadism, torture, child abuse and other such practices.

Mr. John Patten: I have no plans to do so. The Government in this country have no powers to ban or censor books or other publications. It is for publishers to ensure that they abide by the criminal law. If they do not, they can be prosecuted and punished, but Ministers cannot intervene in this.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received concerning the publication of the book, "Juliette," by the Marquis de Sade.

Mr. John Patten: I have received a number of representations from Members of Parliament and others.

Sexual Offences

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the average length of sentence of imprisonment imposed in each of the last 10 years upon offenders convicted of (a) rape, (b) buggery and indecency between males, (c) indecent assaults on adults, (d) gross indecency between children, and (e) other sexual offences;

(2) how many individuals convicted of offences of (a) sexual assaults on an adult, (b) buggery or indecency between males, (c) rape, and (d) gross indecency with a child were given sentences of (i) immediate imprisonment, (ii) suspended imprisonment, (iii) community service, (iv) probation, (v) a fine, and (vi) discharge in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. John Patten: The information for England and Wales for the years 1980, 1985, 1987, 1988 and 1989 is given in the tables. To produce further information for the other years requested would involve disproportionate cost. The 1990 data are not yet available.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offenders were (a) convicted of and (b) cautioned for indecent exposure in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. John Patten: Information for England and Wales from 1980 to 1989 on the number of offenders convicted and cautioned for the offence of indecent exposure is given in the table. This information is published annually in volumes 1, 2, and 4 of the "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables", copies of which are in the Library. Figures for 1990 are not yet available.

Number of offenders convicted and cautioned for indecent exposure 1980-1989 England and Wales

Year	Convictions	Cautions
1980	1,890	225

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to record locally and nationally the number of homosexual assaults on male prisoners in United Kingdom jails.

Mrs. Rumbold: The current prison service policy is that details of all assaults are recorded, including homosexual assaults. Investigations are made as appropriate, but the system at present does not allow for easy retrieval of information relating specifically to homosexual assaults.

The reporting of incidents by prison establishments in England and Wales is currently under review, as is the system for the storage and retrieval of information about incidents. It is envisaged that, following the review of incident reporting procedures, information about the more serious homosexual assaults, that is those involving a police investigation, will be more readily identifiable in the future.

Vehicle Security Devices

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will introduce regulations to require new cars to be equipped with effective alarms and deadlocking.

Mr. John Patten: No. It would be a breach of European Community law for the Government to introduce separate national legislation requiring new cars to be fitted with alarms and dead locks, since this would constitute a barrier to trade with other member states.

The Department of Transport is therefore examining how far the British standard on vehicle security, which include dead locks, might form the basis of a revised EC directive on vehicle security. That Department, with the support of the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders, is currently negotiating in the motor vehicles working group of the European Commission for part one of the new British standard, on mechanical locking systems, to be incorporated in a new directive. It is hoped that agreement on this will be reached soon. These efforts have my full support and that of my right hon. Friend.

In the meantime, my right hon. Friend is encouraging the motor manufacturers to adopt voluntarily the British standard for all new cars.

The Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders report that alarms are now available as standard, or at point of sale, on 95 per cent. of new vehicle models sold in the United Kingdom.

Joy Riding

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will take steps to educate young people aged 14 years or less in the dangers of car theft and joy riding.

Mr. John Patten: A number of useful steps in this area have already been taken. Last April, I launched the Association of British Insurers' excellent video, "Think Again", which illustrates the dangers of so-called joy riding. This has now been widely distributed to schools and youth clubs.

We have also announced that 1992 is to be Car Crime Prevention Year. This should provide the opportunity for many other initiatives aimed at informing young people of the dangers of car theft and discouraging them from taking cars.

And, although they are not aimed primarily at young people aged 14 or less, there is in existence across the country an extensive range of local motor projects for young people. These include the police, probation services and voluntary agencies and aim to educate the participants on the dangers of car theft and to instil in them a responsible and law abiding attitude to the use of motor vehicles.

HEALTH

GP Contracts

12. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the implementation of the GPs' contract.

Mr. Waldegrave: GPs have responded positively to the challenges and opportunities of the new contract. Patients are enjoying greater choice, surgeries now offer a wider range of services, and most GPs are hitting ambitious targets for cervical cytology screening and childhood immunisation. Most importantly, patient satisfaction has improved significantly.

Food Premises (Registration)

13. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will issue regulations upon the registration of food handling and of premises serving food.

Mr. Dorrell: The Food Premises (Registration) Regulations 1991 were laid before Parliament on 16 December 1991 and will take effect from 1 February 1992.

"The Health of the Nation"

14. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the main issue raised by those consulted on the Green Paper, "The Health of the Nation".

18. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which were the main issues raised by representations made to him following consultation on the Green Paper, "The Health of the Nation".

Mr. Waldegrave: The main feature of consultation was the very large level of support for a strategic approach to improve the nation's health. The responses also addressed a considerable number of individual issues, with considerable emphasis placed on the importance of tackling smoking.

Junior Doctors (Salaries)

15. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new money has been found to improve the salaries of junior doctors.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have accepted the recommendations of the Doctors and Dentists Review Body on rates of pay for out-of-hours work by junior doctors. These are estimated to cost some £36 million in a full year in England.

Abortion Act 1967

16. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will review the workings of the conscience clause of the Abortion Act 1967.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In response to the concern expressed to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State about the position of ancillary staff such as porters, hospital managers have been asked to apply the principle of section 4 of the Abortion Act—"the conscience clause"—to any member of this group who expresses a conscientious objection to direct participation in the handling of fetuses and fetal tissue.

NHS Performance

17. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is available on the general performance of the national health service since 1 April 1991.

Mr. Waldegrave: On 14 January the Department published a report, "NHS Reforms—the First Six Months", detailing the improvements which have already been made since the introduction of the reforms in April 1991. Copies of the report have been sent to all hon. Members representing English constituencies and placed in the Library.

South Manchester Health Authority

19. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the chairman of South Manchester health authority to discuss the maternity unit.

Mr. Dorrell: I wrote to Mr. Peter Hadfield, the chairman of South Manchester health authority, on 18 December 1991 about his authority's proposals to rationalise maternity services. I have not met him to discuss these.

Health Matters (Mid-Essex)

20. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next plans to visit the chairman of the North East Thames regional health authority to discuss health matters in Mid-Essex.

Mr. Dorrell: I have no present plans to do so.

NHS Trusts

22. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many non-executive directors have now been appointed to the hospitals and units in the west midlands in the second wave of trusts; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Twenty-eight non-executive directors have been appointed to six NHS trusts in the west midlands, and two further appointments are under consideration.

28. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to meet the chairman of the Oxfordshire district health authority to discuss applications for trust status.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have at present no plans for such a meeting.

NHS, Leicestershire

23. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on developments in the national health service in Leicestershire.

Mr. Dorrell: Leicestershire health authority and Leicestershire family health services authority have increased patient activity on all fronts, and made important developments on insulin cell implant surgery and the purchase of a magnetic resonance imager[1] for Leicester royal infirmary, while increasing expenditure by almost £2 million on GP premises this year.

[1]an initial £1 million has been set aside for this equipment

Health Care (European Co-operation)

24. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met his European counterparts to discuss European co-operation in health care provision.

Mr. Dorrell: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State attended an inter-governmental conference of European Community Health Ministers, in the Netherlands, from 8 to 10 October last year. Its theme was "critical choices" in the provision of health care.

NHS Reform

25. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what results are following from improved health outcome measurements in respect of the application of the principle that money should follow the patient.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: District health authorities and GP fund holders are now able to use the contracting system to secure improved health services for their residents. This has facilitated an increased emphasis on the development of coherent health needs assessment and health outcome measures, supported by Government initiatives such as the establishment of a central health outcome unit to co-ordinate developments.

Palliative Medicine

26. Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made by the national health service in the practice of palliative medicine, including hospice provisions, since 1987; what plans he has for the future of palliative medicine in the national health service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As in all fields of medicine, changes in palliative medicine are continually being made. Its recognition as a specialty in its own right is an indication that the medical profession itself acknowledges the progress which has been made.

This country has a reputation as a world leader in the fields of palliative medicine and hospice care. The Government fully recognise the importance of the voluntary hospice movement in providing care and support for terminally ill people and their families. Our commitment has been underlined in the past two years by the allocation of £25 million to health authorities specifically to enable them to increase the support they give to hospices and similar organisations. This year the estimated total national health service contribution to voluntary hospices, including central funding, amounts to £41 million. The number of voluntary hospices has more than doubled in the past 10 years; there are now well over 100 in-patient units providing over 1,900 beds, and over 150 day units offering some 1,500 places.

We welcome the growing partnership between the national health service and the voluntary hospice movement. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has asked the standing medical and standing nursing and midwifery advisory committees to review the organisation of palliative care services and the measurement of their performance. The review is expected to be completed in the first half of this year.

NHS Building Schemes

27. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many major national health service building schemes have been completed since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: Since 1979, over 600 building schemes, each costing over £1 million, have been completed. A further 400 such schemes are currently at various stages of planning, design and construction. This is the largest sustained building programme in the history of the NHS.

Residential Social Work

29. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his policy on residential social work.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Residential care will continue to form a significant sector in the spectrum of social services provision for adults and children. The Registered Homes Act 1984 and the Children Act 1989 and associated regulations provide the legislative framework for the maintenance of proper standards of service in residential establishments, including the protection of vulnerable people—adults and children. This will be helped by the introduction last year of independent inspection units in local authorities.

The Department's social services training support programme, which is increased by £4·2 million to a total of £29 million in 1992-93, will again improve the availability of training for social services staff, including those who work in residential homes. From April this year, the programme will include a new initiative aimed at boosting the qualifying training of officers in charge of local authority maintained and controlled residential homes for children.

Body Scanners

30. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many whole-body scanners are in use by the national health service at present; what was the number in 1979, 1983 and 1987; and what plans he has for additional scanners to be provided.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Whole-body scanners may refer to either computerised tomography or magnetic resonance machines. The number of whole-body scanners of both types available for use in the NHS in England, including special health authorities and NHS mobiles, was as follows:

	Number
1979	14
1983	45
1991	236

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently announced £15 million additional capital for the provision of whole-body scanners and other additional medical equipment. This will be the first phase of a three-year rolling programme to expand patient care in this important area.

Hospital Treatment (Patients' Choice)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will take steps to ensure that patients have the right to choose where they will receive hospital treatment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The arrangements which the implementation of the reforms have put in place provide greater flexibility in meeting the needs and wishes of patients and their GPs.

General Practitioners

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of expenditure on primary health care is paid directly to general practitioners and their staff.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is shown in the table.

	£ millions[1]
Hospital and community health services (HCHS):
General community patient care	581
Community mental illness	154
Community learning disability	77
Total HCHS primary health care	812
Family health services (FCHS):[2]
Non cash-limited	4,811
Cash-limited[3]	302
Total FHS	5,113
Total primary health care	5,925
Of which general medical services (GMS):[4]
Non cash-limited	1562
Cash-limited	302
Total GMS	1,569
GMS as a percentage of:
Total primary health care expenditure	26·5
Total FHS expenditure	30·7

[1]Figures drawn from the programme budget. Disaggregated figures for the HCHS programme are not yet available for 1990-91.
[2]Expenditure on family health services (excluding administration) provided by family doctors, dentists, community pharmacists and opticians.
[3]A proportion of general medical practitioners' expenses, actually cash limited from April 1990.
[4]Includes £750,000 paid direct to British Telecom for priority fault repair services for general medical ractitioners. The balance—less superannuation contributions where appropriate—was paid direct to general medical practioners as fees, allowances and practice expenses, including the costs of employing practice staff.

Incontinence

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the proposed resource centre as recommended in the "Agenda for Action on Continence Services" will be established; what its functions will be; and how good practice in the provision of continence services and supplies will be disseminated to all health authorities.

Mr. Dorrell: We are currently considering a grant application for 1992-93 to set up a "Continence Foundation". The objectives of the foundation would include central co-ordination of information on all continence initiatives and promotion of effective and accessible continence investigation and advisory services throughout the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department intends to take to ensure that increased central purchasing of continence supplies does not lead to a lack of availability of products which are required by a small number of people to meet a particular individual need.

Mr. Dorrell: National purchasing contracts normally cover bulk supply items in common use by health authorities. They are entered into to avoid risks of monopoly supply or premium pricing to the NHS. In all cases they are expected to offer demonstrable benefits to the NHS. Where particular patients require a specified product not available on national contracts, additional arrangements will be made either nationally or locally to ensure supply.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department intends to take to ensure there are improvements in the education and training of all people providing continence services as recommended in the "Agenda for Action on Continence Services".

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has an internal working group on continence services which among other things is considering how the education and training of doctors, nurses and other professional staff can be improved in this field. Appropriate professional bodies are being consulted.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department has taken to implement the recommendations of the "Agenda for Action on Continence Services"; and what measures will be taken to ensure all health authorities undertake implementation.

Mr. Dorrell: In July last year, we sent copies of the "Agenda for Action" to the chairman of all district health authorities, commending the elements of an effective local service identified in it and asking them to review the arrangements for continence services in their districts. Progress in the light of this and further guidance on good practice as it becomes available will be monitored as appropriate by the NHS management executive. A working group has been set up within the Department to take forward the recommendations in the "Agenda for Action" which require central action.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he has given to the difficulties associated with the provision of incontinence supplies to women and the drug tariff definition as described in section 12 of the "Agenda for Action on Continence Services"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The arguments for a change in the drug tariff definition have been considered but did not present a convincing case for change at present.

Home Helps

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the changes that have occurred in the total provision of home help services for each local authority in England and Wales over the last five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The readily available information on staffing and expenditure for individual social services departments in England is contained in tables 6, 46, 48 and 50 of the "Profiles of Local Authority Social Services" of which the latest issue covers the period 1984-85 to 1988-89. The annual publication by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, "Personal Social Service Statistics Actuals", of which the latest publication relates to 1989-90, contains information for each local authority on the numbers of clients receiving home care services and the number of hours of service received. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Kidney Patients

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the intake of new patients per million of the population in England in 1990 for kidney treatment.

Mr. Dorrell: According to information provided by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association the number of new patients accepted for renal replacement therapy during 1990 was 59·4 per million population.

Fluoride

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what public information campaign is planned by his Department to ensure that children younger than six years of age do not use fluoride mouth rinses.

Mr. Dorrell: Labelling on mouth rinses containing fluoride which are marketed as medicinal products gives advice on their appropriate use. Such advice might not be given on similar mouth rinses which are marketed as cosmetic products. Negotiations are currently being conducted with the Cosmetic, Toiletries and Perfumery Association for such advice to be included on the labels of cosmetic mouth rinses.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what public information campaign his Department is planning to encourage parents to make toothpaste containing 400 parts per million of fluoride available to their children;

(2) what is the maximum level of fluoride concentration permitted in toothpastes sold in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: The Cosmetic Products (Safety) Regulations 1989 and the Medicines (Products Other than Veterinary Drugs) (Prescriptions Only) Order 1983 both impose an upper limit of 1,500 parts per million on the concentration of fluoride ion which may be contained in toothpastes on general sale. A toothpaste with a fluoride ion content in excess of 1500 parts per million would be regarded as a medicinal product only available on the prescription of a doctor or a dentist.

The licensing authority provided under the Medicines Act 1968 does not regard a product containing less than 600 parts per million fluoride ion as efficacious in preventing dental caries. We therefore have no plans to encourage parents to make toothpastes containing 400 parts per million of fluoride available to their children.

HIV and AIDS

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of those people in the United Kingdom who received transfusions of blood contaminated with HIV virus are currently alive; how many of them are renal patients; how many have now contracted AIDS; and how many are unemployed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To the end of December 1991, there have been 62 reports in England, Wales and Northern Ireland of HIV infection in people who have received blood or tissue transfer in the United Kingdom. The number of infected persons thought to be alive is 30.

Information is not available centrally on the number who are unemployed, or are renal patients.

The information relating to Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Advisory Committee on Distinction Awards

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the membership of the Advisory Committee on Distinction Awards and of its regional committee for Wales; what is their remuneration; what are their occupations; by whom they are appointed; and what are their terms of office.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The membership of the Advisory Committee on Distinction Awards is given in the table. The membership of the Welsh committee for 1992 has not yet been finalised. The chairman of the advisory committee is paid £23,500 per year, and the vice-chairman £9,249·25 per year. No other members of the committee are paid for their committee work. All members are appointed on behalf of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Health, for Scotland and for Wales.

The chairman is a retired consultant, the vice-chairman is a retired civil servant. With the exception of the chief executive of the NHS management executive, the other members of the committee are consultants in the NHS. The membership is as follows:

Advisory Committee on Distinction Awards
Professor Sir Gordon Robson, CBE, FFARCS (Chairman)
Mr. A. L. Rennie, CB (Vice-Chairman)
Professor Sir Herbert Duthie, MD, FRCS
Sir Anthony Grabham, FRCS
Professor D. K. Peters, FRCP
Mr. J. A. P. Marston, MA, DM, FRCS
Mr. S. C. Simmons, PRCOG
Professor L. G. Whitby, FRSE, PhD, FRCP, FRCPath
Sir Terence English, KBE, PRCS
Professor Dame Margaret Turner-Warwick, DBE, PhD, PRCP
Professor Dame June Lloyd, DBE, MD, FRCP, DCH
Professor M. Rosen, CBE, FFARCS
Dr. J. O. M. C. Craig, FRCS, FRCR, DMRD
Mr. D. K. Nichol, CBE
Dr. F. Moran, FRCP
Professor P. Lachmann, FRS, ScD, PhD, FRCP, PRCPath
Mr. D. Seel, BDS, FDS, RCS, MOrth
Professor W. W. Holland, MD, FRCP, PFPHM

Dr. Vera Dallos, FRCP
Dr. J. R. Bennett, FRCP

Mr. A. W. F. Lettin, MS, FRCS
Professor J. D. Swales, MD, FRCP
Professor A. C. P. Sims, PRCPsych

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the Government intend to implement the recommendations on toxoplasmosis of the Fourth Report of the Health Committee, session 1990-91, on maternity services: "Pre-conceptual Care."

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This recommendation is currently being considered by the Government, along with other recommendations contained in the preconception care report of the Health Select Committee maternity services inquiry (Session 1990-91: HC 430-I). A full response to the report will be published shortly.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on toxoplasmosis.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the last 12 months the Department has received four inquiries from the general public and 32 inquiries from right hon. and hon. Members, three of which were parliamentary questions.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the European countries which test for toxoplasmosis during pregnancy (a) routinely and (b) on request; for each European country what are the rates of pre-pregnancy immunity and sero-conversion during pregnancy; and which countries provide health education to pregnant women on the avoidance of toxoplasmosis infection during pregnancy.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are aware that France, Austria and parts of Germany conduct screening for toxoplasmosis in pregnant women. No other information is available.

NHS Number Identity System

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate has been made of the expenditure incurred by the national health service as a result of not applying the national health service number identity system; and if he will make a statement.

NHS Cards

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps doctors take to ensure that the person named on the national health service number card is the patient sitting before them; and what his Department is doing to prevent possible fraudulent visits occuring;

(2) if he will make a statement on the reasons patients are not usually required to show their national health service number card when visiting doctors and dentists; and if he will take steps to ensure that the rule requiring the card to be shown is more vigorously enforced.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: An NHS medical card is issued only when a patient has been accepted on to a GP's list. It is not normally considered necessary for a patient to produce a card in order to obtain treatment on subsequent occasions since family doctors and dentists normally know their patients and have the patients' records to hand. There are separate well-established arrangments for dealing with temporary residents. GPs and dentists are required to provide any treatment which they consider to be immediately necessary without regard to the nationality of the patient concerned.

GPs and dentists are also advised of the relevant reciprocal health care agreements and are directed to offer private treatment if it appears that a patient has come to the United Kingdom specifically for medical care. In a case of uncertainty the GP can ask to see the patient's NHS card. He can then decide whether to accept someone as a NHS patient or on a private fee-paying basis.

We have no evidence available concerning any extra costs to general practice resulting from these arrangements.

NHS (Overseas Visitors)

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that overseas visitors do not abuse the national health service free treatment system.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Treatment in a national health service hospital's accident and emergency department is free to anyone who needs it. Eligibility for free non-emergency hospital treatment is based on residence in the United Kingdom—not on nationality or the payment of taxes. Anyone not ordinarily resident in the UK has to pay for such treatment unless covered by one of a number of specified exemptions.

Guidance issued to hospitals by the Department of Health makes it clear that, where there is doubt about eligibility, hospital staff should ask for corroborative evidence or take a refundable deposit in advance. I have asked the NHS management executive to investigate the particular cases raised recently in the press and to write to NHS managers to remind them of the need to apply the existing guidelines. The management executive will follow up with regions to ensure that this instruction is being implemented. We will then re-issue the guidelines taking into account any further findings by the management executive.

Community Care

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to make a statement about the transfer of resources to local authorities to implement the new community care legislation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The transfer from the Department of Social Security to local authorities will be determined during the 1992 public expenditure round and will be announced in that context.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money his Department has spent on producing its citizens charter proposals, arising from production, distribution and publicity costs.

Mr. Dorrell: The amount of £2 million has been spent on the production and distribution of the patients charter. There has been an unprecedented level of demand for the charter. Over 900,000 requests from members of the general public for the charter have been received to date and more are still being received. This is a clear demonstration of the success of the patients charter.

NHS Hospitals

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the cleanliness of national health service hospitals since cleaning services were privatised.

Mr. Dorrell: A key objective for NHS management is to maintain an environment which promotes and protects the health of all who come into contact with hospital services.

The responsibility for specifying the required standards of cleanliness and ensuring those standards are maintained rests with local hospital management whether cleaning services are provided in-house or by external contractor.

Patient Registration

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from (a) the British Medical Association, (b) the Royal College of General Practitioners and (c) other organisations about the new patient registration examination; and whether he has any plans to dispense with the requirement for the examination when patients are reallocated within a group practice following the resignation of a partner.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No such representations have been received. We believe it is beneficial for both patient and doctor that there should be an opportunity for the doctor to obtain an up to date profile of any new patient joining his list. There is already provision for the requirement to be waived when a patient has participated in such a consultation with a partner during the preceding 12 months.

Bulgaria

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to increase the amount of medical assistance to Bulgaria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The United Kingdom signed last November a health co-operation agreement with the Republic of Bulgaria. This provides for exchanges of information and experts in the field of medicine and public health. The areas of co-operation will include health service organisation and management of health economics, health promotion and disease prevention and maternal and child health.

In addition, the United Kingdom has contributed in the normal way to the cost of the EC Poland and Hungary assistance for economic restructuring programme for Bulgaria amounting to £85·7 million, a proportion of which has included help with the development of health services.

Disability

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshaw, 13 January, Official Report, column 522, if his Department has made any assessment of the device known as Link; if he has any plans to make the new aid available to hearing-impaired people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has not made any assessment of the device known as Link and has no plans to do so. Provision of equipment of this kind to people who might benefit from its use can be made, according to assessment of need and subject to availability of resources, through local health, education or social services authorities.

Child Care

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision, under the terms of the Children Act 1989, is to be provided for under-eight-year-old children in Liverpool, particularly those in need of after-school care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is collected annually about registered childminders and day care provision which is published by the Department of Health in the "Children's Day Care" series. The most recent document "Children's Day Care Facilities at 31 March 1991 England—Provisional Feedback" is available in the Library. Arrangements have been set in hand for the 31 March 1992 returns to include data about registered after school provision for school age children aged under eight.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorism

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent in each of the last five years on compensation for (a) private home owners, (b) businesses and (c) personal injury as a result of terrorist activity.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table:

Criminal damage and injuries compensation paid as a result of terrorist activity

Financial year	Private Property £K	Businesses £K	Criminal Injuries £K
1988-89 (From 6.8.88)	1,765	10,001	3,466
1989-90	3,334	14,834	6,489
1990-91	4,259	14,497	7,965
1991-92 (to 31.12.91)	2,863	15,754	7,314

1. Amounts exclude costs incurred by applicants in formulating their claims.
2. Private property includes property which is owned or rented.
3. Compensation for private property includes payment for damage to buildings, vehicles and personal effects.

Police Stations

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been spent in each of the last five years on (a) the building and (b) the upgrading of police stations in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available in the form requested and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. The total amount spent by the police authority for Northern Ireland on the police building programme, including the building and upgrading of police stations, in each of the last five years is:

Year	Major new works £K	Minor new works £K	Maintenance £K
1986-87	6,133	1,626	3,924
1987-88	16,082	2,146	3,919

1990-91	20,774	2,733	4,134

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent in each of the last five years on repair or replacement of police stations destroyed as a result of terrorist activity.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is:

Year	£
1986-87	588,600
1988-89	660,837
1989-90	1,129,250
1990-91	517,873

Gaelic Athletic Association

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been paid out in grant aid to the Gaelic Athletic Association in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mawhinney: Grants paid to the Gaelic Athletic Association and its affiliated clubs in each of the last five years were as follows:

Financial Year	Department of Education Capital Grant to Affiliated GAA Clubs £	Sports Council for Northern Ireland Club/Equipment Grants £	Sports Council for Northern Ireland Administration Coaching Grants £
1986-87	59,642	6,428	13,979
1987-88	48,650	4,600	21,966
1988-89	35,337	4,467	18,995
1989-90	53,928	6,974	22,433
1990-91	1,273	5,848	29,373

Schools

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been made available for capital spending to schools in (a) the controlled sector, (b) the maintained sector, (c) the voluntary sector and (d) classed as integrated in each of the education and library board areas in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

	Financial Year	Belfast £	Board Area and Expenditure £000's Western £	N-Eastern £	S-Eastern £	Southern £
Controlled	1986-87	1,001	910	1,921	3,031	2,333

Note:

i. These are actual expenditure figures and represent grants paid in respect of controlled schools at 100 per cent., maintained and voluntary schools almost entirely at 85 per cent. and integrated schools at 85 per cent. up until 12/11/90 and at 100 per cent. since that date.

ii. The figures represent capital expenditure at primary, secondary and grammar schools.

iii. A breakdown of expenditure on furniture and equipment is not available for years 1986-87 and 1987-88 but costs are included in subsequent years.

Ulster Museum

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1991 reported by the Ulster museum, including its outstations, with the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1990.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1991 a total of 317,600 people visited the Ulster museum and the Armagh county museum—an increase of 7·3 per cent. on the attendance figure for 1990.

TRANSPORT

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects work to start on the construction of the east London river crossing.

Mr. Chope: Main construction works are planned to start in spring 1993. Some advance diversion of statutory undertakers services is planned to start earlier.

Mr. Cartwright To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what legal action has been initiated against his Department as a result of the publication of compulsory purchase notices in connection with the construction of the east London river crossing.

Mr. Chope: Notices of motion have been served in the High Court by the London borough of Greenwich and by nine local residents in respect of the compulsory purchase orders and an exchange land certificate for the east London river crossing.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money his Department has spent on producing its citizens charter proposals, arising from production, distribution and publicity costs.

Mr. McLoughlin: Less than £3,000.

Tilbury and Southend Railway Line

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to reply to the proposals from British Rail for the modernisation of the London, Tilbury and Southend line.

Mr. Freeman: BR will shortly go out to tender for the design of the £50 million re-signalling scheme. This should improve reliability on this route significantly. Discussions on the rolling stock proposals are continuing and we hope to reach a conclusion shortly.

BR Slam-shut Doors

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the publication date of the Health and Safety Executive's report into British Rail slam-shut doors; and for what reason the report was not published on the date originally expected.

Mr. Freeman: Most of the technical work on this very detailed and complex investigation has now been completed and work is in hand on the preparation of the report. The Health and Safety Executive attaches the utmost importance to producing a report which is comprehensive, and contains practicable recommendations. I understand that the present estimate is that publication will be possible in the spring.

Leith Docks

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received recent representations from the Forth ports authority about the privatisation of Leith docks, including a management buy-out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: On 8 January the Forth ports authority submitted under the provisions of section 9 of the Ports Act 1991 for confirmation by my right hon. and learned Friend a scheme for the transfer of their undertaking to a successor company formed under section 1 of the Act. The authority has announced its intention to sell its undertaking by means of a flotation, and I understand that it intends that the flotation should include provision for a substantial shareholding by management and employers.

My right hon. and learned Friend and I very much welcome this decision by the largest trust port in Scotland to seek privatisation under the Ports Act.

Coastguard Service

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the financial implications of the proposed coastguard review with regard to disposal of assets.

Mr. McLoughlin: Due to the terms on which they are held, no significant income is expected from the disposal of property by Her Majesty's Coastguard as a result of this review. However, annual running cost savings of over £50,000 will be achieved once the programme of disposals is complete.

A capital investment of £864,000 will also be made over the same period in the improvement of existing facilities and the construction of new stations.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what liaison he had with the coastguard union leaders during the recent review of the coastguard service.

Mr. McLoughlin: Coastguard union leaders were kept informed at all stages during the recent review of the sector and auxiliary coastguard organisation.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what financial savings are expected from the proposed cuts to the coastguard service in Scotland.

Mr. McLoughlin: The recently completed review of Her Majesty's Coastguard's sector and auxiliary coastguard organisation was not a cost-cutting exercise, but was undertaken with the aim of ensuring that Her Majesty's Coastguard continues to provide the best possible service in an effective and efficient manner. The provisional financial savings, after full implementation of the sector review in Scotland are £268,000.

Radioactive Materials Transport Division

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was (a) the establishment and (b) the actual staffing level of the radioactive materials transport division in each year since its formation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Radioactive materials transport division, Department of Transport:

Year	Complement	Actual staffing level
1979	12	12
1980	12	12
1981	14	14
1982	15	15
1983	15	15
1984	16	16
1985	15	15
1986	15	15
1987	16	15
1988	16	16
1989	16	16

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the cuts proposed in the recently published consultation paper on the review of the coastguard service are due to be finalised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: An implementation plan for each region was prepared and submitted to coastguard headquarters by the regional controller, which covered a four year period of implementation beginning in the financial year 1991-92, once the recommendations and proposals made in the review had been granted ministerial approval.

The implementation of the review's recommendations will ensure that Her Majesty's Coastguard continues to provide the best possible search and rescue service, in an efficient and cost-effective manner, into the future, in the way outlined in my announcement to the House on 3 December 1991.

Marchioness Inquiry

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his written answer of 13 January on the second Marchioness inquiry, Official Report, column 504, he will add to the list of accidents on the River Thames to which he has drawn to the attention of Mr Hayes and his adviser the following: (a) collision between Bowbelle and MV Catford, at East Greenwich, 23 January 1965, (b) collision between Bowbelle and SS De Baif, at Dagenham, 11 November 1965, (c) collision between Bowbelle and Bertonia, at Halfway Reach, 16 January 1967, (d) collision between Bowbelle and Jo Tor, River Thames, 26 April 1967, (e) collision between Bowbelle and MV Bradfield, at Gravesend, 13 January 1971, (f) Bowbelle collision with Cannon Street railway bridge, 26 May 1982 and (g) collision between Bowbelle and Bowsprite, Upper Pool, 5 November 1987.

Mr. McLoughlin: I shall be pleased to draw these incidents to the attention of Mr. Hayes.

Burscough Curves Rail Extension

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what consultations there have been between his Department and British Rail on whether to restore the Burscough Curves rail extension to Southport;

(2) if he will consider plans to re-open the Burscough Curves rail extension to Southport.

Mr. Freeman: There have been no consultations with British Rail on this matter as any decision to re-open the curves would be entirely a matter for BR.

Airline Passengers

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what plans he has to provide protection to scheduled airline passengers who have paid fares in advance in the event of their airline going out of business; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend asked the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority in March 1991 for advice on whether some arrangements could be introduced to help protect scheduled passengers against financial loss and disruption arising from the failure of an airline.

The advice from the CAA was published in August as CAP595. It recommended that if there were to be a protection scheme the most desirable option would be to establish a common fund, financed by a levy charged to all airlines, including foreign ones, which had passengers to, from, or within the United Kingdom. The fund would be designed to compensate such passengers for loss in the event of airline failure. It is likely that primary legislation would be needed to impose a levy.

My Department is now carefully studying the legal and other implications of the CAA's preferred scheme. In addition, my Department is exploring other options considered by the CAA, such as compulsory insurance by airlines.

Lighthouse Service

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money has been paid in each of the last five financial years by Her Majesty's Government from the General Lighthouse Fund to the Irish Government to subsidise that country's lighthouse service; if he will state how long this system of payments has been in existence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: No money is paid to the Irish Government from the General Lighthouse Fund. The lights and buoys in the Irish Republic form part of a common British Isles system of navigational aids managed by the three general lighthouse authorities (GLA) which are financed from the fund. The fund derives its income from light dues levied at ports in Britain and Ireland.

The Commissioners of Irish Lights (CIL) are the GLA for the whole of Ireland. Under a 1985 agreement with the Irish Government, broadly half the costs deemed to be incurred by CIL in the Republic are—following a transitional period—now met by an annual contribution from the Irish Government and by light dues collected at ports in the Republic of Ireland. The balance of those costs are met by the fund.

Over the last five years, light dues collected in the Republic of Ireland and the Irish Government contribution were:

	Light dues	IR £ million Irish Government contribution
1986-87	1·9	1·3
1987-88	2·2	1·4
1988-89	2·5	2·0
1989-90	2·6	2·3
1990-91	2·7	2·4

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state the level of unemployment for each year since 1962.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is available on the consistent seasonally adjusted basis only from 1971. It can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state the number and percentage of the work force in Heywood and Middleton currently in part-time work.

Mr. Jackson: The lastest available information about employment in parliamentary constituencies is from the September 1989 census of employment and relates to employees in employment only.

At September 1989, there were an estimated 5,200 employees in part-time employment in the Heywood and Middleton constituency. This represented 22 per cent. of all employees in employment in the area at that time.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money his Department has spent on producing its citizens charter proposals, arising from production, distribution and publicity costs.

Mr. Jackson: The Employment Department has so far produced two charters, the jobseekers charter and the redundancy payments service charter. The total cost of producing and distributing information and display materials to support the introduction of the jobseekers charter throughout the network of 1,400 local offices has been £606,000. The total cost of producing and distributing the redundancy payments service charter leaflet was £23,000.

Euratom Directive

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with the trades union representatives of the emergency services regarding implementation of the EC Euratom directive 89/618; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Commission considered and approved for publication a consultative document (CD37) containing proposals for regulations to implement the directive. The document was published on 28 November 1991 and a copy is held in the Library.

Copies of the consultative document have been sent to a wide range of interested parties including the Trades Union Congress, local authority associations, employer organisations and organisations representing workers in the emergency services to gain their views on the proposals.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the areas which will receive information under the provisions of the EC Euratom directive 89/618.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) is currently conducting public consultation on proposals to implement European Council directive 89/618/ Euratom. A copy of this consultative document (CD37) is in the Library. It is not yet possible to list the areas which will receive information as it may be necessary to amend the proposals in the light of the results of consultation within the United Kingdom and with the Commission of the European Communities.

Under the HSC's current proposals a duty will be placed on every employer to assess whether he is carrying on work from which a radiation emergency—as defined by the directive—is reasonably foreseeable. Where a radiation emergency is reasonably foreseeable, it is for the Health and Safety Executive to determine the area within which the employers must distribute the required information.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken and intends to take to implement the provisions of the EC Euratom directive 89/618 as regards transport of nuclear material; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answer given in reply to the hon. Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. O'Hara) January 1992, Official Report column 457, as the implementation proposals put forward by the Health and Safety Commission cover this area of activity.

Commercial Debtors

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will seek powers to require commercial debtors to settle outstanding accounts within the agreed terms of the credit account concerned or to pay interest on the sums outstanding.

Mr. Forth: I have no plans to seek powers to impose interest charges on outstanding commercial debts. I am aware that late payment of debt is a problem, particularly for the small firms sector. The evidence that statutory interest would improve payment practices is, however, far from conclusive and I remain to be convinced that a legislative approach would be both effective and administratively practical.

I am, nevertheless, keeping the matter under close review and I am interested to see views on how an effective and practical legislative framework might operate.

SCOTLAND

Community Charge

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the average domestic rates bill in each local authority in Scotland which would be necessary to yield the same revenue as his estimate of the yield of the community charge in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Allan Stewart: In the absence of up-to-date information on the number of domestic rateable subjects it is not possible to answer this question precisely. The table below is based on provisional outturn information from local authorities on the yield of the community charge in 1990-91 and figures on the budgeted yield in 1991-92, adjusted for the amounts of community charge grant due to be received and for selective action, together with details of the number of domestic subjects at 1 April 1988.

Kidney Patients

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the intake of new patients per million of the population in Scotland in 1990 for kidney treatment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The intake of new patients for treatment of chronic renal failure in Scotland was 61·3 per million of population as at 31 December 1990.

Open University

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what relationship his Department has had with the Open university, and in particular with regard to its activities in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department has cordial and constructive relations with the Open university. My officials have met senior university staff in Scotland on a number of occasions to discuss aspects of the Government's White Paper "Higher Education—A New Framework" and current legislative proposals as they would affect the university's operations in Scotland.

Organ Donor Cards

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent initiatives his Department has taken to promote the carrying of organ transplant donor cards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department maintains a continuous campaign to promote the carrying of organ transplant donor cards. Recently a full-page advertisement in the magazine of a leading Scottish Sunday newspaper encouraged the carrying of cards. Some 100,000 cards are distributed annually, free of charge, to a wide variety of outlets throughout Scotland.

I am confident that the opening of the heart/lung transplant unit in Glasgow and my recent announcement about the establishment of a liver transplant unit in Scotland will alert more Scottish people to the benefits of transplantation, and thus provide an impetus to the donor campaign.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1991 reported by the national museums and galleries in Scotland, broken down into the individual institutions but including their outstations, with the figures in each case of the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1990.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

	1991	Percentage change since 1990
National galleries of Scotland	690,124	−14·67
National museums of Scotland	1,070,833	+6·89

The national galleries of Scotland comprise the national gallery of Scotland, the Scottish national gallery of modern art and the Scottish national portrait gallery. The national museums of Scotland comprise the royal museum of Scotland buildings at Chambers street and Queen street, Edinburgh, the Scottish agricultural museum, the Scottish united services museum, the museum of flight and the Shambellie museum of costume.

Sheriffs

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to appoint full-time sheriffs in 1992 and future years; to which sheriffdoms such appointments will be made; whether he will seek to appoint more women as sheriffs; and whether he will seek to appoint more solicitors as sheriffs.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number and location of new appointments in 1992 and future years will reflect a number of considerations including the incidence of retirals which cannot be accurately predicted and the judicial resources required to allow courts to deal timeously with the volume of cases coming before them. Application of the present policy whereby in respect of each vacancy the best-fitted candidate is appointed has resulted in more solicitors being appointed in recent years and can be expected to result in more women being appointed in the future as a greater number of women lawyers of appropriate ability acquire the experience necessary for a shrieval appointment.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average annual total number of working days for a full-time sheriff in the last year for which figures are available; what is the gross salary of a sheriff and a sheriff principal; and what is the daily remuneration presently paid to a temporary sheriff.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of working days per annum for a full-time sheriff, excluding duties during weekends and public holidays, is 216. At 1 January 1992, the gross annual salaries of a sheriff and sheriff principal were, respectively, £59,900 and £66,500. The present daily remuneration rate of a temporary sheriff is £223.

Hill Livestock Payments

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to issue claims forms for hill livestock compensatory allowance payments.

Mr. Lang: Application forms for the 1992 HLCA scheme were issued to producers on 13 January.

EC Drinking Water Directive

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the water supply zones which do not fully comply with requirements of the EC drinking water directive, stating for each the reasons for non-compliance; what region each supply zone falls within; and if he will give the expected date of compliance.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 January 1992]: The Water Supply (Water Quality) (Scotland) Regulations 1990 incorporate the requirements of the EC drinking water directive. Details of water quality in individual supply zones are available in public registers maintained by water authorities. Results for the first six months' monitoring show 97 per cent. of samples meeting the standards. The public water supply zones where quality does not fully comply with the regulations are listed in the table below, which also shows the parameters concerned and the expected compliance date in each case.

Police Statistics

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total number of police officers operating in (a) Strathclyde region, (b) Argyll and (c) Isle of Bute for each year since 1975; what is the recommended establishment level for each; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer of 20 January 1992]: The total police strength and authorised establishment levels for Strathclyde police for the years 1975 to 1991 are set out in the table below. Responsibility for the deployment of officers in different parts of the force area rests with the chief constable and figures relating to such deployment are not collected centrally.

Total police strength and establishment levels in Strathclyde region at 31 December

Year	Strength	Establishment
1975	6,478	6,992
1976	6,453	6,992

Medical Examinations

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants were examined by doctors acting for his Department over the last 12 months for the purpose of assessing (a) attendance allowance, (b) mobility allowance and (c) attendance allowance where the claimant was aged over 65 years; what was the average fee paid to doctors for such examinations; and what was the overall cost to his Department of these examinations.

Mr. Scott: A medical examination is conducted for virtually all initial and subsequent claims to attendance allowance where the claim is not one made on the grounds of terminal illness. Available figures show that in 1991 454,000 such claims were processed. A proportion of the 45,000 requests for renewals of existing attendance allowance awards processed in disability benefit centres, and of the 73,000 decisions given on review, also required a medical examination.

There were 262,000 claims for mobility allowance. Apart from a small percentage, where the claimant clearly did not fulfil one of the qualifying conditions, each of these required a medical examination. A further 31,000 appeal cases also required medical examinations.

In December 1991 fees paid to doctors for attendance allowance and mobility allowance examinations conducted in their surgeries and customers homes ranged from £31 to £83·70, depending upon the type of examination and the time taken to complete it.

An estimate of the total cost of medical examinations for attendance allowance and mobility allowance could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Immigrants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the annual additional cost to the Exchequer of paying benefits to immigrants with limited leave to remain on the same basis as to immigrants with right of abode in the United Kingdom.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Strikers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount of benefit paid to strikers and their families in benefits in each year since 1979 at current prices; and what was the average weekly payment per striker's family at current prices in each year.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is in the table.

Year	Total benefit paid £ thousand	Average weekly benefit £
1979-80	24,788	49·01
1980-81	1,384	43·56
1981-82	1,119	34·46
1982-83	1,190	40·09
1983-84	3,316	27·61
1984-85	51,329	30·33
1985-86	361	34·27
1986-87	689	33·08
1987-88	183	28·47
1988-89	671	28·43
1989-90	188	32·85
1990-91	80	37·77

Notes:
1. All years are 1 April – 31 March.
2. All figures have been revalued to 1991-92 terms using the GDP deflator.
3. Pre-1988-89 figures relate only to supplementary benefit. Figures from 1988-89 relate only to income support.

Young Claimants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the annual additional cost to the Exchequer of paying income support and housing support to claimants aged from 18 to 24 years at the full rate applicable to those aged 25 years and over.

Miss Widdecombe: It is estimated that the additional annual cost of income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit would be £280 million.

Source: Modelled at 1991-92 prices and benefit levels using data drawn from the 1986-88 family expenditure surveys and the 1990 annual statistical inquiry.

Benefit Model Tables

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security with reference to the letter to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North of 25 October, why it was decided not to include a figure for travel-to-work expenses in his Department's benefit model tables.

Mr. Jack: As explained in the 1988 edition, the column showing travel-to-work expenses was discontinued in view of the inadequacy of a single average figure in this context and to reduce the number of arbitrary elements that used to appear in the tables.

Disability

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he will take to ensure that the disability living allowance and attendance allowance will be paid to those who are otherwise eligible and live in local authority homes or are sponsored by local authorities in private or voluntary homes.

Mr. Scott: Payment of attendance allowance and the care component of disability living allowance will cease after four weeks to avoid double provision for care needs. People in residential homes of any description may continue to receive the mobility component of disability living allowance.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will abolish the six-month waiting period for the attendance allowance and the three-month waiting period for the disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so, but we have abolished such waiting periods for the terminally ill.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will revise the rules for disability benefits such as mobility allowance and the proposed new disability living allowance so as to provide equal benefits for people disabled after the age of 65 years.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

Housing Benefit

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many housing benefit applications were determined by each local authority in the London area in the last year for which data is available.

Miss Widdecombe: The information available is in the table.

Notes:
a. Figures for 1988-89 and 1989-90 relate to claims for rent rebates, rent allowances and/or rate rebates.
b. Figures for 1990-91 relate to claims for rent rebate and rent allowance only, following the introduction of community charge.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information is collected from local authorities on their performance in housing benefit management.

Miss Widdecombe: The housing benefit management information system collects key data on the number of claims processed within 14 days of receipt of all information necessary to assess the claim together with the number of review board hearings held within six weeks of request. Quarterly information on the number of outstanding claims will become available later this year. The returns also give other information which helps monitor performance. Full details are in circular HB/CCB (91)2 which is available in the Library.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance is given to local authorities on the acceptable time in which to determine a housing benefit application.

Miss Widdecombe: Full statutory responsibility for the administration of the housing benefit scheme rests with local authorities which are required to ensure that the system is working effectively and in accordance with the rules of the scheme. Regulations prescribe that claims should be processed within 14 days of receipt of all the necessary information, or as soon as possible thereafter. Where, through no fault of the applicant, a claim cannot be settled within 14 days, interim payments should be made. Guidance issued to local authorities by the Department reflects those provisions.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on (a) the proportion of all claims for housing benefit which have been processed within 14 days, (b) the proportion of local authorities meeting claims for housing benefit within 14 days and (c) the extent to which where local authorities do not meet this target they make interim payments.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on the processing of housing benefit claims to local authorities in 1990-91 is not yet available. However, data are available for approximately two-thirds of authorities for the year 1989-90. In that year, about two-thirds of claims were processed within 14 days. Over 90 per cent. of authorities processed at least some claims within 14 days, and over 10 per cent. processed all claims within 14 days. Information on the provision of interim payments is not collected by the Department.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the housing benefit entitlement of a single person, living alone, whose sole income is what is currently available to a person on income support (a) for the ages of 16 and 17 years, (b) between the ages of 18 and 24 years and (c) between the age of 25 years and retirement age, where the private rented sector rent has been assessed as a reasonable market rent for housing benefit subsidy purposes as £30, £50, £100, and £150 per week, and the amount of housing benefit available as income rises by each £10 per week above income support level, up to £150 per week.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the tables.

Notes:
1. 16-17-year-olds who have no choice but to live independently receive the higher income support rate appropriate to 18-24-year-olds.
2. The calculations assume that the claimant is not entitled to any premiums.
3. The amount of housing benefit quoted for each level of rent assumes that the rent is fully eligible for Housing Benefit.
4. All calculations are based on the assumption that the income referred to is earnings, to which a disregard of £5 is appropriate.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the number of households claiming housing benefit whose payments are restricted by the local authority on the basis of a decision that the rent is unreasonably high, or the accommodation is considered too large.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information for 1989-90 suggests that there were between 15,000 and 30,000 housing benefit cases in Great Britain where benefit was restricted because the rent was considered unreasonably high. The number of cases where the accommodation is considered too large is not collected.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the annual cost to the Exchequer of reducing the disqualification period for unemployment benefit for those leaving a job without good cause from 26 to six weeks.

Mr. Jack: The annual cost of reducing the maximum period of disqualification for unemployment benefit from 26 to six weeks for those who lose their job through misconduct or voluntarily leave it without just cause, is estimated at around £35 million. This is based on the latest available figure of 14,746 disqualifications on these grounds in force on 9 May 1991.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total annual cost of benefits to the unemployed and their dependants in Scotland in 1990-91; and what are the estimated costs for 1991-92.

Mr. Jack: The information is not available in the form requested.

Pensioners

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total monetary equivalent per week of the income of an average single pensioner without savings, in receipt of a basic state pension and income support, inclusive of an average housing benefit payment and community charge rebate; and if he will also make a similar computation for an average pensioner couple.

Miss Widdecombe: Pensioners in receipt of a basic retirement pension and income support would receive the sums shown in the table.

Notes:

1. IS—Income Support HB—Housing Benefit CCB—Community Charge Benefit
2. There are some pensioners who receive income which is not taken into account against Income Support entitlement. People in this group would receive extra income which is not reflected in the table.
3. The Housing Benefit and Community Charge Benefit figures are the averages of all cases where the claimant or partner is aged 60 or over.
4. *A couple aged between 60-74, in receipt of a basic Retirement Pension, would not be entitled to Income Support. The rate shown is the total of Retirement Pension payable to the claimant and spouse.

Students

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the annual cost to the Exchequer of means-tested benefits claimed by full-time students in each year since 1979, at current prices.

Miss Widdecombe: Information about the amount of benefits claimed by full-time students is not routinely kept and is therefore not available in the form requested.

Community Care Grants

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he plans to extend the scope of eligibility for community care grants.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to extend the eligibility for community care grants. We will however be looking carefully at this question when the social policy research unit study on the social fund is published.

Independent Living Fund

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from the trustees of the independent living fund about the proposal for the successor body to the independent living fund not to help disabled people who were not in receipt of a payment from the independent living fund before 31 March 1993; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: A number of representations have been received from the trustees of the independent living fund and others about our proposals for the successor body since I announced outline details on 21 May 1991, (at columns 793-94). These will be taken into account in shaping our plans.

Income Support

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give his estimate of the number of those aged 16 and 17 years who are currently excluded from income support entitlement and who would be in receipt of income support if the eligibility rules prior to September 1988 had still been in force.

Mr. Jack: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will issue regulations to disregard the proceeds of any unemployment mortgage protection policy in the assessment of income benefit, excluding mortgage repayments;

(2) if he will amend regulations so that premiums for an unemployment mortgage protection policy are added to any income support paid to an unemployed householder.

Miss Widdecombe: For loans that are eligible for income support help, we already disregard the following payments under mortgage protection policies:

the amount of the capital repayments, or the endowment premiums on an endowment mortgage;

the amount of interest not being met in income support because of the 50 per cent. restriction during the first 16 weeks of the claim; the amount of the premiums due on the policy.

This allows claimants who have chosen to insure to retain an advantage over those who have not, while avoiding double provision for the same costs through income support and insurance.

We have no plans to change the arrangements for income support whereby insurance policy premiums for whatever purpose are met by the claimant from his benefit.

Care Allowance

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that the present levels of care allowance will be reviewed to take into account the actual cost of residential and nursing home care before the transfer of the care element to local authorities begins in April 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: The income support limits applicable to people in residential care and nursing homes will continue to be reviewed annually.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what amount of heat can be purchased from the allowance to people who qualify under the cold weather payments scheme for (a) gas, (b) coal, (c) electricity and (d) oil; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 16 December 1991 at column 83.

Pension Funds

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will establish an advice line in his Department for those pension fund members who may be affected by fraud within or collapse of their pension funds; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to do so. The Occupational Pensions Advisory Service, a voluntary body receiving financial support from the Occupational Pensions Board under section 57B of the Social Security Pensions Act 1975, already provides expert help and advice on occupational pension matters.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make it his policy to require each pension fund to furnish him with an annual statement on the performance of the fund and on the security of its investments; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make it his policy to require pension funds, on inquiry by members and on payment of an appropriate administration fee, to inform members of the application of the fund's investments; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Pension fund trustees already have a statutory obligation to make available free of charge, on request, the audited annual accounts of the fund to members and prospective members of the scheme, beneficiaries under the scheme and independent trade unions recognised for collective bargaining purposes in relation to members and prospective members of the scheme. The accounts must provide details of additions to and withdrawals from the scheme fund during the year in question and a statement of the assets at market value and the liabilities of the scheme, showing in relation to the assets and distribution of the investments of the scheme between prescribed categories of investment.

In addition, the trustees must make available for inspection free of charge the latest actuarial valuation together with an actuarial statement which includes the actuary's assessment of the security of accrued and prospective rights.

Those with statutory access to the accounts, actuarial valuation and actuarial statement have the opportunity to take such action as they feel appropriate in the light of information available to them.

There are additional safeguards in place for contracted-out salary related schemes. The Occupational Pensions Board is required to satisfy itself from time to time that a contracted-out scheme's resources are adequate to meet its liabilities for guaranteed minimum pensions.

We have no plans to require pension scheme trustees to furnish such information direct to the Department.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has had from the National Union of Teachers about the mobility allowance; what reply he is sending; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have received a letter from the National Union of Teachers about mobility allowance, to which we shall reply soon.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money his Department has spent on producing its citizens charter proposals, arising from production, distribution and publicity costs.

Miss Widdecombe: To date, the Department has spent £10,000.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people between 1987 and 1992 in the Glanford and Scunthorpe constituency applied for (a) attendance allowance and (b) mobility allowance; and how many in each case were successful.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Unemployed Councillors

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will consult local authority organisations on the drafting of the regulations involving changes to the payment of allowances to unemployed councillors; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will consider including a disregard of the payment of attendance to unemployed councillors serving on local authorities when claiming unemployment benefit; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when the change of payment of allowances to unemployed councillors serving on local authorities will be introduced.

Mr. Jack: The Government responded positively to recent representations from local authority organisations and individual councillors, by proposing to exempt certain allowances payable to local authority councillors from the effects of the unemployment benefit £2 daily work test. The allowances affected are the basic and special responsibility allowances which are paid by way of remuneration for the office held. The Government decided that attendance allowance payable, in contrast, for specific official duties, should continue to be taken into account as earnings for the days on which those duties are performed. The proposal does not extend to the unemployment benefit weekly earnings rule. A councillor whose weekly earnings, including all allowances, exceed the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions will, as now, not be entitled to unemployment benefit for that week. On 8 January 1992 the Social Security Advisory Committee agreed that the proposed amendment to the Social Security Benefit (Computation of Earnings) Regulations was wholly beneficial and need not be referred to them. We have advised the local authority associations of the proposal and informed them that the change should be in place very soon.

Social Fund

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the demands being made on the funds of charitable bodies because assistance has not been forthcoming from the social fund.

Mr. Scott: We have no evidence to show that social fund arrangements have placed special demands on the funds of charitable bodies.

DEFENCE

Energy Savings

Mr. Mates: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much by way of grant his Department has paid to date for energy-saving measures, including insulation, in respect of service quarters for married or single personnel; and what energy savings he estimates have been thereby achieved.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Grants for energy-saving measures are not paid to the occupants of service quarters.

Instead, my Department has since the late 1970s, undertaken an extensive programme of insulation and other upgrading of married quarters as part of scheduled maintenance. A wide range of efficiency measures has also been undertaken in respect of barrack accommodation. A 17·3 per cent saving in energy use has been achieved on the defence estate as a whole over the last five years.

Trident

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the implication of the United States decision to research, develop and test an alternative propellant for the D5 missile for the in-service date of the United Kingdom Trident system.

Mr. Alan Clark: I am not aware of any plans by the United States to develop an alternative propellant for use in the Trident II D5 missile.

Hunting

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the fees payable by fox hunts for licences to hunt on Ministry of Defence land were last reviewed; and what plans he has to review them.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Fees payable by fox hunts for licences to hunt on Ministry of Defence land are reviewed at the commencement of each licence period and will continue to be reviewed at such times.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many applications for licences for fox hunts and deer hunts were made in (a) 1988, (b) 1989, (c) 1990 and (d) 1991; how many were accepted; and how many were rejected in each year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what conditions relating to nature conservation are incorporated in the licence given to fox hunts to hunt on Ministry of Defence land.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence continually seeks specialist advice regarding conservation on MOD land and takes account of this advice when drawing up licences permitting fox hunting on Ministry of Defence land.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the revenue obtained from the issue of licences to hunts to hunt on Ministry of Defence land covers the administrative costs involved.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 8 March 1991 at column 331.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether licences given to fox hunts to hunt on Ministry of Defence land make any specific reference to (a) the digging out of foxes, (b) the blocking up of badger setts or (c) badgers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. MOD licences do stipulate, however, that the licensed activity must be conducted within the law and in accordance with any regulations or codes of good conduct.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what conditions a licence given to a fox hunt to hunt on Ministry of Defence land would be revoked.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Failure of a fox hunt to comply with the terms of the licence granted or any MOD regulations would be sufficient grounds on which to revoke the licence.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the number of Army horses transported to hunting meets in (a) 1990 and (b) 1991.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Four hundred Army horses were transported to participate in hunting meets in 1990 and 323 in 1991. These figures count separately horses taken to more than one meet.

RAF Property

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish his Department's financial assessment of the re-sale values of RAF Brawdy and RAF Chivenor.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. The information is commercial in confidence.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will enter into a management agreement with a housing association or local authority on the empty properties situated on the Bryn Trewan estate at RAF Valley, to use them for rented accommodation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. These surplus properties are currently being offered for sale in bulk on the open market by competitive tender.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many properties on the Bryn Trewan estate at RAF Valley belonging to his Department are empty; for what period of time they have been empty; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are 60 vacant married quarters in the Bryn Trewan area of RAF Valley. The majority of these have been vacant for between one and two years.

Falklands

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British service men are serving currently in the Falklands; and how long is the average tour of duty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We maintain forces at the level necessary to meet our commitment to the defence of the Falklands. Details of these force levels are classified. Most service personnel in the Falklands serve on a four-month posting.

Nuclear Testing

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from which subheads of which votes the funds for the nuclear testing programme are taken.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Funding in respect of the nuclear testing programme is provided from class I, defence vote 2—defence procurement. It is not our practice to reveal further detail of the funding arrangements.

Yellow Sun Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the Yellow Sun family of weapons.

Mr. Alan Clark: I do not recognise the category to which the hon. Member refers.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral reply to the hon. Member for Bradford, South, Official Report, 17 December, column 132, if he will state the obligations placed on the United Kingdom under the United Nations nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A copy of the non-proliferation treaty is available in the Library of the House.

Iran

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he possesses about Iran's alleged build-up in arms and military equipment, including nuclear technology and know-how that can be put to military use.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Iran has recently acquired new combat aircraft and surface to surface missiles and may be seeking new tanks. The Iranian navy is likely to obtain its first conventional submarine soon. Iran is a state party to the non-proliferation treaty and is pursuing a nuclear technology development programme, but has publicly denied that this is aimed at the acquisition of nuclear weapons. The United Kingdom has consistently made clear the significance which it attaches to all states party to the NPT complying fully with all their obligations.

Foreign Armed Services

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish details of the training provided by his Department to personnel of foreign armed services from 1 October 1987 to 1 October 1991.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Training is provided in a variety of military subjects for personnel of foreign armed services. Details are generally confidential between Her Majesty's Government and the overseas government concerned.

Human Rights

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will describe the scope of training in human rights that is included in training provided to personnel of foreign armed services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Human rights are addressed in courses available to foreign and United Kingdom military students where appropriate.

Rescue Operations, 22 Squadron

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of rescue operations carried out by 22 Squadron from RAF Leuchars in each of the last five years for which information is available; and of these how many involved the rescue of service personnel and how many involved the rescue of civilians.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The search and rescue operations carried out by 22 Squadron, based at RAF Leuchars, for the last 5 years are as follows:

Year	Callouts	Total number rescued	Civilians rescued	Military rescued
1987	113	101	75	26
1988	152	138	112	26
1989	133	93	78	15
1991	162	109	104	5

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when members of 22 Squadron stationed at RAF Leuchars were informed that search-and-rescue operations at RAF Leuchars were to be discontinued from 1 October;

(2) if he will make a statement about the future of search-and-rescue operations at RAF Leuchars.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No decision on the future of search-and-rescue operations at RAF Leuchars has yet been taken.

RAF Leuchars

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many Wessex aircraft are presently deployed at RAF Leuchars; and how many flying hours the individual aircraft have undergone;

(2) what is the current manpower strength of 22 Squadron stationed at RAF Leuchars.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: B flight 22 search and rescue squadron stationed at RAF Leuchars has 33 personnel. Two Wessex helicopters are currently deployed at RAF Leuchars. By 17 January 1992 one aircraft had flown 8,293 hours and the other 9,211 hours, since manufacture.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many rescues have been effected as a result of search-and-rescue operations from RAF Leuchars (a) in daylight hours and (b) after dusk having been commenced in daylight, since the restriction to daylight only working was imposed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: From 1 October 1989, when the daylight working only restriction was imposed, to the end of 1991, RAF Leuchars responded to 308 callouts and 184 people were rescued. Of these, 11 were callouts which commenced in daylight but continued after dusk and nine people were rescued.

Sir Peter Levene

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date Sir Peter Levene left the employment of his Department.

Mr. Alan Clark: Sir Peter Levene's last day of service with my Department was 31 March 1991.

Disability Compensation

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will consider paying part compensation to those injured members of the armed forces whose claims are being withheld pending precise assessment and agreement as to the final level of their disability.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The MOD already makes such interim payments.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the claims now outstanding under the Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987, showing names, disability claimed and date of accident.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. To do so would be a breach of medical confidentiality.

Contract Employment

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the current totals of those employed in his Department's contracts in the United Kingdom and the percentage of this figure for Scotland.

Mr. Alan Clark: Estimates of regional employment arising from my Department's equipment expenditure are published in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991, Volume 2," table 6.9, a copy of which is held in The House of Commons Library.

RAF Greenham Common

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have taken place between himself and the Commander of the United States Air Force about the withdrawal of United States Air Force personnel from RAF Greenham Common this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We keep closely in touch with the United States authorities about plans for their forces stationed in the United Kingdom.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Extradition

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the countries with which the United Kingdom has extradition arrangements in which there is no obligation on a requesting country to provide evidence amounting to prima facie guilt.

Mr. John Patten: The following countries, listed in part 1 of schedule 2 to the European Convention on Extradition Order 1990—1990 No. 1507—do not have to provide prima facie evidence:
Austria, Cyprus, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland and Turkey.

Prison Suicides

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of suicides in prisons in England and Wales during the year 1991; and if he will list the prisons and the number of suicides that took place within them.

Mrs. Rumbold: The total number of deaths in 1991 which resulted from an act of deliberate self-harm was 41. Of the 26 inquests which have so far been held into these deaths, a verdict of suicide was recorded in 20. The establishments at which the deaths occurred are listed in the table.

Police Cells

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present nightly cost of keeping a remand prisoner in police station cells.

Mrs. Rumbold: The current average daily cost of keeping a prisoner in a police cell is £228.

Rule 43 Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women, were being held under rule 43 in prisons in England and Wales on 13 January.

Mrs. Rumbold: The numbers of prisoners removed from association under rule 43 of the prison rules and rule 46 of the young offender institution rules on 13 January were as follows:

	Number
Males	2,236
Females	16

Animal Rights

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) from which sources the names on the animal rights national index are obtained;

(2) what measures he takes to ensure that the animal rights national index does not include those involved only in legitimate and legal campaigning.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The animal rights national index holds information received from police forces throughout Great Britain. The use of the index is the operational responsibility of chief officers of police.

Mr. Steve Wyatt (Photographs)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the amount of police time expended on investigating the discovery of photographs involving the Texan business man Mr. Steve Wyatt.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. This is an operational matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any plans to issue a Green Paper on the division of occupational pension rights on divorce.

The Attorney-General: I have no plans to issue a Green Paper on this subject. Occupational pensions fall within the ministerial responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Dr. Malde Modhwadia

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General what was the cost to public funds of the retrial of Dr. Malde Modhwadia of 245 Goodwood road, Leicester, which took place on 6, 7 and 8 January.

The Attorney-General: The legal aid costs of Dr. Modhwadia's solicitors and counsel have yet to be determined. However the prosecution costs, that is counsel's fees and witness expenses, were £3,626·72 and the costs incurred by the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Consolidated Fund amount to approximately £5,500.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the time taken to bring the case of Dr. Malde Modhwadia of 245 Goodwood road, Leicester, to retrial.

The Attorney-General: On 25 June 1991 the Court of Appeal criminal division allowed Dr. Modhwadia's appeal against conviction and ordered a fresh trial. The Crown Court at Northampton was notifed of that judgment on 24 July. Subsequently, on 19 August, those representing Dr. Modhwadia informed the court that they would not be ready for trial until January 1992. The trial took place between 6 January and 8 January 1992.

Insolvency Statistics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list by year, for the last 10 years, the number of companies that have been wound up by the High Court due to trading while insolvent.

The Attorney-General: The only figures available, as set out in the table, for the number of companies that have been wound up over the last 10 years in England and Wales are for the years 1983 to 1990. Full figures for 1991 are not yet available.

Total number of orders made in the High Court on Petitions presented for winding up of companies including orders for winding up on grounds of insolvency

Rape (Juveniles)

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Attorney-General if he will review the advice given to judges in the sentencing of male juveniles convicted of rape; and what representations he has received on this subject since 13 December.

The Attorney-General: Subject to the statutory limits laid down by Parliament, sentencing policy is a matter for the Court of Appeal criminal division which from time to time issues guidance to the judiciary. This takes the form of a judicial decision, with general comment which may be expressed as formal guidelines setting the class of offence in the general context of the court's overall sentencing practice. The court has issued guidelines for rape and they are contained in the judgment in the case of R v. Billam which is reported in the 1986 "Criminal Appeal Reports" at page 347. The court has given no separate guidance for the sentencing of juveniles convicted of rape.

I have received 10 letters on this subject in the period between 13 December 1991 and 17 January 1992 and my noble Friend the Lord Chancellor has received 19 over the same period.

ENVIRONMENT

Vacant Public Land

17. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure vacant, dormant, derelict and under-utilised sites in public ownership in urban areas are built on first before green-field sites beyond city boundaries are used.

35. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure vacant, dormant, derelict and under-utilised sites in public ownership in urban areas are built on first before green-belt sites beyond city boundaries are used.

Sir George Young: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs).

City of Birmingham (Bankers)

18. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the tendering procedure that has resulted in the appointment of the Co-operative bank as bankers to the city of Birmingham.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received one representation.

UN Conference on Environment and Development

19. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the progress of preparations for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Trippier: The United Kingdom Government are taking an active role in the preparations for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in June 1992. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has indicated that he intends to lead the United Kingdom delegation and is encouraging other Heads of Government to attend. We have submitted our national report for UNCED; we have prepared reports for the preparatory committee on technology transfer and population; we are providing financial assistance so that developing countries can play an effective part in the preparations; and we are consulting non-governmental organisations, business and local government on their preparations for UNCED. We have also pledged £40·3 million to the global environment facility which is helping developing countries to address global environmental problems.

Housing Associations (Funding Allocations)

20. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of current developments within the control of housing associations out of public funds are (a) for private ownership and (b) for public letting; what are the total numbers in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Housing Corporation estimates that this financial year its approved development programme will provide 2,400 homes for low-cost home ownership and 24,700 homes available for letting. These figures represent, respectively, 9 and 91 per cent. of the total number of completions.

Next year, the Housing Corporation will introduce a major programme of "do-it-yourself" shared ownership. This will be targeted on existing council and housing association tenants, thereby releasing rented accommodation for the homeless.

Local Government Finance

21. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities on the present revenue grant system.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has received 301 written representations from local authorities and their associations on the revenue grant settlement. In addition, Ministers have held meetings with 62 local authorities to discuss the settlement.

34. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the amount of capital receipts currently being held by local authorities.

Mr. Portillo: Based on the most recent returns submitted by local authorities to my Department, it is provisionally estimated that the amount of capital receipts held by authorities in England at 31 March 1991 was £6·5 billion. Of this total, it is estimated that authorities had set aside £5·1 billion to redeem debt and that £1·4 billion was available to finance capital expenditure.

RECHAR

22. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the present situation with regard to the release of RECHAR funding; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The United Kingdom's RECHAR programmes are being blocked by Commissioner Millan's unjustifiable refusal to approve them.

31. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance is given by his Department to local authorities on applications under the RECHAR programme for EC support for environmental projects in former coal-mining areas.

Mr. Yeo: None at present, as the United Kingdom's RECHAR programmes are being blocked by Commissioner Millan's unjustifiable refusal to approve them.

Development Projects

23. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with Commissioner Ripa di Meana concerning the effect of directive 85/337/EEC on British development projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: There have been a number of exchanges between Ministers and the Commissioner about the application of the directive. I discussed the matter with him yesterday and contacts will continue while the Commission considers the Government's recent response to the Commission's letter of 17 October about the application of the directive in the United Kingdom.

Housing Association Properties

24. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many additional housing association properties for rent he estimates will be completed during 1991-92.

Sir George Young: The Housing Corporation estimates that its approved development programme will provide 21,800 new homes for rent in the current financial year. This includes 1,800 homes brought back into use by the corporation's short-life repair programme—"mini-HAG". In addition, 2,900 homes will be released for reletting by the corporation's tenants incentive scheme.

Poll Tax

25. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on poll tax arrears in England and Wales.

Mr. Key: At the end of September 1991 authorities in England had, on average, received 95 per cent. of the community charge that they expected to collect for 1990-91 and 39 per cent. of that amount for 1991-92.

New Council Houses

26. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new council houses will be completed in the United Kingdom in the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Yeo: Based on reported activity to November 1991, English local authorities are expected to complete 7,000 to 8,000 dwellings in 1991-92.

We do not plan a specific level of council house building. It is for local authorities to propose how best to use the resources made available under their housing investment programme allocations. Housing associations are now the main providers of new subsidised rented housing, and public expenditure provision for the Housing Corporation is planned to increase from £1·1 billion last year to over £2 billion by 1993-94, when output of housing by associations will rise to over 50,000.

For information about other parts of the United Kingdom, I refer the hon. Member to the Secretaries of State concerned.

Local Authority Homes

27. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the number of local authority empty homes at June 1979, June 1983, June 1987 and June 1991; and what is the most recent available figure.

Mr. Yeo: The Department gets this information from local authorities in their annual housing investment programme returns, and this gives the position at 1 April. The latest available figures relate to April 1991.

England totals

April	Number
1979	100,000
1983	114,000
1987	112,000
1991	83,000

London (Development Policy)

28. Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider changing the policy on development to a greater emphasis on the east of London rather than the west of London.

Mr. Heseltine: I am reviewing the existing regional guidance for the south-east—PPG9—which already aims to redress the balance of attraction between the eastern and western parts of the region. I have appointed consultants to study the east Thames corridor—the area stretching from docklands to Tilbury and the Medway towns—to help in considering options for the future location of development in the south-east.

Rents-to-mortgages Scheme

2. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to extend the rents-to-mortgages scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The pilot schemes in Basildon and Milton Keynes have so far helped about 100 new town tenants into owner-occupation, and they have successfully tested the working of rents to mortgages. We will now consider whether to extend the scheme to local authority tenants.

River Quality

30. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of the National Rivers Authority to discuss the quality of water in rivers.

Mr. Trippier: I meet Lord Crickhowell regularly to discuss matters relating to the National Rivers Authority's responsibilities for the water environment, including river quality.

32. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made in cleaning up rivers.

Mr. Trippier: The National Rivers Authority's 1990 river quality survey showed that despite a small net deterioration in water quality, around 90 per cent. of our rivers, canals and estuaries are of good or fair quality—compared with the average of 75 per cent. for the European Community.

The survey was too soon to reflect the major investment on which the industry has embarked following privatisation, or the vigorous action being taken by the NRA against polluters. The system of statutory water quality objectives will help ensure that a real and sustained improvement in water quality is achieved.

SSSIs

33. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the protection of sites of special scientific interest in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: The appropriate territorial conservation agencies are continuing the good work of the Nature Conservancy Council in notifying sites of special scientific interest. As at 31 March 1991 the Nature Conservancy Council had notified a total of 5,671 SSSIs covering 1·8 million hectares—8 per cent. of Great Britain. The additional safeguards for SSSIs announced by the Government in September 1991 came into effect on 2 January 1992.

Grants

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the level of grant per head of population for each of the standard economic regions and in Greater London in the financial years 1980-81, 1983-84, 1986-87, 1989-90 for (a) rate support grant, (b) housing revenue subsidy, (c) total specific and supplementary grants and (d) urban programme;

(2) if he will list the level of grant per head of population in the financial years 1980-81, 1983-84, 1986-87 and 1989-90 for (a) rate support grant, (b) housing revenue subsidy, (c) total specific and supplementary grants and (d) urban programme for (i) Blackburn, (ii) Burnley, (iii) Knowsley, (iv) Liverpool, (v) Manchester, (vi) Preston, (vii) Rochdale, (viii) Salford, (ix) Middlesbrough, (x) Birmingham, (xi) Coventry, (xii) Sandwell, (xiii) Wolverhampton, (xiv) Leicester, (xv) Nottingham, (xvi) Bradford and (xvii) Kingston-upon-Hull;

(3) if he will list the level of grant per head of population in the financial years 1980-81, 1983-84, 1986-87 and 1989-90 for (a) rate support grant, (b) housing revenue subsidy, (c) total specific and supplementary grants and (d) the urban programme for (i) Brent, (ii) Greenwich, (iii) Hackney, (iv) Hammersmith and Fulham, (v) Haringey, (vi) Islington, (vii) Kensington and Chelsea, (viii) Lambeth, (ix) Lewisham, (x) Newham, (xi) Southwark, (xii) Tower Hamlets and (xiii) Wandsworth.

Mr. Key: The available information has been placed in the Library of the House.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment at what date an application was made by Her Majesty's Government to the Commission of the European Community for permission to establish the existing enterprise zone in the London boroughs of Newham and Tower Hamlets; and if he will list the article(s) of the treaty of Rome which require applications to be made to a Member of the European Commission for the establishment of additional zones in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Key: Under article 93(2) of the EC treaty, the Commission may require member states to alter or abolish existing or proposed systems of aid.

The Government wrote on 26 March 1980 to inform the European Commission, as required by article 93(3), of their intention to set up a number of enterprise zones including one comprising parts of the London boroughs of Newham and Tower Hamlets. The Commission raised no objections.

Home Insulation

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what targets his Department has set for home insulation; and what progress has been made towards meeting these targets.

Mr. Yeo: The Government's aim of upgrading the Building Regulations standard for energy efficiency of new buildings by 20 per cent. was achieved though the revised regulations which came into force in 1990. We are now reviewing the scope for further strengthening of the standard. The green house demonstration programme for existing council housing requires a 25 per cent. increase in energy efficiency in participating schemes. I anticipate that by the end of 1994 all programme schemes will have met this target. The Department does not set central targets for other insulation programmes carried out by local authorities and housing associations.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the national programme for limiting carbon dioxide emissions to which he committed the United Kingdom at the joint session of EC environment and energy councils on 13 December; and if he will use his powers under section 3(5)(a) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to make a plan for establishing limits for the total amount of carbon dioxide which may be released into the environment in any period in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: The environment White Paper, "This Common Inheritance" (Cm 1200) set out the Government's strategy and a first tranche of measures towards Britain's conditional target of returning CO_2 emissions to 1990 levels by the year 2005. The first year report—Cm 1655—sets out progress with this strategy. My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to use his Environmental Protection Act 1990 powers to make a plan for establishing limits for carbon dioxide emissions.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, columns 422-23, if he will specify which decisions listed in the answer were on application by (a) British Coal and (b) private companies; and if he will give the corresponding figures for appeal refusals.

Mr. Yeo: The information requested is as follows:

Housing Corporation

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Housing Corporation.

Mr. Yeo: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning meets the chairman of the Housing Corporation from time to time to discuss various corporation matters.

Housing Co-operatives

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made to expand the number of housing co-operatives and other tenant-led initiatives.

Mr. Yeo: On local authority estates, 30 tenant management co-operatives and estate management boards have been established since last April, compared with 15 in the previous year, while a further 100 groups are exploring or developing a management option.

There are 265 ownership co-operatives registered with the Housing Corporation compared with 255 three years ago. In addition, there are now 60 tenant management co-operatives in the housing association stock.

Bedfordshire County Council (Sales)

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total amount of money that Bedfordshire county council has raised since 1979 by way of (a) land sales and (b) sale of buildings; of that amount what is the county council allowed to spend; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The capital receipts raised by Bedfordshire from the sale of fixed assets in each year since 1984-85 are as follows. Information is not available for years prior to 1984-85. It is not possible to identify land sales separately from sale of buildings.

At 31 March 1990 Bedfordshire held £3,000 of capital receipts—not only from the sale of fixed assets—of which £1,000 were usable, the remainder being set aside for debt redemption. Of the £5·704 million estimated to have been received since then from the sale of fixed assets, £2·662 million is usable.

Year	Receipts from the sale of Fixed Assets £'000
1984-85	2,862
1985-86	6,630

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total amount of money that the four district councils within the county of Bedfordshire have raised since 1979 by (a) sale of council houses and (b) land sales; of that amount how much each authority is currently allowed to spend; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The reported total discounted sale values of dwellings, and the value of land sold between April 1979 and September 1991 is as follows. Actual cash receipts from sales of dwellings in any year will depend on the extent to which sales were financed by loans from these authorities. The table also shows the reported amounts of unspent housing capital receipts at 1 April 1991 which were available to spend after making the required provision for debt repayment. In addition authorities can spend 25 per cent. of most housing capital receipts received in 1991-92.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to arrange that interest is paid when repaying sums which have been taken which are in excess of the final agreed figures for the uniform business rate.

Mr. Key: Regulations providing for the payment of interest where an overpayment of non-domestic rates has occurred due to an alteration of a rating list came into force in October 1990. Interest is paid for each financial year at a rate one per cent. below bank base rate as at 15 March prior to the start of that year.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to ensure that the reform of local government structure embodies the principle of subsidiarity.

Mr. Key: The proposed local government commission will be required to recommend the structural changes it thinks desirable having regard to the need to reflect the identities and interests of local communities and to secure effective and convenient local government.

Estate Action (Wolverhampton)

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent Wolverhampton has benefited from Estate Action.

Mr. Yeo: Up to this year the Council has received £11·695 million of estate action support for 10 schemes. I look forward to continuing this support in future years and a further £6·729 million has already been earmarked for the next three years.

Planning Policy Guidance

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the revision of planning policy guidance note 7 will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for Wales have today published a revised planning policy guidance note 7, entitled "The Countryside and the Rural Economy". This replaces the first edition of PPG 7, published in 1988.

We are grateful to the many bodies and individuals who responded to the consultation draft of the new PPG. Lists of their submissions are being placed in the Library of the House, where copies will be available on request.

The new PPG emphasises the importance the Government attach to the countryside and the health of the rural economy. It reminds planning authorities of the need for a balanced approach to rural development and conservation. The advice takes forward the environmental strategy in our White Paper "This Common Inheritance" and sets out policies for planning in the countryside in the 1990s.

Development is necessary to sustain the rural economy. It needs to be integrated with protection of the countryside for the sake of its beauty, the diversity of its landscape, the wealth of its natural resources and its ecological, agricultural and recreational value. Planning authorities need to weigh these considerations, paying particular regard to special designations such as national parks.

The PPG gives greater protection to national parks, implementing the new policy on major developments there which we announced yesterday in response to the national parks review. Such developments should only take place in exceptional circumstances, after being shown to be in the public interest.

Among other things, the new PPG also emphasises new directions and opportunities in the rural economy, as employment in traditional industries shrinks; points out that the re-use of rural buildings can reduce pressure for new building in the open countryside; advises on stricter planning controls over the siting and appearance of agricultural buildings, which came into effect this month; strengthens guidance on new dwellings in the countryside for agricultural workers, to counter abuse.

Combustion Plants

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that a programme for reducing total annual emissions from large combustion plants is being implemented in all EC countries.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 21 January 1992]: Enforcement of the large combustion plants directive in other member states is a matter for the European Commission, but the Government take every opportunity to stress the importance of other member states' matching the United Kingdom's performance in implementing this and other environmental directives. Our proposal for a Community "audit-type" inspectorate to ensure effective compliance with European environmental legislation would help to achieve improved and consistent standards throughout the Community.

WALES

Council House Sales

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the capital receipts held on deposit from the sale of council housing to those whose homes they are for each council in Wales, for each year since 1979; for what reason it has not been decided to make provision for these moneys to be returned to the ratepayers/chargepayers; and what interest has accrued in each year to each of those councils.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Under the arrangements brought into effect on 1 April 1990 by part IV of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, local authorities are required to set aside a proportion of their capital receipts —the "reserved part"—as prudent financial provision for credit liabilities. The balance—the "usable part"—is available for any capital purpose. Authorities must also repay at least a prescribed minimum amount of debt from revenue each year.

Authorities are not, however, required to redeem debt from the reserved part immediately. The timing of debt redemption from capital receipts is left to each authority to decide in its own circumstances.

In Wales, to encourage the provision of low-cost home ownership, certain capital receipts have a nil reserved part allowing full recycling of the receipt. These include sales of undeveloped housing land, sales of housing on shared equity terms and sales of housing where the purchaser is required to make significant repairs or improvements as a condition of sale. Details are given in schedule 1, part II of the Local Authorities (Capital Finance) Regulations 1990.

Set out in the table, for each authority, are the figures for the total outstanding housing revenue account debt at 31 March 1991, the unredeemed, reserved part of capital receipts at 31 March 1990 and 31 March 1991 and the total of HRA 1990-91 in-year receipts applied to debt redemption in that year.

Under the capital control system in force before 1 April 1990, authorities could use a proportion of their in-year and accumulated cash capital receipts for new capital expenditure each year for certain "prescribed" expenditure and could spend without such restriction on "non prescribed" items. There was no reserved part.

The information requested on interest accrued is not held centrally.

Works of Art

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of publicly owned works of art is available for viewing by the public; what steps have been taken to maximise income for the arts by renting out works of art when that would not impair public viewing; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Secretary of State has direct responsibility only for works of art in the ownership of Cadw Welsh Historic Monuments, of which 97 per cent. are available for public view. Information on items owned by non-departmental public bodies in Wales is not held centrally.

There are no plans for a scheme of the kind suggested.

Pregnancy (Health Care)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will implement a campaign to educate pregnant women and their health carers in Wales about toxoplasmosis and its prevention;

(2) which health authorities in Wales provide information on infectious disease during pregnancy to pregnant women; which health authorities provide specific information about the prevention of toxoplasmosis to pregnant women; which health authorities in Wales routinely test pregnant women for toxoplasmosis; and which test pregnant women on demand for toxoplasmosis.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Department issued in October 1991 the leaflet "While you are Pregnant: Safe eating and how to avoid infection from food and animals". This leaflet includes information on toxoplasmosis, and directors of midwifery and family health services authorities have been asked to distribute the leaflet, which is free of charge, to pregnant women in Wales. In addition, the Health Education Authority's pregnancy book is provided to women on their first visit to an ante-natal clinic. The Health Promotion Authority for Wales has circulated this widely in Wales and all health authority health promotion units have copies as well as GPs. The booklet warns women of the possible dangers of infectious diseases including toxoplasmosis and advises on how they can be avoided.

Information on which health authorities routinely test pregnant women for toxoplasmosis and which test pregnant women on demand for toxoplasmosis is not held centrally.

Council Housing

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average amount allocated per household for maintenance work on council houses in each district council in Wales for each year since 1988; and what are the estimated allocations per council household for 1992-93.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested is set out in the table.

These are the allowances set for subsidy purposes only. It is for authorities to set their own spending levels in their particular circumstances. The basis for calculating the allowances was changed in 1990-91 and further refined for 1991-92 and 1992-93. The figures for years before 1990-91 are not comparable with the later years.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been paid by each district council to his Department in uniform business rate; how much was redistributed to each district council in the last financial year; and if he will publish estimated figures for 1992-93.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The contributions of district councils in Wales to the non-domestic rate pool in 1990-91 and 1991-92, together with the entitlement of each district and county authority from the pool for those years are set out in the table. Details for 1992-93 are not yet available. Contributions by district authorities in respect of 1990-91 will be adjusted shortly to take account of certified outturn figures.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was allocated for each district council in Wales in other services capital receipts budgets in each year from 1988; and what are the estimated allocations for 1991-92.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Prior to 1990-91 the capital receipts of individual local authorities were not taken into account in the distribution of capital resources. For each district council, the non-housing services capital receipts taken into account in setting its basic credit approvals are given as follows for 1990-91 and 1991-92. These figures reflect only a portion of the resources which authorities have at their disposal for financing capital expenditure.

Energy Production

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what evaluation has been undertaken by his Department on the potential impact of the European Community large combustion plant directive on energy production in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: None. The United Kingdom's national plan, which incorporates the programme for achieving the stepped reductions of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions as required by the EC large combustion plant directive from existing plant, allocates reduction targets to England and Wales, Scotland, and Northern Ireland on sectoral and, for electricity, company bases. Figures for Wales are not listed separately.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department has undertaken any study as to the effect of holiday housing developments on the Welsh language in the surrounding localities; and what evidence he has indicating the causes of any decline in Welsh language speakers.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The results of the 1991 census will provide information on the effects of migration on the rural population of Wales and on the number of Welsh speakers.

Point of Ayr Colliery

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of the research work into coal liquefaction at the Point of Ayr colliery.

Mr. David Hunt: Commissioning of the coal liquefaction plant has been successfully accomplished and an 18-month operating project has begun. It is too soon to assess results, but I understand that encouraging technical progress is being made.

Immigration

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to publish data showing (a) the volume of in-migration into Welsh counties and districts and (b) the age structure of the inward-migrating population; and if he has any plans to conduct a survey to ascertain the reasons for inward-migration into Wales and its effect on the indigenous population.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Data on in and out migration, based on the re-registration of NHS general practitioners' patients and by broad age groups, are published at a county level by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in table 5.1 of "Key Population and Vital Statistics" annual series VS/PP1. The OPCS also produces estimates of net migration for counties and county districts and publish these in table 4 of the OPCS monitor series PP1. Both are available in the Library of the House.

Information on the scale, origin, destination and characteristics of migration flows for the year prior to the 1991 census will become available over the next year when the full processing of the census returns has been completed.

Waste Disposal Sites

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of derelict land in Wales is accounted for by (a) abandoned mines and quarries, (b) mineral waste tips and (c) old waste disposal sites.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: A total of 55 to 60 per cent. of derelict land in Wales is accounted for by abandoned mines and quarries and about 15 per cent. by mineral waste tips. Details of old waste disposal sites are not maintained centrally.

Joint Replacement Surgery

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for the period 1 January to 31 March the number of patients who will have major joint replacement surgery carried out at the Prince of Wales Orthopaedic hospital, Rhydlafar, Cardiff, on a contractual basis with his Department in its role as a treatment centre.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Department contracts with the treatment centres on a financial year basis. In the current year the orthopaedic treatment centre at the Prince of Wales hospital, Rhydlafar is contracted to perform 250 major joint replacement operations and 40 other minor procedures. The centre is on course to meet this target.

Cataract Operations

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for the period 1 January to 31 March the number of cataract operations his Department has contracted with Ysbyty Gwynedd and the Bridgend general hospital treatment centres to be carried out.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Department contracts with the treatment centres on a financial year basis. In the current financial year the ophthalmic treatment centre at Bridgend general hospital is contracted to perform 275 cataract and 25 other operations and the treatment centre at Ysbyty Gwynedd is contracted for 450 cataract and 50 other operations. Both centres are on course to meet their targets.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients from each Welsh health authority have been treated for cataract removal at the new Bridgend treatment centre since its opening; and how many have been referred to the centre by each authority.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The number of patients treated in the three months to December 1991 was as follows:

	Number
Mid Glamorgan	98
West Glamorgan	56
South Glamorgan	11
East Dyfed	11
Gwent	5
Powys	1

On 17 January the number of patients scheduled for admission before the end of the financial year was as follows:

	Number
Mid Glamorgan	37
West Glamorgan	39
South Glamorgan	31
East Dyfed	17
Gwent	4
Powys	2

Limestone Pavement

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many areas of limestone pavement have been notified for protection in Wales; how many have had orders made; and when limestone pavement protection will be complete in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: There are 10 known sites of limestone pavement in Wales. They are all protected as parts of sites of special scientific interest. As the sites are relatively small and not under threat, the Secretary of State does not propose to make any limestone pavement orders at present.

TRANSPORT

Coastguard

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of surveys undertaken during the review of the coastguard service before drawing up the proposals contained in the current consultation paper.

Mr. McLoughlin: All levels of staff within the six regions of HM coastguard from auxiliary coastguards to district management teams were consulted over the recommendations made by the sector review, and were asked for comment. The views and opinions received were duly considered before the final regional implementation plans were submitted to coastguard headquarters. The views and opinions of a large number of other organisations, local authorities and members of the public were also received and considered.

The sector review document has been available in the library of the House of Commons since March 1991. Various representations have been made by hon. Members, although none, until now, by the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond).

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that coastguard auxiliaries are not penalised in any way for speaking against the proposals contained in the coastguard review consultation document.

Mr. McLoughlin: Auxiliary coastguards are volunteers, not employees of the Department. When engaged on coastguard business they are afforded the same treatment as regular coastguard officers. While they are not under obligation to do so, they would be expected to communicate matters of concern through their immediate line management in the normal way. Auxiliary coastguards are, of course, free to make representations to their Members of Parliament in the usual way.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will specify the consultations, including dates of any meetings and correspondence, which took place on the north coast of Scotland on the review of Her Majesty's coastguard sector organisation, with (a) local authorities, (b) coastguard staff and (c) the public.

Mr. McLoughlin: All coastguard district management teams and sector officers within Aberdeen region, including the north coast of Scotland, were consulted personally by regional management over the sector review during the consultative period lasting from February to June 1991. Consultations were numerous, and all views of the coastguard staff so aired were considered.

Since this was an internal review local authorities and the public were not directly approached until the review recommendations were announced in the House.

Hon. Members representing constituencies on the north coast of Scotland have had access to the sector review document, which was placed in the House of Commons Library in March 1991.

Oxleas Wood

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last visited Oxleas wood, south-east London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I have not visited the site, although my right hon. and learned Friend has. I accept that many people are very concerned about the effect of the east London river crossing on Oxleas wood, but no new evidence has come forward to cause the decision that was taken in 1988 to be changed.

Red Route Network

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish details of the proposed red route network in London.

Mr. Rifkind: I have issued today a consultation document setting out the Government's proposals for the composition of the red route network in London. Copies are available in the Library. The period of consultation runs until 31 March.

A38

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he hopes to announce the alternative routes for the proposed improvement of the A38 trunk road between Saltash and Trerulefoot; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 20 January 1992]: I am planning to consult the public on proposals for the Saltash to Trerulefoot section of the A38 later this year and to announce a preferred route for the scheme once public views have been considered.

THE ARTS

Slaithwaite Philharmonic Orchestra

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has any plans to visit the Slaithwaite philharmonic orchestra in recognition of the orchestra's celebration of its centenary.

Mr. Renton: I am sorry not to be able to attend the concerts on 25 January and 28 March, but I have sent a greetings message to the orchestra and am delighted that it has been included in their excellent centenary publication alongside messages from others, including my hon. Friend.

The orchestra is to be congratulated in securing the services of distinguished soloists, like the Tchaikovsky competition winner, Peter Donohoe, for its centenary concerts.

I wish it as much success in its next hundred years as it has achieved in its first.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Stamp Duty

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to arrange for the Inland Revenue not to charge stamp duty on assumed value added tax on rent on leases.

Mr. Maude: No; the stamp duty charge on prospective VAT on rent, under a lease of non-domestic property, reflects legal advice given to the Inland Revenue. Where a landlord agrees in advance not to exercise his option to levy VAT, this stamp duty charge does not arise.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the changes in exchange rate relative to (a) the deutschmark and (b) the ecu allowed to each member of the exchange rate mechanism subsequent to entry giving the date and in each case the relative appreciation or depreciation.

Mr. Maples: The table gives the central rates of currencies on joining the ERM, against the deutschmark and the ECU. For each realignment it gives the date of realignment, the currencies involved, the percentage changes in the central rates of those currencies relative to other currencies, and the new central rates against the deutschmark and the ECU.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the valuation in real terms of each currency in the exchange rate mechanism against the deutschmark at the present date compared to the last quarter of 1986.

Mr. Maples: The table gives the estimated real exchange rate at the close of trading on 14 January 1992, for each currency in the ERM, expressed as a percentage of the rate for the last quarter of 1986. The rates have been calculated by comparing movements in the GDP deflator for Germany with those for other ERM members over the period specified in the question, and the movement in exchange rates between the deutschmark and the other currencies.

It should be noted that the results produced by comparisons of this kind depend crucially on the choice of base period, in this case the last quarter of 1986 at which time the sterling exchange rate index was at its lowest since 1975.

ENERGY

Anthracite

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the demand for anthracite in the United Kingdom until 2000.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department does not produce forecasts of the future demand for anthracite.

Coopers and Lybrand

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the projects, the purposes, and the cost of his Department's use of the Coopers and Lybrand group since 1989.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department was advised by the Coopers and Lybrand group in connection with the sales of the 12 regional electricity companies and the two generating companies in England and Wales. Fees paid to individual advisers are commercially confidential.

River Wyre Barrage

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the estimated cost of building the proposed barrage across the River Wyre; and what would be the value of the electricity produced by it;

(2) what public access there will be to the proposed barrage across the River Wyre;

(3) what will be the generating capacity of the proposed barrage across the River Wyre;

(4) what effects on the surrounding landscape he expects the cables with pylons etc. emanating from the proposed barrage across the River Wyre to have;

(5) what safeguards will be built into the proposed barrage across the River Wyre to ensure that large floating objects do not damage the turbines;

(6) what effects on migrating fish he expects the proposed barrage across the River Wyre to have.

Mr. Moynihan: The report detailing the findings of the pre-feasibility study into a possible Wyre barrage has been released today. A copy has been placed in the Library. The study estimates that the cost of the barrage, having a generating capacity of 63·6MW, would be £90 million—1991 prices—and could provide 131 GWh/y of electricity at a cost of 6·49p/kWh assuming an 8 per cent. discount rate. The study includes the construction of a 9 m wide promenade across the barrage, and considers the use of the barrage as a road crossing. If built, electricity cables from a Wyre barrage should have no effect on the surrounding landscape, as it is anticipated that cables connecting the barrage to the nearby existing electricity substation would be underground. Consideration of the protection of barrage turbines from large objects would need to form part of a more detailed design study. At this stage it is thought that a "trash" screen would provide sufficient protection. Two fish passes are included in the outline design of the Wyre barrage to provide passage for migrating fish, and these are detailed in the report. The report finds that further work is required to more fully assess the impact of a barrage on migrating fish.

Petroleum Engineering Directorate

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the timescale set for completion of the consultants' report commissioned by his Department into the cost-effectiveness of relocating the petroleum engineering directorate to Aberdeen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: I have agreed that there will be a thorough review of all the issues relating to this matter. My Department will be interviewing the shortlisted consultants in the near future. It is not possible to indicate how long the study will take until the competition has been completed and the programme discussed with the firm appointed.

Offshore Oil Industry

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he has taken to monitor and encourage implementation of the memorandum of undertaking on recognition and access in the offshore oil industry.

Mr. Moynihan: The memorandum of understanding on trade union access to offshore installations provides the framework within which visits are facilitated. When considering applications for licences to explore and produce oil and gas on the United Kingdom continental shelf, my Department takes into account whether potential licensees agree to subscribe to the terms of the memorandum of understanding. All current operators have agreed to do so.

The first paragraph of the memorandum of understanding, which refers to trade union recognition, is not operative because the relevant provisions of the Employment Protection Act, 1975 were repealed by the Employment Act 1980.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action has been undertaken by his Department to promote the use of colliery spoil, slate waste, power station ash and slag as substitute materials.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

The Government are fully committed to the use of these materials as alternatives to primary aggregates. A report commissioned by the Department of the Environment into the "Occurrence and Utilisation of Mineral and Construction Wastes", was published in 1991. This showed major supplies of these wastes were available for use as construction aggregates and recommended how usage could be increased. The Government are actively examining these ideas and will make an announcement later this year.

PRIME MINISTER

East Timor

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister if he will support a United Nations Commission to East Timor to investigate the killings in Santa Cruz on 12 November 1991.

The Prime Minister: We support the UN Secretary-General's proposal to send a representative to examine the situation in East Timor.

Severely Disabled People (Personal Assistants)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister if he is satisfied with the co-ordination between the Secretaries of State for Health and for Social Security concerning policy towards direct payments to severely disabled people to employ their own personal assistants; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Armed Forces (Liability to Injury) Bill

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy with regard to the Armed Forces (Liability to Injury) Bill.

The Prime Minister: As the Armed Forces (Liability to Injury) Bill will not receive its Second Reading until Friday 24 January 1992, it would not be appropriate for me to make a statement.

British Steel

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Prime Minister what meetings he has had with British Steel in the last six months; and on what dates.

The Prime Minister: None, but my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has had four meetings with British Steel during the last six months.

HEALTH

NHS Supply Centres

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the British Surgical Trades Association, or from individual members of the medical supply industry about unfair competition from the national health service supply centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received a number of representations from trade associations, wholesalers and manufacturers alleging unfair terms of trading by individual health authorities selling on a proportion of their supplies to non-NHS bodies. Most of the representations arose prior to the issue of new guidelines on resale of goods to non-NHS organisations to all health authority general managers in March 1991. The aim of the guidelines is to ensure fair competition without damage to the NHS, and the NHS management executive has asked the NHS supplies authority to continue to monitor NHS activity in this area.

Walton Hospital

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what extra funding has been sought to cover redundancy payments at Walton hospital in connection with its planned entry into the Aintree hospitals trust.

Mr. Dorrell: I am advised that there are no planned redundancies at Walton hospital.

Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the projects, the purposes, and the cost of his Department's use of the Coopers and Lybrand group since 1989.

Mr. Dorrell: A list of projects using Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte since 1989 and their purpose is shown in the table.

The total value of the consultancy contracts listed amount to £3,683,703. The cost of the individual contracts is subject to commercial confidentiality.

Project title	Purpose

GMSO1 Project.	Project for collating information in relation to the DH's GP Fund-holder Initiative.
OIS Project.	Project for implementing Office Information Strategy.
The PHS9102 Project.	Project to improve DH/PSNC information on recruitment, retention and motivation of community pharmacist as an input to annual pay negotiations.

Doncaster Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the salary payable to each of the members of the Doncaster health authority and the Doncaster family health services authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Non-executive members of district health and family health services authorities are not paid salaries, but are remunerated in recognition of their contribution to the NHS. Remuneration currently stands at £5,000 per annum. Information about the salaries paid to executive members is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. G. Smith, the chairman of Doncaster health authority and Mr. K. Jones, the chairman of Doncaster family health services authority, for details.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many public meetings NHS trusts are required to hold each year; what form such meetings should take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Each NHS trust is required to hold an annual public meeting, except in the first year of operation, to present its annual report, audited annual accounts and any report made on those accounts by the auditor. An additional public meeting must be called if the auditors make a report during the course of the audit which they consider should be brought to the attention of the public.

Public Health Laboratory Service

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many samples were tested by the Public Health Laboratory Service on behalf of local authorities in each year since 1988; and if he will state the charging policy of his Department for this work together with the scale of charges.

Mr. Dorrell: The Public Health Laboratory Service tested the following number of samples collected by local authorities:

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91
England	318,027	320,434	309,905
Wales	29,149	24,419	22,697
Total	347,176	344,853	332,602

In future the Public Health Laboratory Service, like health authorities, will provide services under contract to those who require them. The way in which this general principle will apply to services provided to local authorities is still under discussion.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of food poisoning have been notified in each year since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The total number of cases of food poisoning notified to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for England and Wales, since 1980 is as follows:

1980	10,318

Secure Places (Children)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local authority secure places for children are available in each of the standard regions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: On 1 January 1992 there were 295 approved local authority secure places for children in England. These were split between regions as shown in the table.

Toxoplasmosis

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost of toxoplasmosis disabilities to the national health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The cost has not been estimated. It would be difficult to disaggregate the cost of toxoplasmosis from other costs involved in health care activities.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities in England provide (a) information on infectious disease during pregnancy and (b) specific information about the prevention of toxoplasmosis to pregnant women; which health authorities routinely test pregnant women for toxoplasmosis; which test pregnant women on demand for toxoplasmosis; and if he will require those authorities which do not screen to do so.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: All pregnant women seen at antenatal clinics receive a copy of the Department of Health's leaflet entitled "While you are Pregnant" and also a copy of the Health Education Authority's pregnancy book, both of which provide advice on the dangers of toxoplasmosis, and other infections, and on how to avoid catching this infection. Copies of both booklets are available in the Library.

Health authorities do not routinely offer antenatal tests for toxoplasmosis. It is not known how many offer such a test on demand.

We have no plans to introduce screening of pregnant women for toxoplasmosis. The Department keeps this policy under review, and has sought the advice of experts. Their view is that there is no available evidence that the benefits conferred by screening clearly outweigh any risks involved.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of the screening blood test for toxoplasmosis.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The most commonly used screen for toxoplasmosis is the latex agglutination test. The cost of purchasing a commercial kit for this test is of the order of £35 per 20 tests; this cost does not take account of clinic, transport, laboratory and reporting costs. Should this test give a positive result there is then a need for confirmatory testing. Additional costs for such confirmatory testing could be of the order of £20 per patient.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action the Government are taking to improve the knowledge of health professionals, and especially general practitioners and midwives, about the prevention, treatment and diagnosis of toxoplasmosis;

(2) if he will implement a campaign to educate pregnant women and their health carers about toxoplasmosis and its prevention in England;

(3) if he will conduct a survey into the amount and quality of counselling provided in each health authority to pregnant women infected with toxoplasmosis;

(4) what information his Department has provided to general practitioners regarding the implications of a toxoplasmosis infection for pregnant women.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department recently published a new leaflet designed to encourage pregnant women to take precautions when handling and consuming food and to ensure safe contact with animals. The leaflet entitled "While you are pregnant: safe eating and how to avoid infection from food and animals" gives advice on toxoplasmosis and other infections. Women will be given copies as soon as their pregnancy is confirmed. The leaflet is available from antenatal clinics, maternity units and GP practices. Doctors and midwives may also give the leaflet to women who are planning to become mothers. Copies of the leaflet are available in the Library.

The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists has convened a working party which includes representatives from other Royal Colleges and professional associations, and which will be producing guidance on toxoplasmosis for professionals. We have no intention therefore to conduct a survey into existing counselling activities within health authorities.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of (a) the number of women who suffer an infection of toxoplasmosis during pregnancy and (b) the number of of babies born with an infection of toxoplasmosis; and on what information these estimates are based.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A recent review of studies conducted in the 1970s and 1980s in a number of localities suggested an incidence of toxoplasmosis infection in two of every 1,000 pregnancies. However, this information may not apply nationally in the 1990s: there has been some evidence from Britain and Europe that there may be a downward trend in the incidence of toxoplasmosis in the population generally. A review by the Public Health Laboratory Service of laboratory reports for 1988 identified 13 possible cases of congenital toxoplasmosis in new born babies. A PHLS/British paediatric surveillance unit study between June 1989 and May 1990 suggests that approximately 14 babies present in the first year of life with symptomatic congenital toxoplasmosis. The number of asymptomatic infants with congenital toxoplasmosis born each year is unknown at present.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the disabilities known to occur, either immediately or at some later stage of life, in babies born with a toxoplasmosis infection.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In most healthy individuals newly acquired toxoplasmosis infection is asymptomatic or presents with non-specific signs or symptoms. When acquired in pregnancy, toxoplasmosis can cause fetal infection. In most cases the condition is not severe, but in rare instances it can cause potentially serious damage to the newborn infant. Such damage can range from hydrocephalus, severely impaired vision and neurological impairment, to small size for gestational age, deafness, epilepsy and physical disability.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total expenditure on health education regarding toxoplasmosis; and if he will give a breakdown of the expenditure.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department produces the booklet "While you are Pregnant" and the Health Education Authority produces the pregnancy book, copies of which are available in the Library, both of which are given to women attending on their first visit to an antenatal clinic. Both publications contain guidance on how to avoid toxoplasmosis. Advice from doctors and nurses is available to women at the GP's surgery and at antenatal clinics where posters about toxoplasmosis are displayed. It is not possible to disaggregate costs associated with health education regarding toxoplasmosis from other health education costs.

The Department also funds the Toxoplasmosis Trust for its activities in advising the public on the risks associated with the disease. The sum of £10,000 has been granted to the trust in each of the years 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has for a multi-centred study to examine the rates of pre-pregnancy immunity to toxoplasmosis, the prevalence of sero-conversion during pregnancy, and the numbers of babies born infected each year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on how many severely affected infants are born each year in this country is being gathered under the British Paediatric Association surveillance scheme. Consideration is also being given to priorities for research or screening for a variety of conditions including toxoplasmosis. There are no plans at present to start any other surveys or information collection exercises.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research into toxoplasmosis is supported by his Department; and what financial support is provided by his Department to the Toxoplasmosis Trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research in the United Kingdom is the Medical Research Council which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. The Public Health Laboratory Service, which is funded by the Department of Health, is conducting research to improve tests for the diagnosis of toxoplasmosis infection.

The Toxoplasmosis Trust has been awarded a grant by the Department of Health of £10,000 per annum for 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Nurse Prescribing

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the findings of the independent report on nurse prescribing.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Kensington (Mr. Fishburn) on 21 January at columns 173-74.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Least-Developed Countries

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what targets the Government agreed to meet in the programme of action for the least-developed countries; and what progress has been made in achieving them.

Mrs. Chalker: In the programme of action adopted by the United Nations conference on the least-developed countries in September 1990, no single new target was established for official development assistance to least-developed countries, as a percentage of GNP. The United Kingdom, along with several other donors, undertook to make best efforts to reach the existing United Nations target of 0·15 per cent. Data required to measure progress since the conference are not yet available.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the Government's aid programme has been altered in light of the agreements reached at the second United Nations conference on the least-developed countries in 1990.

Mrs. Chalker: As a signatory to the declaration and programme of action agreed at the United Nations conference on the least-developed countries, in September 1990, we have taken full account of the elements of the programme of action in our strategy for British aid. The emphasis placed in the programme on sound economic policies, environment, population, education and training particularly reflects our own thinking. Specific British initiatives on aid tying and local costs were announced at the conference, both of direct benefit to the least developed, and these have been put into effect.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the percentage of aid allocated to the least-developed countries as a percentge of gross national product between 1981 and the latest available figures.

Mrs. Chalker: United Kingdom aid to the least-developed countries from 1981 onwards, as a percentage of GNP, were as follows, OECD figures except 1985:

Year	Percentage
1981	0·12
1982	0·11
1983	0·10
1984	0·09
1985	[1]0·11
1986	0·08
1987	0·09
1988	0·10
1989	[2]0·09
1990	[3]—

[1] estimate

[3] Not yet available

Mrs Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the relative priority of the elements of the programme of action for the least-developed countries in enabling the least-developed countries alleviate poverty and promote development.

Mrs. Chalker: The basic principles of the programme of action, agreed at the second United Nations conference on the least-developed countries, made it clear that the relative priority to be given to the elements of the action programme depend on the individual characteristics of each country, and the needs of their populations.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has yet received a copy of the Indonesian Government's report of its inquiry into the Santa Cruz killings of November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received a copy of the summary report of the Indonesian national commission of inquiry. A full report is expected in about two months.

Recognition

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries which are at present recognised by the United Kingdom; those which are not recognised by the United Kingdom but are members of the United Nations, and countries whose recognition by the United Kingdom is under consideration, respectively.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We recognise as states all 166 member states of the United Nations plus Switzerland, the Holy See, Nauru, Tonga, Tuvalu and San Marino. We also recognise as states the following states which are not member states of the United Nations:

Armenia, Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kirghizia, Moldavia, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan, Croatia, Slovenia.

We are considering the recognition of Bosnia-Herzegovina, Macedonia and the former Soviet Republic of Georgia.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out Britain's contribution to the United Nations teams investigating chemical weapons production capacity, and stockpiles in Iraq, together with the budgeted costs; and what arrangements have been made to ensure reimbursements of these costs from the Iraqi Government.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom has provided inspectors for seven chemical weapons inspections as follows:

Inspection	United Kingdom inspectors/experts
UNSCOM 2	Three
UNSCOM 9	One
UNSCOM 11	One
UNSCOM 12	One
UNSCOM 17	Five, including the deputy leader and a CBDE Porton Down analytical team, plus a further CBDE Porton analytical team in the area.
UNSCOM 20	One
UNSCOM 21	One (this was a joint CW and BW inspection)

Samples from UNSCOMs 2, 9 and 11 were analysed at the chemical and biological defence establishment—CBDE—Porton Down. Chemical agent monitors, individual protection equipment, tropical bleach and Fullers' Earth for decontamination, sampling kits, RAF transport, a gas chromatograph—mass spectrometer, infra-red spectrometer and fume cupboards, a generator and specialist search equipment were also made available for use during the inspections.

In addition to providing assistance for specific inspections, a senior CBDE Porton Down scientist is a full time member of the special commission and another is chairman of the commission's chemical weapon destruction advisory panel. Both have participated in fact finding missions to Iraq to discuss plans for the destruction of Iraq's mustard and nerve agent stockpile.

The United Kingdom made available £1 million for costs arising from the implementation of Security Council resolution 687, including equipment costs. The inspectors' travel and subsistence costs are borne by the United Nations. The costs of the commission itself and destruction of the chemical weapons stockpile and facilities will ultimately be recovered from Iraq under the terms of 1991 Security Council resolutions 687, 706 and 712.

Nuclear Safeguards Agreement

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications Her Majesty's Government have had with the Governments of Syria, Tunisia and Yemen over their respective failure to complete nuclear safeguards inspection agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have regularly urged all non-proliferation treaty parties, and especially those with nuclear facilities, to comply with their obligation under the treaty to conclude and implement full scope safeguards agreements with the IAEA at the earliest opportunity. Tunisia has in fact concluded such an agreement; regrettably, Syria and Yemen have not as yet done so.

Nuclear Explosive Materials

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the international commerce in nuclear explosive materials.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under article 1 of the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons the United Kingdom has undertaken "not to transfer to any recipient whatsoever nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices or control over such weapons or explosive devices directly or indirectly".

As a depositary for the treaty, the United Kingdom has always taken its responsibility very seriously and is a member of both the Zangger committee and the nuclear supplies group which are the main bodies which deal with transfers of nuclear-related equipment.

Iran

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in normalising relations with Iran; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 18 December 1991. We hope that the relationship with Iran will evolve in a positive direction.

Nuclear Arms and Human Rights

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requirements Her Majesty's Government have laid down in recognising new states in the former Soviet Union and Yugoslavia in respect of their adherence to nuclear arms control and human rights treaties including (a) the 1963 partial nuclear test ban treaty, (b) the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty and (c) the 1975 Helsinki accords on human rights; and what discussions (i) he has had and (ii) he plans with his counterparts in these respective new states.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The European Community guidelines adopted by the Foreign Affairs Council on 16 December on the recognition of new states in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union cite respect for the commitments in the Helsinki final act and charter of Paris and acceptance of all relevant disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation commitments as factors relevant to the process of recognition. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met his counterparts in Kazakhstan, Ukraine and Russia during his visit on 18 to 20 January, and stressed the importance we attach to non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. He has no immediate plans to meet foreign ministers of any other newly independent states in Europe.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters in regard to nuclear non-proliferation were (a) discussed and (b) decided on his recent visits to (i) India, (ii) Kazakhstan, (iii) Ukraine and (iv) Russia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend discussed nuclear non-proliferation and the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons—NPT—in all four countries. In India he urged early adherence to the NPT and commended the United States proposal for talks on nuclear restraint in south Asia. He received assurances from Russia, Ukraine and Kazakhstan that nuclear weapons would continue to remain under central control and that the latter two countries would also accede to the NPT in due course.

Gold Deposits

Sir Robin Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement concerning the gold deposited in the Bank of England by Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As the movement towards the independence of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania gathered pace in 1990, Baltic representatives and supporters raised questions about the gold which the Baltic central banks had deposited with the Bank of England before the Soviet annexation of the Baltic states in 1940. On 8 May 1990 my right hon. Friend the former Minister of State told the House that if the Baltic states achieved their independence they could advance claims for the gold.

Following the Government's recognition of the independence of the Baltic states on 27 August 1991, I immediately visited the three states and made clear that we hoped to settle the question of the gold promptly and on a basis satisfactory to all concerned. We invited representatives of each Baltic state to come to London for a first round of discussions on the gold and other financial matters. These took place in November: the Baltic Governments each formally lodged a request for their respective share of the gold.

Since then we have been working up appropriate proposals. This work has been completed. In general terms, the Government would like to see these questions settled on the following basis. We propose to transfer to each Baltic state gold equal in quantity to the gold deposited with the Bank of England before 1940 by its respective central bank, or the gold's equivalent value in money should the Baltic states themselves so prefer. We envisage this transfer as part of a settlement whereunder in each case no further claims would be pursued by either Government. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister this morning met President Landsbergis of Lithuania at Downing street and conveyed to him in general terms our proposals; he also sent parallel messages to the Prime Ministers of Estonia and Latvia.

We have invited each Baltic Government to send representatives for further rounds of discussion aimed at completing the various technicalities involved; meetings with an Estonian delegation and a Lithuanian delegation are scheduled for 27 and 28 January respectively. We hope to reach final agreement with each Baltic Government by the end of March.

We want our relations with the newly-independent Baltic states to begin on the best possible footing. We are very pleased to be on the way to bringing this long-standing question to a satisfactory conclusion.

Horn of Africa

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will take steps to ensure that instability in the Horn of Africa is discussed at the current month's New York summit on the role of the United Nations and that consideration is given to steps that might be taken to recognise and support the continuation of relative stability that has been achieved by the current administration in Northern Somalia (Republic of Somaliland).

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave on 21 January 1992, at column 105.

European Community

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to establish an induction course for new Members on the working of the European Community including a visit to Community institutions.

Mr. MacGregor: I have been asked to reply.

I have no plans to do so, but this is a matter which the hon. Member may wish to raise with the Administration Committee. I should point out that on 6 December 1991, the House agreed to provide for reimbursement of the costs of one visit on parliamentary business to a Community institution by a Member in any year.

DEFENCE

Chapelcross

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what facility will be provided to replace the tritium and plutonium presently produced at Chapelcross when the Chapelcross Magnoxes are shut down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Arrangements for the supply of tritium and plutonium to meet the requirements of defence nuclear programmes are kept under constant review.

Low flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers of low-flying sorties by aircraft type (a) for the period June to December 1990 and (b) for the period January to December 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The numbers of low-flying sorties by aircraft type carried out in the United Kingdom for the periods June to December 1990 and January to November 1991, the most recent date for which figures are available, are as follows:

	Numbers of Aircraft type
Aircraft type	June-December 1990	January-November 1991
Buccaneer	1,239	1,442
F-4	993	1,477
Harrier	3,926	5,447
Hawk	10,734	14,664
Jaguar	3,502	5,686
Jet Provost	5,948	9,377
Tornado	12,787	19,667
Tucano	1,339	2,652

Aircraft type	June-December 1990	January-November 1991
A-10	7,065	8,867
F-111	5,232	8,964
Other aircraft including helicopters	26,648	42,749
Total sorties	79,413	120,992

USAF Munitions Accident

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will send the hon. Member for Don Valley a copy of the Health and Safety Executive report on its investigation of the United States Air Force munitions convoy accident near King's Lynn on 13 September 1991; what action has been taken following the report; and if he will place a copy of the Health and Safety Executive report in the Library.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Health and Safety Executive investigated this incident and concluded that there has been no breach of regulations governing the carriage of munitions. It was not asked to produce a formal report. We are, however, carrying out a comprehensive review of our arrangements for notifying the police of munitions movements by road.

Submarines

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any changes have been made since 1989 to instructions given to a submarine commander in the event of his vessel becoming entangled in fishing nets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The guidance given to commanding officers in the event of submarines becoming entangled in fishing nets has been revised to reflect the recommendations of the Royal Navy's board of inquiry following the loss of the FV Antares. This mainly reflected changes to the communications and alert procedures and the circumstances under which a submarine may leave the scene of the incident. The guidance has always stressed that the safety of life must take precedence over all other considerations.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

EC Meetings

Mr. Allen: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, for each of the conferences since 1979, what expenditure has been incurred for the attendance by the House of Commons representatives at the meetings of presiding officers of national parliaments of the EC.

Mr. Beith [holding answer 20 December 1991]: Since 1979 seven conferences of the Speakers or presiding officers of parliaments of EC countries have been held: in 1981, 1983, 1985, 1987, 1989 and 1991. In 1987 an additional extraordinary meeting was convened in Berlin to mark that city's 750th anniversary.

As the Fees Office accounting system for those years did not separate out the costs attributable to these events, it has not been possible without disproportionate effort to search out figures for them all. It has been possible, however, to extract the costs for the conferences held in Madrid in 1989 and Berlin in 1991. They were £1,298·78 and £1,502·48, respectively.

New accounting methods being introduced into the Department of Finance and Administration should allow information of this kind to be more accessible in future.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on past and future private sector research into alternatives to CFCs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The proposed early phase out of Montreal protocol substances has encouraged rapid development of a range of alternative processes in all user sectors. United Kingdom producers continue to be in the forefront of both national and international research into drop-in replacements and new technologies, including the programme for alternative fluorocarbon toxicity testing.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research his Department has commissioned or carried out into alternatives to CFCs; and what was the (a) cost, (b) type of alternative and (c) company involved in each project for the last five years and for 1992.

Mr. Leigh: The Department of Trade and Industry has carried out research and commissioned studies into the economic effects and availability of CFC alternatives, and has funded collaborative industry projects as follows.

Date	Project	Type of research	Type of alternative	Company involved	Cost
1987—ongoing	NPL Soldering Club	Collaborative	Electronics Cleaning	Over 100 United Kingdom Electronics Companies	N/A
March 1989	Assessing alternatives to CFCs	Conference Paper	Refrigerant	National Engineering Laboratory (NEL)	N/A
November 1989	Flooded Evaporator Heat Transfer	Conference Paper	Refrigerant	NEL	N/A
November 1989	Physical Properties of CFC alternatives	Conference Paper	Refrigerant	NEL	N/A

Date	Project	Type of research	Type of alternative	Company involved	Cost
September—December 1989	CFCs and Halons—the Scope for Recycling and Recovery	Market Survey	Aerosol Propellants Solvents Refrigerants Foam Blowing Agents Fire Extinguishers	Coopers & Lybrand Mott McDonald CS Todds various users and producers	£120k
September 1991	Defluxing of electronic assemblies An assessment of CFC replacements	Collaborative Research joint MoD/DTI industry	Aqueous, Semi Aqueous, and hydrocarbon cleaning, no clean fluxes	STC GEC Marconi BAe Dynamics	£631k (of which DTI funding £217k
November 1991—Ongoing	Further demand for HCFCs and effects of use controls	Market Survey	HCFCs, alternative refrigerants, foam blowing agents, cleaning technologies	Coopers & Lybrand Deloitte, various producers and users	Project in progress

To obtain details of cost of research completed prior to 1990 would involve disproportionate costs. There are no firm plans for further research in 1992.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the dates of any regular meetings and one-off seminars regarding ozone depletion involving his Department within the last three years; and if he will make a statement on plans for future meetings and seminars.

Mr. Leigh: Since the establishment of the DTI environment unit in March 1990 meetings have been held regularly with the various industry user sectors usually on a three monthly basis, to discuss Montreal protocol issues. During 1991 the Department also conducted a series of 17 environmental seminars around the United Kingdom in which ozone depletion featured among a wide range of topics. The DTI has in addition provided speakers for other seminars dealing specifically with ozone layer issues and attended ad hoc meetings with producer and user industry representatives. Officials of the Department are also involved in EC and international negotiations on such issues. It is envisaged that this pattern of contacts will continue for the foreseeable future.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will next meet representatives of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the recession in manufacturing industry in the north-west region.

Mr. Leigh: My right hon. Friend keeps in touch with the CBI on a wide range of business matters and next expects to meet representatives of the CBI on 4 February.

Car Exports

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the levels of exports of the British car industry in 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Leigh: The number of cars produced for export was 280,729 in 1989, 405,769 in 1990 and 605,425 in 1991. This last figure represents a 49 per cent. increase on the 1990 figure.

Car Industry

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on prospects for the car industry.

Mr. Leigh: The outstanding export performance of the United Kingdom car industry over the past year has done much to alleviate the short term difficulties which the recent slump in domestic demand has caused. In addition, the medium and long-term prospects for the industry look excellent. In particular the inward investment projects currently being undertaken by Nissan, Toyota and Honda look set to have a profoundly positive effect on the United Kingdom car manufacturing sector. Last week's announcement that Nissan is to increase production at its Sunderland plant to 270,000 units a year by next year, creating 600 new jobs, is of course very welcome, and will serve to continue the revolution which the United Kingdom supplier industry is currently undergoing as a result of the exacting requirements demanded by Nissan, and indeed increasingly by the longer established vehicle builders. Such developments mean that annual United Kingdom car production should be well on the way to 2 million units by the mid to late-1990s, with an increasingly substantial proportion of it going for export.

Insurance Enterprises

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to review the use of the term "mutual" by those enterprises he regulates through the Insurance Acts.

Mr. Redwood: I have decided that the Department should join the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation in undertaking a general review of the use of the word mutual in the marketing of insurance products and in the titles of companies providing those products.

Bus Operations

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what financial assistance has been provided to Volvo Bus and the previous owners of Leyland's bus operations in Workington and Farington in each year for the last five years.

Mr. Leigh: The following financial assistance has been provided to Volvo Bus Ltd. (formerly Leyland Bus Ltd.) in the last five years for the Workington plant:

1987	482,484
1988	377,667
1989	nil

1990	nil
1991	nil

No financial assistance was given to the Farington plant in this period.

Manufacturing Plants

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action it is the policy of Her Majesty's Government to take in respect of proposals by non-EC companies to close down manufacturing plants in the United Kingdom which provide for the strategic needs of the public sector.

Mr. Leigh: Individual cases are considered on their merits; but in general decisions on the future of manufacturing plants are for the directors of the company concerned.

Company Accounts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the sections of the Companies Acts which relate to appropriation of pension surpluses in a company's accounts.

Mr. Redwood: There are no specific provisions in the Companies Acts dealing with the accounting treatment of a pension scheme surplus in a company's accounts. However, the accounting treatment of pension scheme surpluses is dealt with in an accounting standard, SSAP24. There are also Inland Revenue [illegible] about pension fund surpluses in connection with eligibility for tax relief.

Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation under which companies in their annual accounts would be required to show the amount of exports to EC and non-EC countries.

Mr. Redwood: I have no plans to add to the present statutory requirements in respect of segmental information.

Price Level Accounting

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to require large companies to adopt a system of price level accounting.

Mr. Redwood: No. The valuation bases of assets in company accounts are best dealt with by accounting standards.

Liechtenstein (Companies)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been paid into the insolvency service account in each of the past four years by the Official Receiver and liquidators appointed by his Department (a) in total and (b) which had been recovered from companies based in Liechtenstein.

Mr. Redwood: The value of receipts paid into the Insolvency Services Account in each of the past four years is as follows, broken down by insolvency type:

Year	Bankruptcy £ million	Compulsory £ million	Voluntary £ million
1987-88	38·4	52·9	118·7
1988-89	55·9	55·8	106·7
1989-90	50·3	52·3	89·1
1990-91	53·2	85·6	187·8

No separate information is available regarding amounts recovered from Liechtenstein.

EC Trade Marks Office

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress his Department has made in seeking to secure the proposed new EC trade marks office for a United Kingdom location; and what consideration he has recently given to specific United Kingdom sites, including the London borough of Harrow.

Mr. Leigh: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave him on 11 March 1991, Official Report, column 385. There have been no developments and the position is unchanged.

British Steel

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the date of the meetings between himself or a Minister in his Department and the management of British Steel at which Ravenscraig was discussed in the last six months.

Mr. Leigh: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of British Steel from time to time. The last meeting was on 20 December, and Ravenscraig was among the subjects discussed.

Manufacturing, Planning and Implementation Studies

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what sum of money has been allocated for the manufacturing, planning and implementation studies programme for 1991-92; what proportion thereof had been allocated as at 31 December 1991; how many (i) successful, (ii) unsuccessful and (iii) pending applications there have been for assistance under the programme; what arrangements his Department has made to monitor the administration of the programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 20 January 1992]: Funding of the manufacturing planning and implementation studies—MPI—programme is £10,500,000, which has been allocated on the basis of the three year life of the programme, rather than by individual years. As of 31 December 1991, four applicants had accepted offers of grants totalling £200,000. Eighty-two applications have been received, 36 have been rejected and 46 are being progressed.

The MPI programme is continuously monitored by the Department through regular meetings with the scheme contractor, and the sampling of project applications. In addition, an independent review panel reports to the Department on matters surrounding the operation of the programme.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the cost per job limit for regional selective assistance was last reviewed.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 20 January 1992]: The regional selective assistance scheme is kept under continuous review with a view to ensuring that the scope for encouraging worthwhile and efficient investment in the assisted areas remains unimpaired.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money his Department has spent on producing its citizens charter proposals, arising from production, distribution and publicity costs.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 21 January 1992]: My Department has incurred no significant costs on the production, distribution and publicity of citizens charter proposals.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Tidbury Green School, Solihull

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his Department's assessment of the condition of Tidbury Green school in Solihull.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend does not assess the condition of individual county and controlled schools. Solihull LEA's annual capital guidelines for 1991-92 and 1992-93 take account of both the projected deficit of school places in the area served by Tidbury Green school and the total number of sub-standard places in the authority's schools, as measured by the local education authority.

Polytechnics

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much funding has been made available to polytechnics for improvement and renovation of buildings.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Government have made available some £340 million in capital grant to the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council to date. Of this, the council has allocated some £140 million to institutions for building improvements, renovations, additions and extensions. Separate information on building improvements and renovations at polytechnics is not held centrally.

The planned overall total for 1992-93 is some 50 per cent. higher than that of 1989-90.

Music Teaching

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy on increasing the teaching of musical instrument playing in primary and secondary schools.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend is currently considering the report of the National Curriculum Council on music in the national curriculum for pupils aged five to 14. He intends to publish shortly, for consultation, a draft order for music, together with a draft associated document containing attainment targets and programmes of study. These will set out what pupils should achieve in music and the matters, skills and processes they should be taught so that they can reach their objectives.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy for increasing the number of teachers in primary and secondary schools who are trained to teach the playing of musical instruments.

Mr. Fallon: The Government are taking steps both to increase the supply of music teachers and to improve the skills of existing teachers of music. Measures include substantial support for in-service training and the funding of a video designed to interest more young people in a career in music teaching. Since 1990, the Government criteria for the approval of teacher training courses have stipulated that all students on primary phase courses are trained to teach music to the level required by the National Curriculum. Recruitment to secondary phase courses in music has been increasing since 1989, including an 18 per cent. rise in 1991.

Access Funds

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase the size of access funds to reflect the increase in the number of students.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The size of the access funds for 1993-94 will be considered in this year's public expenditure round.

Pupil Numbers

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average size of (a) a secondary school and (b) a primary school in England measured by the number of pupils.

Mr. Fallon: The average sizes of maintained primary and secondary schools, measured by the number of pupils including part-time pupils, are given in the following table. Separate figures are given for middle schools, which are therefore excluded from the primary and secondary averages.

	Average size January 1991
Primary schools[1]	210
Middle deemed primary schools	282
Middle deemed secondary schools[2]	391
Secondary schools[2]	778

[1] Includes centres for teaching English as a second language.
[2] Includes grant-maintained schools.

Prison Education

Sir Charles Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements he intends to make to ensure the contribution of the full range of prison educational provision after implementation of the proposals in the Further and Higher Education Bill [Lords]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Secretary of State for the Home Department has responsibility for the provision of education in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales.

At present, local education authorities accept invitations to provide education for prisons and provision is usually made through a college of further education. Following the transfer of colleges of further education out of local authority control on 1 April 1993, subject to the passage of the Further and Higher Education Bill, the Secretary of State for the Home Department will invite colleges to provide education for prison establishments direct. This will ensure clearer lines of responsibility and better accountability.

All-seater Stadiums

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications he has blocked from football clubs requesting grants towards all-seater stadiums; whether he will list their names and the amounts of cash involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have made it clear to the trust that in my view it should continue to pay grant to any club in the present first division of the Football League for works to be completed or under way by the end of this close season. I am not yet in a position to offer support for a change in the Football Trust's resolution of April 1990 to allow premier league clubs, once that league is established, to have access to moneys made available to the trust following the reduction in pool betting duty in 1990. I prefer not to take matters further until I have received satisfactory clarification from the Football Association of the funds likely to be generated by FA-driven initiatives and their split between the premier league and Football League clubs for purposes of implementing the Taylor report.

Earth Sciences

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make bursaries available for students taking postgraduate certificate in education courses in earth sciences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: With effect from September 1991, students undertaking postgraduate certificate in education courses composed principally of physics, chemistry or biology, or any combination of those subjects, are eligible to receive a bursary. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans for any further extension of the scope of the bursary scheme.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. James Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, what changes for the 1992-93 financial year he has decided to make in the arrangements for calculating annual maintenance grant for grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have considered carefully the responses to the consultation paper we issued on 17 October. Subject to one small technical change, I have decided to confirm the proposals set out in the paper for calculating the annual maintenance grant—AMG—for grant-maintained—GM—schools in 1992-93.

The main changes for 1992-93 are:

(a) the standard percentage add-on that GM schools receive based on LEAs' average central expenditure will be 15 per cent. over and above the direct costs element of their grant compared with 16 per cent. in 1991-92;

(b) where 15 per cent. or more of the maintained primary or secondary schools in the area of a local education authority are grant-maintained, the percentage add-on for GM schools will be based on scrutiny of central spending in the authority;

(c) the Secretary of State will have power to substitute historic weightings or factors where elements of an individual local management of schools—LMS—scheme have been changed or cease to apply, with unfair results for GM schools.

In response to points raised in consultation, I have approved one small technical change concerning the treatment of expenditure on premature retirement compensation in the calculation of the non-standard additions in (b).

Most of the responses I have received have focused on the central costs element of AMG. GM schools have been concerned about my proposal to reduce the standard percentage add-on to 15 per cent., in line with the increased delegation by LEAs to their schools, and to allow different figures in authorities with many GM schools. I understand the schools' anxieties.

Local authorities have expressed most concern about my proposal that, as last year, the central costs element of GM schools' grant should not be able to fall in cash terms from one year to the next. I have considered carefully their arguments, but concluded that these arrangements provide an essential element of certainty and continuity in the funding of GM schools.

I have had to consider arrangements which will apply to all GM schools and their former LEAs. Overall I believe my proposals are even-handed, recognising the progress local authorities have made on delegation, while retaining sufficient stability and certainty for individual schools.

When we introduced the standard percentage addition for central costs last year we said that we would review the position for when our new LMS targets come into place in April 1993. I think it right to make these early adjustments, in particular to help local authorities with significant numbers of GM schools in their area. We shall look carefully at the arrangements again for 1993-94, when we would expect to reflect further progress on delegation.

My Department will now prepare regulations to give effect to these proposals, which I shall lay before the House in due course.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep Quota

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy regarding the introduction of a sheep quota.

Mr. Curry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 13 November 1991, Official Report, column 566.

MacSharry Proposals

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has made to other member states regarding the MacSharry proposals and their discriminatory impact on United Kingdom agriculture.

Mr. Curry: In addition to making clear the United Kingdom's views on the reform of the common agricultural policy at meetings of the Agriculture Council, my right hon. Friend the Minister has, since October, had detailed discussions with his opposite numbers in the Netherlands—twice—Denmark, France, Germany, Ireland, Italy, Portugal—twice, most recently in January—and Spain. On all occasions he emphasised the United Kingdom's firm opposition to the discriminatory aspects of the Commission's proposals.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further measures he proposes to take to ensure that the common agricultural policy is uniformly implemented in all member states.

Mr. Curry: The European Commission is responsible for ensuring that the common agricultural policy is implemented properly in all member states. We are always ready to draw to the Commission's attention any failures by other member states to implement the CAP.

Farming Co-operatives

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he proposes to take to encourage United Kingdom farmers to form co-operatives.

Mr. Curry: Proposals for a new group marketing grant to encourage the development of producer groups with real commercial expertise have been issued to interested organisations for comment. Any group with a clear legal identity including co-operatives may be eligible to apply.

Oak Trees

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to minimise the damage of disease among oak trees.

Mr. Curry: Under plant health legislation administered by the Forestry Commission, imports of oak plants and oak wood to Great Britain are strictly coptrolled to guard against the introduction of new pests and diseases, particularly oak wilt disease from north America. Imports of oak plants are prohibited from areas where such pests or diseases are known to occur, while oak plants from other areas and all oak wood are subject to inspection and have to be free of these pests and diseases.

In addition, the Forestry Commission investigates instances of ill health in oak trees in Britain, and it is currently conducting research into the local decline of oak at several places, mostly in the east midlands.

Over the past decade there have been many reports of death and dieback of oaks—Quercus robur and Q petraea—in various European countries. In Britain only a few such cases had been reported prior to 1988, but in 1989 the Forestry Commission pathology branch received several inquiries about dieback in woodland and parkland oak and initiated an investigation into the problems.

There are about 30 sites in the southern half of England where the problem is known to occur. These are mostly in the east midlands but are also to be found as far apart as Devon and Kent. The trees range from 40 to 200 years old and occur on a range of soil types. About half are in woodlands and the remainder in parkland. Although the onset of symptoms—small leaves, yellow pale green foliage, dieback of branches—mainly dates to 1987-88, growth of many of the affected trees started to decline around 1984-85.

At present a variety of factors appear to be involved in the decline syndrome but the same factors may not be involved on each site. The onset of growth decline in the mid eighties suggests that some event such as the droughts in the summers of 1983 and 1984 or the severe winters of 1984, 1985 and 1986 may have acted as a trigger for the problem. The role of defoliating caterpillars, such as those of the oak leaf roller moth and the winter moth is unclear. Recent years have not been marked by particularly serious outbreaks of these insects. On some sites the trees appear to be suffering from lime-induced chlorosis. Evidence from the investigation of the root systems of trees on three sites indicates that root damage is not a major factor. No evidence of a vascular wilt disease, similar to Dutch elm disease, has been found. Leaves from severely affected trees with conspicuous yellow foliage, have been tested for viruses and related pathogens with negative results.

Set-aside Land

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for the latest available date the total percentage of agricultural land in the United Kingdom per region, which is currently set aside, giving percentages for each of the EC countries in relation to agricultural land.

Mr. Curry: The latest information available on the percentage of arable land set aside in the United Kingdom and other European Community countries is as follows.

United Kingdom

	Estimated area of land in set-aside schemes[1] (hectares)	Arable land[2] (hectares)	Percentage of arable land set-aside
England	138,789	5,196,171	2·67
Scotland	28,614	1,063,597	2·69
Wales	1,851	225,690	0·82
Northern Ireland	398	250,447	0·16

Notes:

[1] Includes 1988, 1989 and 1990 participants and 1991 applicants for the Five-year Set-aside scheme as well as 1991 applicants for the One-year Set-aside scheme.

Commission figures not available for 1991 applications for five year and one-year set-aside schemes. Portugal exempt from five year scheme until 1994.

Cereals

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the total amount of cereal substitutes (a) imported to and (b) produced in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and if he will give the total tonnage of natural cereals held in stock in the European Community over the same period.

Mr. Curry: The volume of United Kingdom imports of cereal substitutes, as defined in annex D of EC regulation 2727/75, during the last five years for which complete data are available was as follows:

	'000 tonnes
1986	1,036
1987	1,091
1988	1,144
1989	833
1990	1,235

Source: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Data on United Kingdom production of cereal substitutes are not collected centrally. However, the volume of cereal substitutes of United Kingdom origin used for animal feed during the last five years is estimated to be as follows:

Crop years July to June	'000 tonnes
1986-87	2,199
1987-88	2,253
1988-89	2,320
1989-90	2,253
1990-91	2,219

Source: Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

The figures do not necessarily include all cereal substitutes, for example, citrus pulp, which might be produced in the United Kingdom from imported raw materials.

Information on the volume of natural cereals—grain—held in European Community intervention stocks is placed in the Library of the House on a monthly basis.

Suckler Cow Premium

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his Department expects to pay the additional suckler cow premium support allocated by the EC in 1991.

Mr. Curry: The changes agreed by the Agriculture Council at its meeting on 11 to 13 December 1991 do not oblige the United Kingdom to increase the rates applying here. Nevertheless, the Government are currently considering what action they should take in the light of those changes.

MCA Applications

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date his Department dispatched application forms for monetary compensatory amounts to United Kingdom farmers, listing the date of dispatch for each of the past five years.

Mr. Curry: Monetary compensatory amounts are paid or levied on consignments of certain agricultural products transported from one European Community member state to another, or which enter or leave the Community. This is done on the basis of documents which are verified by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. There is no requirement on farmers or traders to complete special application forms.

Hill Farming Review

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has received an indication of the date when the hill farming review is expected to be completed; and if he will make a statement on the current progress of the review.

Mr. Curry: An announcement will be made shortly on the outcome of the 1991 autumn review of the economic conditions in the hills and uplands and the financial assistance that will be available under the hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme 1992.

Genetic Patents

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy regarding genetic patenting and genetically modified organisms; and what consultations he has had with interest groups on these subjects.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply.

The use of genetically modified organisms offers significant potential for industrial innovation across a wide range of sectors, and promises significant benefit in healthcare and pollution abatement. The Government aim to foster its adoption by industry, where appropriate, through collaborative research and technology transfer, to maximise wealth creation from our excellent science research. To this end, patents should be available for inventions in the field of genetic engineering provided normal requirements of patent law are met.

Safe application of the techniques will be ensured by new regulation under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 and the Environmental Protection Act 1990, which implements EC directives on the deliberate release to the environment of genetically modified organisms and the contained use of genetically modified organisms. Public consultation is underway on the detail of the proposed regulation. The Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment advises the Secretary of State and the Health and Safety Commission on the human and environmental safety aspects of releases of all types of novel organisms into the environment; its membership is drawn from a wide range of backgrounds, including the science base, industry, local authorities, farmers and environmental interest groups.

Certain possible applications of genetic modification give rise to strong views in areas of legitimate public interest and concerns. The Government are reviewing the ethical implications arising from genetic modification and welcomed the establishment of the Nuffield Council on Bioethics which is examining ethical issues related to genetic research. The Committee on the Ethics of Gene Therapy has given guidance for the medical profession on the treatment of genetic disorders.

SCOTLAND

Ports and Harbours (Safety)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the criteria which support his policy of seeking an 8 per cent. return on capital investment to improve safety at ports and harbours in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government have published their guide to officials and managers in central Government on effective appraisal and evaluation of expenditure proposals. The "Economic Appraisal in Central Government—A Technical Guide for Government Departments" is available through Her Majesty's Stationery Office. The discount rates to be used in appraising public projects are promulgated from time to time by Her Majesty's Treasury.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each of the last 10 years for which information is available the capital sums spent by his Department on safety improvements at ports and harbours in Scotland and the rate of return on investment which he required in each case.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Most major harbour developments incorporate safety improvements, but it is not possible to quantify separately the investment that is required in each case to achieve those benefits.

Pittenweem Harbour

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what Government assistance has been requested for the construction of a breakwater at Pittenweem harbour; what was his response; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for his decision;

(2) what considerations led him to treat the proposal for a breakwater at Pittenweem harbour separately from the proposals for new fish-handling facilities in assessing whether a suitable rate of return could be obtained on investment;

(3) what was the rate of return on investment of the most recent proposals for improvements to Pittenweem harbour submitted by Fife regional council, taken as a whole.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Fife regional council requested grant towards 50 per cent. of the cost of the breakwater construction, estimated at £1·85 million, under section 2 of the Fisheries Act 1955. A simultaneous request for 50 per cent. grant towards the proposed fish market development, with estimated costs of £1·084 million, is still under consideration.

The investment appraisal submitted by the council indicated a range of estimated rates of return dependent on certain assumptions. The breakwater and fish market were assessed independently, with the agreement of the council's officials, because of the limited mutual benefits of the two projects.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Job Creation

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been spent by (a) the Industrial Development Board and (b) the Local Enterpise Development Unit to promote the creation of jobs in each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: Expenditure on promoting the creation of new jobs and safeguarding existing jobs was as follows:—

	1986-87 £'million	1987-88 £'million	1988-89 £'million	1989-90 £'million	1990-91 £'million
Industrial Development Board	74·4	74·5	87·8	77·2	68·4
LEDU	18·7	15·2	18·0	21·3	26·3

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many jobs have been created by the Local Enterprise Development Unit in each of the last five years;

(2) if he will give a breakdown of the number of jobs created in each Westminster constituency by (a) the Local Enterprise Development Unit and (b) the Industrial Development Board in each of the last five years;

(3) how many jobs have been created by the Industrial Development Board in each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: This information is not available in the precise form requested. LEDU and the Industrial Development Board seek to promote jobs by encouraging and assisting companies to create employment; figures for the number of jobs promoted by the Industrial Development Board in each Westminster constituency and by LEDU in each district council area are as follows. It is not possible to say exactly how many jobs were actually created as a result of these promotions. Over recent years, however, the average conversion rate from jobs promoted to jobs created has been 69 per cent. for IDB and 64·9 per cent. for LEDU.

LEDU

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons are employed by the Local Enterprise Development Unit small business agency; and how many of these employees are identified as members of (a) the Protestant community and (b) the Roman Catholic community.

Mr. Needham: At 1 January 1991, the most recent date for which figures are available, the total number of persons employed by LEDU was 222, of whom 144 were treated as Protestant and 77 as Roman Catholics. There was one person whose community background could not be determined.

Southern Education and Library Board

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of all contracts awarded by the Southern education and library board, for construction works, in each of the last five financial years giving details of the successful tenderers, the cost and location of works.

Dr. Mawhinney: Details of all major contracts—over £200,000—awarded by the board in each of the last five financial years are:

Name of contract	Name of contractor	Cost £
1987-88
Edenderry Primary School, Banbridge	Messrs. F. B. McKee & Co. Limited, Belfast	658,856·00
Newry College of Further Education	Walls Construction Limited, Carryduff	5,416,990·00
1988-89
Banbridge Academy	Messrs. Conway Brothers, Ballycassidy, Co. Fermanagh	470,841·32

Portadown New Technology Centre	Messrs. Heron Bros, Draperstown	1,078,000·00
1991-92
Armagh Special School	Messrs. O'Hare & McGovern Ltd., Newry	1,448,940·00
Board Headquarters, 4 & 5 Charlemont Place, Armagh	Messrs. John Sinton Limited, Tandragee	498,750·00
Dromore High School	Messrs. John Sinton Limited, Tandragee	2,948,600·00

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the contractors on the approved select tender lists, for construction contracts, maintained by each education and library board in each of the past five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Boards do not maintain standing select lists of contractors for construction works. Fresh lists are drawn up for each new major contract as it arises.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the criteria used by education and library boards for the creation of select tender lists for construction contracts.

Dr. Mawhinney: The criteria are based on the code of procedure for single stage selective tendering, published by the National Joint Consultative Committee for Building. They include: the firm's financial standing and record; whether the firm has had recent experience of building at the required rate of completion over a comparable contract period; the firm's general experience and reputation in the area in question; whether the management structure of the firm is adequate for the type of contract envisaged; and whether the firm will have adequate capacity at the relevant time.

EMPLOYMENT

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of each of his Department's executive agencies; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded.

Mr. Jackson: The Employment Department has only one executive agency which is the Employment Service. The chief executive of the Employment Service did not attend a university or polytechnic and therefore does not hold any degrees.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment and separately identify those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status.

Mr. Jackson: The Department has only one executive agency. The Employment Service has several quality of service performance indicators. They are to pay benefits promptly; to pay benefits accurately; and to contact everyone unemployed over six months and offer them an advisory interview at six-monthly intervals. The Employment Service also measures the level of overall customer satisfaction through an annual survey. In addition, each local office has targets for waiting times and how quickly the telephone is answered. The speed of payment indicator was in use before the agency was set up.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list those new facilities for staff, including nurseries and health care schemes, which have been introduced in each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment;

(2) if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment and provide a breakdown by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern for each agency;

(3) how many staff were in post on the date that each of his Department's executive agencies were established; and how many are in post now, in each case;

(4) if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable, including performance-related elements, in each case where appointments have been made to his Department's executive agencies at grade 7 or above, since their establishment;

(5) if he will list each of his Department's executive agencies that operates a group bonus scheme and state the cash amount per person awarded in the last year for which figures are available, and the conditions attached to its award.

Mr. Jackson: The Employment Department has only one executive agency which is the Employment Service. Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of each of his Department's executive agencies, including the performance-related element, and the length of time of the chief executive's contract in each case.

Mr. Jackson: The Department has one executive agency, the Employment Service. The chief executive's remuneration for 1991-92 is £59,000. In addition he can receive a performance bonus of up to 10 per cent. The chief executive's contract extends for two and a half years from 1 April 1990, when the agency was established.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the last annual report for each of his Department's executive agencies was published; and when the next one is due.

Mr. Jackson: The last Employment Service annual report was published on 24 July 1991. The next one is due to be published in July 1992.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of each of his Department's executive agencies; and whether the cost was borne by the parent department or the new agency.

Mr. Jackson: The Employment Department's one executive agency, the Employment Service, was launched in April 1990 at a press briefing held at the Department's offices. The materials produced for the briefing cost £8,109 and were paid for by the Department. In addition the Employment Service published "A Guide to the Employment Service for MPs" which cost £1,086.

Training Schemes

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, separately for male and female, a table showing how many people have entered employment action and how many are participating in employment action in each month since the start of the programme.

Mr. Jackson: The tables show the number of people receiving employment action allowances as at each count date, plus the number of people starting and receiving an allowance during the month ending at each count date. The figure for starts is not available separately for male and female.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish tables showing both the latest available results from the youth training leavers' survey and those for a year before in Great Britain as a whole and in each TEC area in England and Wales and each LEC area in Scotland broken down to show the number and proportion of YT leavers who were (a) in full-time work with the same employer, (b) in full-time work with a different employer, (c) in part-time work, (d) on a full-time course at a college or training centre, (e) on another YT course, (f) doing something else or (g) unemployed; and if he will indicate for each area how many trainees returned their questionnaires, how many left before completing their agreed training course; how many had worked towards a qualification and how many had actually obtained a vocational qualification; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The complete information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. The tables provide information for Great Britain and the regions about the outcomes, responses and qualifications for young people leaving training between April 1989 to March 1990 and April 1990 to March 1991.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for Great Britain and each TEC what is his estimate of the number of ET and of YT trainees who receive English for speakers of other languages training; how many ET trainees are recruited under the specific ESOL eligibility route; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: During 1990-91 about 3 per cent. of all entrants to ET in Great Britain were assessed as requiring English for speakers of other languages—ESOL—training. Figures for those entering in each area now covered by the TEC/LEC network are given in the table. They do not necessarily relate to the provision of individual TECs/LECs. Information is not yet available for YT trainees. During 1990-91 about 2 per cent. of all ET entrants joined under ESOL special eligibility exemption criteria.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements are made for non-employed or employed YT or ET trainees who lose their work placement because the employer closes or declares redundancies and who are returned to their YT managing agent or ET training manger; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: All YT and ET trainees should receive individual training plans suitable to their training needs and relevant to employment. Training and enterprise councils are required to ensure that training providers use all reasonable endeavours to complete these plans. Where a provider is unable to fulfil a plan, a TEC must use all reasonable endeavours to ensure that the trainee concerned has the opportunity to continue with an identical, or closely similar, individual training plan.

Employment Service Targets

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress the employment service has made in meeting the targets outlined in the 1991-92 agency agreement; and if he will show for the latest possible date (a) the total unemployed job placings and variance from target, (b) the long-term unemployed job placings and variance from target, (c) people with disabilities job placings and variance from target, (d) inner-city job placings and variance from target, (e) the number of claims not pursued following initial contact and variance from profiled annual reference level, (f) the number of claimants moved from unemployment benefit to another benefit and variance from annual reference level and (g) the number of people who withdrew their claim to benefit after contact with fraud investigators and variance from annual reference level.

Mr. Jackson: I am informed by the Chief Executive of the Employment Service that in the period April to September 1991 289,360 people inquired at local offices of the Employment Service about entitlement to benefit but did not pursue a claim—annual reference level 442,000. The number of claimants moved to an appropriate benefit other than unemployment benefit is not a reference level in the ES annual performance agreement for 1991-92. For the remainder of the question I refer the hon. Member to my answer given in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter), on 26 November 1991, Official Report, columns 496-98.

Holy Loch

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the health and safety regulations which apply in the case of the salvage ships lifting moorings left in the Holy Loch after the departure of United States personnel and equipment from the base; what steps are being taken to ensure that they are complied with; when they were last reviewed; whether a further review of such health and safety regulations is imminent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I understand that the removal of redundant moorings in the Holy Loch base is being undertaken by vessels operated by the Royal Marine Auxiliary Service —RMAS. Such vessels are not required to register under merchant shipping legislation. However the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974—HSW Act—applies to any vessel carrying out work of this nature. In enforcing the HSW Act, the Health and Safety Executive, through its crown, fire, and police national interest group, has held discussions with representatives of the directorate of marine services of the Ministry of Defence about the safety policy and organisation of RMAS and has regard to the standards generally required under merchant shipping legislation.

Employment Interviews

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will give for each region and for Great Britain as a whole for each year since the introduction of the scheme (a) the number of people who were helped by the travel-to-interview scheme, (b) the number of people whose applications for help were turned down and (c) the amount of expenditure on the travel-to-interview scheme; if he will give the latest information he has on whether those helped were successful in getting the jobs, and on the reasons for their applications being rejected; and if he will make a statement;

(2) for the latest available period for Great Britain and for each region how many Restart interviewees fell within the guarantee group and how many fell within the aim group; how many of each group were submitted or placed in either (a) employment training, (b) enterprise allowance scheme, (c) job club, (d) job interview guarantee or (e) employment action; and of those claimants in the guarantee or aim group how many were not made an offer of help because (i) they were already on or about to start on a scheme, (ii) they were about to leave the unemployment register, (iii) an offer could not be made because there was no appropriate scheme place available or (iv) an offer could not be made due to the claimant's attitude, behaviour or severity of their problem.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

TECs and LECs

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise council and local enterprise company chief executives are full voting members of their TEC or LEC boards; how many are in post; how many are (a) male, (b) female or (c) from an ethnic minority background; how many have resigned since their TEC or LEC became operational; what information he has on the employment backgrounds of the chief executives, including the numbers who have retained their civil service status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The information available in respect of TECs is shown in the table. Information on the ethnic minority background and employment background of directly recruited chief executives is not held centrally.

Are in post (including temporary appointments)	82
Are male	69
Are female	13

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire North-East (Mr. Moss) on 16 December, Official Report column 4, for the proposals on the future staffing arrangements of TECs.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each region and for Great Britain as a whole for each year since April 1987 (a) the number of people who were receiving the enterprise allowance and (b) the amount of expenditure on the EAS; if he will give the latest information he has on the survival of those businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Information, by region and for Great Britain as a whole, on the numbers of people receiving the enterprise allowance since April 1987 is shown in the table. The figures relate to the number of people receiving EAS at year end 31 March for each year since 1987-88. The table also shows EAS expenditure on allowances for each financial year since 1987-88.

A 1988 survey of a sample of EAS businesses begun in March and April of 1987 showed that 76 per cent. of businesses in Great Britain were still trading six months after completing a full year on the scheme.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the change in number of the unemployed for each constituency in (a) Scotland and (b) Wales between June 1987 and the latest available date; and what was the net change in (i) Scotland and (ii) Wales.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Offshore Oil Industry

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what circumstances dispensations from health and safety regulations were issued by his Department to offshore oil companies; how many such dispensations were issued for each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Directions are issued by the Health and Safety Executive's offshore safety division under offshore safety legislation which exempt installations from specific statutory requirements for limited periods. Each application is carefully considered and only granted subject to equivalent or higher alternative safety arrangements being in place.

Information on the numbers of directions issued for each of the last 10 years can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has about the number of accidents involving (a) direct employees and (b) contractors' employees in the offshore oil industry for each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The numbers of accidents causing death or serious injury on or near to offshore installations on the United Kingdom continental shelf for the calendar years from 1981 to 1990 are as follows:

	Fatalities	Serious Accidents (injuries to persons)

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

"Juliette"

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what recent representations he has received concerning the publication of the book "Juliette" by the Marquis de Sade;

(2) if he will make a statement on the decision of the Crown Prosecution Service not to bring prosecutions against Arrow Books for the publication of the book "Juliette" by the Marquis de Sade.

The Attorney-General: The acting Director of Public Prosecutions announced on 20 December 1991 that he did not intend to institute criminal proceedings against Arrow Books in relation to the publication to which the hon. Member refers. He had concluded, after consulting senior Treasury counsel and leading counsel, that the evidence was insufficient to afford a realistic prospect of conviction. In coming to that decision the acting director had also had regard to the nature of the book, the circumstances of its publication and the statutory defences available under the Obscene Publications Act 1959.

Since that decision was announced, I have received representations from five Members of Parliament and eight other individuals.

Mr. Oliver Pryce

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Attorney-General whether the Director of Public Prosecutions has reached a decision on whether to prosecute police officers in Middlesbrough who were found by an inquest on 29 November 1991 to have unlawfully killed Mr. Oliver Pryce.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has requested a transcript of the evidence given at the inquest and will consider the case when it has been received.

Sunday Trading

Mr. David Young: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list by name the local authorities that have made representations to him about the law on Sunday trading since his statement of 27 November 1991, Official Report, columns 913-18.

The Attorney-General: Since I answered the private notice question from my hon. Friend the Member for Orpington (Mr. Stanbrook) on 27 November 1991 at column 913, I have received letters from Cambridge city council, the city of Coventry, Hull city council, Ipswich borough council, Scunthorpe borough council and Worthing borough council. In addition, my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) forwarded to me a letter he had received from Bournemouth borough council.

De Lorean

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General whether he is still pursuing the Government's claims against Arthur Andersen over the collapse of De Lorean.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

The Department of Economic Development for Northern Ireland is pursuing its action against Arthur Andersen.

TRANSPORT

Port of Tilbury

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those companies that submitted a bid in respect of the sale of the port of Tilbury by 6 January.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. That is a matter of commercial confidence between the Port of London authority, as vendor of the port of Tilbury, and the parties concerned.

Cornelis Johanna

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to conclude the inquiry into the extent of his Department's liability to Mr. and Mrs. Paul Reeman as a result of the failure of Cornelis Johanna to pass the stability test on 15 November 1990.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am awaiting advice as to the extent of the Department's liability, if any, to the present owners of the Cornelis Johanna.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport further to his letter of 20 December 1991, to the hon. Member for South Hams, if he will set out the results of the inclining experiment so as to establish more precisely the degree to which the stability of the Cornelis Johanna BM 204 is apparently deficient and assist in determining any remedial measures which may be required; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The results of any inclining experiment conducted will be made available to all the parties concerned and advice will be given on any remedial measures necessary to bring the stability up to the required standard.

Coastguard Service

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will specify the consultations including dates of meetings and correspondence which took place on the north coast of Scotland on the review of Her Majesty's coastguard service with (a) local authorities, (b) coastguard staff and (c) the public.

Mr. McLoughlin: All coastguard district management teams and sector officers within Aberdeen region, including the north coast of Scotland, were consulted personally by regional management over the sector review during the consultative period lasting from February to June 1991; all views of the coastguard staff so aired were considered.

Local authorities and the public were not directly approached since this was an internal management review.

However, I announced the placing of a copy of the review document in the House of Commons Library to ensure wide circulation of its proposals on 21 March 1991 during the adjournment debate which was in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris).

Traffic

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he is having with local authorities with a view to improving traffic speed and parking in the metropolitan area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I am in the process of consulting local authorities and others on the proposed network of red routes and on guidance on traffic management and parking in London as part of the implementation of part II of the Road Traffic Act 1991. I am also soon to have a discussion with the Parking Committee for London set up by the local authorities under the Act.

NATIONAL FINANCE

VAT

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on applications for payment of unpaid value added tax that are based on evidence collected by computers.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Both the Value Added Tax Act 1983 and the VAT General Regulations 1985 give Customs the power to issue demands for payment that are based on information held by a computer. The majority of that information is provided by the taxpayer to Customs and then input manually.

The Finance Act 1985 (section 10) entitles Customs to provide evidence based on computer-held information to a court of law within the meaning of the Civil Evidence Act 1968 (part I). Such evidence may be manually prepared or produced directly from the computer, but is based on information held on the computer. A certificate similarly based, advising the existence of a debt, may also be accepted under schedule 7 of the VAT Act 1983, until such time as the evidence may be refuted.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the advisory cost limit for answering parliamentary questions applies to answers provided by chief executives of executive agencies (a) in reply to parliamentary questions and (b) in reply to letters from hon. Members.

Mr. Maples: (a) Yes, and (b) no. The advisory limit has increased to £400, as announced in the Official Report, 14 January 1992 at column 546, and applies where the answers to written parliamentary questions are provided by chief executives of executive agencies. It does not apply to replies to letters from hon. Members.

Central Unit on Purchasing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will define the present remit of the central unit on purchasing.

Mr. Maude: The central unit on purchasing has been subsumed by the public competition and purchasing unit (PCPU). PCPU's remit is to promote the programme of work set out in the White Paper "Competing for Quality" (Cm 1730), and to continue existing work on the Government purchasing initiative (GPI). This involves advising Departments on how to obtain value for money through the adoption of best purchasing and project management practice, working with Departments to develop professionalism and to create infrastructures to support their purchasing and supply activities, monitoring Departments' progress in implementing the GPI and reporting annually on departmental progress to the Prime Minister.

ENVIRONMENT

Navigation Authorities

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses he has received following the consultation over the re-organisation of navigation authorities covering inland waterways; and if he will list the organisations responding and place copies of their responses in the Library.

Mr. Heseltine: The following 26 responses have been received as part of the review of the navigation functions of the British Waterways Board and the National Rivers Authority:

Amateur Rowing Association
Association of Waterway Cruising Clubs
Commercial Narrowboat Operators Association
Country Landowners Association
East Cambridgeshire District Council
English Nature
Neath Borough Council
Port of London Authority
River Wye Preservation Trust
Salmon and Trout Association
Severn Fisheries Council
Turner Marinas Ltd.
Welsh Anglers Council
Wye Salmon Fisheries Association
Association of District Councils
British Canoe Union Council of Welsh Districts
Driffield Land Owners and Occupiers Association
Inland Waterways Association
Mr. Stephen Peters
River Thames Society
Royal Yachting Association
Sedgemoor District Council
Transport and General Workers Union
Water Companies Association
Welsh Salmon & Trout Angling Association

All further responses received will be taken into account. The accepted practice, where responses are made available, is to place a list of organisations responding in the Library of the House of Commons and place copies of the responses in the Department's library. When all the main responses have been received, we shall follow this for all responses where the respondent does not ask for the response to be kept in confidence.

Halcrow Fox

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of his Department's funding of the feasibility study by Halcrow Fox into land reclamation and open-cast mining in north-west Leicestershire; what are the terms of reference for Halcrow Fox; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: My Department has given approval for derelict land grant of £33,300 towards the Ashby Woulds feasibility study to be undertaken by Halcrow Fox and Partners. The purpose is to undertake a feasibility study for utilising the opportunities for the reclamation and after-use of derelict land and other mineral-bearing and vacant sites in the Ashby Woulds area. The Department has also given approval for derelict land grant of £26,200 for a geotechnical survey of the former Donisthorpe colliery tip to be undertaken by the same team of consultants.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the composition of the steering group appointed to guide the work of the study funded by his Department into land reclamation and opencast mining in north-west Leicestershire; if he will make it his policy to ensure the adequate representation of the local community on the steering group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The steering group guiding the feasibility study of reclamation and after-use opportunities for derelict land and other mineral-bearing vacant sites in the Ashby Woulds and Donisthorpe area consists of officers of Leicestershire county council, north-west Leicestershire district council and my Department together with representatives of the British Coal Opencast Executive, A. F. Budge (Mining) Ltd., and Hepworth Building Products Ltd. The local authority members of the steering group take account of the interests of the local community.

Oxleas Wood

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last visited Oxleas wood, south-east London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: Representatives of English Nature, my advisors on matters relating to sites of special scientific interest, have visited Oxleas wood on several occasions, most recently on 28 November 1991.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those sites licensed to take special waste; and if he will indicate which of the sites are currently taking special waste.

Mr. Baldry: The information required is not held centrally in a form which would enable the Department to give an accurate response to the question. The issuing of disposal site licences is the responsibility of the local waste regulation authority in whose area the site is located and it is required to maintain a public register containing copies of disposal licences currently held in its area.

Unitary Development, Tyne and Wear

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what strategic advice was offered to each authority in Tyne and Wear county on the number of additional houses and households to provide for in their unitary development plans; and whether his Department's more recent household projections for Tyne and Wear will give rise to any revision of his guidance.

Mr. Yeo: The "Strategic Guidance for Tyne & Wear", which was issued in April 1989, stated that the five unitary development plans should provide for a basic requirement of 30,100 dwellings to be built between the beginning of 1988 and the end of 2001. These would be distributed as follows:

	Number
North of the River Tyne (City of Newcastle upon Tyne and North Tyneside MB)	12,600
Gateshead MB	5,800
South Tyneside MB	5,000
Sunderland MB	6,700
Total	30,100

This strategic guidance has formed the basis of the draft plans currently in course of preparation in the five districts. It is being monitored by the district councils and will be revised and updated as necessary. Recent household projections will be taken into account in the revision process.

Building Regulations (Fire)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account was taken of the weight of responses to the Building Regulations (Fire) Consultation Document issued in March 1990 concerning periods of fire resistance, compartment size and non-conbustibility in producing the 1992 edition of the Building Regulations Fire Safety Approved Document.

Mr. Yeo: The Department received some 220 responses to the consultation document on proposed amendments to part B (Fire Safety) of the Building Regulations 1985. The comments were fully and carefully considered and we concluded that it would be appropriate to make some changes to the guidance before publishing it as an approved document. Certain fire resistance periods were increased, as we were persuaded that those proposed may not have taken sufficient account of possible risks to firefighters. Provisions for certain building elements to be constructed of materials of limited combustibility were reintroduced for hospitals and fire fighting shafts, where for different reasons people may be expected to remain in the vicinity of a fire for longer than would normally be expected. We also accepted the suggestion that it would be more appropriate to consider compartment volume rather than floor area when deciding on maximum permitted compartment sizes in buildings used primarily for storage purposes. This takes account of the increased fire load associated with high stacks of stored goods.

Council Tax

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will consider the use only of certificated bailiffs for recovery of council tax arrears;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to apply section 15 of the Court and Legal Services Act 1990 to goods which can be seized by private bailiffs when recovering arrears of council tax.

Mr. Key: No. The employment of bailiffs is a matter for each local authority to determine. Local authorities will issue their bailiffs with a code of practice. These codes, which control the activities of bailiffs, will include the goods which can be distrained. I consider that this provides sufficient safeguards for both council tax payers and local authorities.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will relax the two-year time limit within which action must be taken against community charge defaulters.

Mr. Heseltine: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I will shortly be laying regulations to extend from two to six years the time within which enforcement action may be taken. Whilst authorities will have been able to take action against the bulk of community charge defaulters within the original two years, this will not be possible in every case. We are determined that authorities should be able to enforce against all defaulters. There will be no amnesty for non-payers.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received on abolition of private bailiffs for recovery of community charge arrears; and what response he has made.

Mr. Key: We have received a number of representations. We believe that local authorities should continue to be able to call on the assistance of private bailiffs in enforcing the community charge.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what guidance he has issued to local authority associations regarding the offering of realistic repayment arrangements for people in arrears with community charge before taking court action to recover arrears;

(2) what guidance he has issued to local authority associations on the order in which the following enforcement remedies for recovery of community charge arrears should be used when more than one are applicable (a) attachment of earnings, (b) deductions from income support and (c) distress;

(3) what guidance he issues to local authority associations regarding the processing of outstanding claims for community charge benefit before taking court action to recover arrears of community charge;

(4) if he will review the guidance for (a) prevention of arrears and (b) recovery of arrears of community charge when issuing guidance on arrears of council tax.

Mr. Key: My Department, in conjunction with the local authority associations, produced a series of community charge practice notes to assist local authorities with the implementation of the community charge. The note on the collection of the charge advised authorities about their discretion to accept payments on account and to permit flexible payment arrangements for community charge payers. The note on enforcement explains that it is for the authority to decide, in each case, which power to use in particular circumstances; or the order in which the powers are to be used having regard to the cost-effectiveness of the various options. It is not a defence against the making of a liability order that a benefit claim is outstanding. However, we expect local authorities to seek to ensure that they do not summons people where bona fide benefit applications are outstanding.

As with the community charge my Department in conjunction with the local authority associations will be issuing a new set of practice notes to assist local authorities with the implementation of the council tax. In producing these notes we shall of course look at all aspects of the administration of the tax to see what lessons can be learnt from the community charge.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will review his policy on the provision of weekly/fortnightly payment methods for payment of the council tax;

(2) if he will commission research to examine the cost effectiveness of setting up weekly payment arrangements for the council tax in order to prevent arrears.

Mr. Key: We are content that the Local Government Finance Bill provides a sufficiently flexible regime for council tax payments. Tax payers will have a right to pay in 10 monthly instalments. In addition authorities can offer their tenants the option of making payments at the same frequency as their rent payments. This could include weekly or fortnightly payments. There is nothing to prevent an authority making agreements with tax payers about the frequency of instalment payments, but such agreements would fall outside the statutory enforcement procedures. It will be for local authorities to decide, within the flexibility provided, which is the most cost effective approach.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those local authorities who will lose area protection grant in 1992-93 showing the amount to be lost expressed both in £ million and £ per poll tax payer.

Mr. Portillo: The total amount of area protection grant payable in 1992-93 will be £308 million. A table showing the proposed reduction in area protection grant between 1991-92 and 1992-93 expressed in million pounds and pound per chargepayer is shown.

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the outcome of the consultation on the local government finance settlement for 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: I hope to lay before the House tomorrow the Revenue Support Grant Report (England) 1992-93, the Revenue Support Grant Distribution (Amendment) (No. 2) Report (England), the Population (England) Report (No. 3), and the Special Grant Report (No. 3); together these reports establish the amount of grant to be paid to local authorities and the basis of its distribution for 1992-93. I shall be sending copies of these reports to all authorities, together with a table showing the standard spending assessments and grant entitlement of each authority; these will also be placed in the Library and Vote Office. I should also make it clear that I stand firmly by my intentions for capping criteria which I announced on 26 November.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for all relevant local authorities (a) the post-16 component of their education standard spending assessment in 1991-92, (b) their actual expenditure in 1991-92 and (c) the proposed figure for 1992-93, showing aggregate totals for England expressed in £ million and constant prices.

Mr. Portillo: I have today placed a table in the Library showing the requested information on standard spending assessments. Comparable information on actual expenditure on post-16 education is not available.

Renovation Grants

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider special credit applications from local authorities to cover the open-ended cost of renovation grants.

Mr. Yeo: My Department has recently considered applications for a share of £25 million available as supplementary credit approvals (SCAs) to assist local authorities facing greatest pressure through demand for mandatory renovation grants in 1991-92. Bidding authorities were informed of our decisions in November 1991. For 1992-93, £30 million has been earmarked for issue as SCAs for mandatory grants. Local authorities will be invited to bid for a share of this reserve in due course.

Levy, London Boroughs

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the levy imposed on London boroughs by the London residuary body in 1991; and what is the expected levy for the coming year.

Mr. Key: The levy imposed on inner London boroughs for the year 1991-92 was £15·7 million. The LRB has indicated that the levy for the year 1992-93 will be of the order of £35 million to £40 million. This includes a substantial element to cover late rating adjustments, for which the former Inner London education authority had made inadequate provision.

Education Spending

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each education authority (a) their education standard spending assessment for 1991-92, (b) their budgeted expenditure in 1991-92 and (c) the proposed standard spending assessment for 1992-93, showing aggregate totals for England expressed in £ million and constant prices.

Mr. Portillo: I have today placed a table in the Library showing the requested information.

Sunday Trading

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by name the local authorities that have made representations to him about the law on Sunday trading.

Mr. Key: My Department has not received any such representations from local authorities.

Newsprint

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the recycled content of newspapers published in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Following discussions with the Government, the newspaper publishers agreed in September 1991 to a target of 40 per cent. waste paper in United Kingdom newspapers by the year 2000. As part of that agreement, the industry agreed to produce audited annual figures for the recycled content of newspapers, starting with figures for 1990.

As agreed, the pulp and paper information centre has now provided figures for 1990. The total amount of waste paper used in United Kingdom newspapers accounted for 26·8 per cent. of newsprint consumed in the United Kingdom in 1990.

Waste paper used in newsprint produced in the United Kingdom accounted for 25·6 per cent. of all newsprint consumed by United Kingdom newspapers. Waste paper consumed by United Kingdom newsprint mills amounted to 67 per cent. of their total production.

The newspapers publishers have agreed that figures for 1991 will be released later this year.

We welcome the release of this information. We encourage newspaper groups to provide the same information for individual publications for which they are responsible.

Royal Parks

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he will make an announcement about the selection of contractors to carry out the garden and landscape maintenance work in the royal parks.

Mr. Heseltine: I have selected the following contractors to carry out the garden and landscape maintenance work in the royal parks from 1 March 1992.

	Contractor
St. James's Park and the Green Park	Glendale Industries Ltd.
Kensington Gardens and Brompton Cemetery	Brophy PLC
Hyde Park	Serco Ltd.
Regents Park and Primrose Hill	Tyler Environmental Services Ltd.
Richmond Park	Glendale Industries Ltd.
Bushy Park	Glendale Industries Ltd.
Greenwich Park	Turfsoil Ltd.

After careful consideration of the tenders and some post-tender negotiations we are satisfied that the successful contractors will be able to provide the quality of work which we require. To meet that requirement we have chosen not to accept the lowest tender in some cases. Although the contract specification lays down higher standards than are currently achieved in the parks in some respects, the work will be carried out at less cost. Higher quality at lower cost is what this exercise is all about.

The successful contractors have started to conduct interviews with all staff currently employed in the parks who have applied for jobs with them. They will be required to employ apprentices in the parks who will receive their college training on a specially designed course with their tuition fees being paid for by the Department.

In addition I have decided to transfer responsibility for much on the day-to-day management of the parks from the Marsham street headquarters of the Department to the superintendents in the parks. With contracting out the number of civil servants retained at headquarters committed to the scrutiny of the parks will be reduced from 35 to 12. I have decided that the parks should be run by a chief executive and have arranged to recruit one by open competition.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what grounds local authorities were excluded from bidding for the maintenance of the royal parks.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 16 January 1992]: Local authorities were not invited to tender for this work because the Government believe that they should not operate as trading bodies. Their role should be to enable their charge payers to enjoy high standards in those services for which they are responsible without necessarily providing them themselves. It is certainly not their role to enter into competition with the private sector.

RECHAR

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the Prime Minister's answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 469, if he will set up an inquiry into the leaking of his letter to the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland referring to the RECHAR programme.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 17 January 1992]: Preliminary inquiries have proved inconclusive and I have accepted the advice I have been given that nothing would be gained from pursuing them.

Local Government Legislation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the number of Government amendments and (b) the topics covered which were tabled in the course of the parliamentary passage of (i) the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 and (ii) the Local Government Finance Act 1988.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 20 January 1992]: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

ENERGY

Oil Seed Rape

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what research has been conducted by his Department into the potential for conversion of oilseed rape into fuel; what contacts he has had with EC and non-EC countries which have undertaken research into this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department of Energy has considered the potential for conversion of biomass, including oilseed rape, into liquid fuels. The costs appear to be uncompetitive with the cost of competing fossil fuels.

The Department is aware of developments overseas through participation in the International Energy Agency bio-energy agreement and through its association with the European Commission's biomass energy programme.

The Department plans to evaluate further the potential for conversion of biomass into liquid fuels, taking account of the diversity, socio-economic and environmental benefits.

Petroleum Engineering Directorate

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish the guidelines for the independent inquiry being commissioned by his Department regarding the cost-effectiveness of relocating the petroleum engineering directorate in Aberdeen.

Mr. Wakeham: I am arranging for a copy of the terms of reference for the study to be placed in the Library of the House.

Plastic Piping

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what studies have been carried out of the consequences for the safe earthing of electric cookers and other appliances arising from the changeover from the supply of domestic water via lead piping to plastic.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand that, as part of the national water metering trials, the Department of the Environment commissioned a study to investigate the change in the earthing characteristics of domestic properties when work is carried out on the water supply pipe in order to install an external water meter.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the individuals and organisations retained to advise him or his Department on electricity privatisation, giving in each case the commencement and termination date of their contract and the nature of the advice they supplied.

Mr. Wakeham: The following advisers were retained in connection with the restructuring and privatisation of the electricity supply industry in England and Wales:

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the fees to be paid out in 1991-92 for advice on electricity privatisation; and what estimate has been made for 1992-93.

Mr. Wakeham: It is estimated that Government expenditure in 1991-92 on fees for advice on electricity privatisation will be approximately £7 million. Details of expected expenditure in 1992-93 will in due course be published, in the usual way, in the supply estimates.

Coal Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the individuals and organisations retained by him or his Department to advise on coal privatisation, giving in each case the commencement date of their contract and the nature of the advice supplied.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested is as follows:

N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd.	30 May 1991	Financial matters
Touche Ross	12 June 1991	Accountancy matters
Clifford Chance	19 June 1991	Legal matters
Wardell Armstrong, John T. Boyd	5 August 1991	Technical and mining matters

I also have in mind to appoint a consultant to advise on coal mining safety matters, and expect to make an announcement on this soon.

Vale of Pickering (Gas)

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information his Department has received in respect of the recent further gas discovery by Kelt UK Ltd. at Haygate lane in the Vale of Pickering, including the nature of the gas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Preliminary pressure testing of Kelt's Pickering No. 1 well indicates a significant accumulation of gas. No gas has yet been produced from the well, and it is thus not yet possible to establish the chemical make-up of the gas. The well is currently suspended.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what were the total fees paid out for advice on electricity privatisation in 1986-87 and each year since at current prices.

Mr. Wakeham: No expenditure was incurred by the Government in 1986-87 in respect of advice on the restructuring and privatisation of the electricity supply industry in England and Wales. For subsequent years, Government expenditure on advisory fees was as follows:

	£ Million
1987-88	0·8
1988-89	5·5
1989-90	12·2
1990-91	51·9

South Africa (Oil Exports)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) by what mechanism the Government are honouring their commitments with regard to crude oil exports to South Africa made under the 1985 package of EC sanctions now that the guidelines of 31 January 1979 covering the United Kingdom's crude oil exports are no longer in force;

(2) when he expects the investigation into the alleged breach of the United Kingdom's guidelines prohibiting crude oil exports to South Africa by the tanker Almare Terza to be completed;

(3) what factors have affected the time taken by his officials to investigate the alleged breach of the United Kingdom's guidelines prohibiting crude oil exports to South Africa by the tanker Almare Terza.

Mr. Wakeham: As I made clear in response to my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) on 8 March 1991, Official Report, column 301, the Government expect companies to abide by the 1985 EC measures against South Africa. Notice has been issued to the industry advising them of the continued existence of the ban. The investigation into the alleged shipment of United Kingdom continental shelf oil to South Africa on the tanker Almare Terza has proved complex and time consuming. It has been established that the cargo changed ownership at least five times on the international market. No response has, however, proved obtainable from the last identified owner, International Transportation Company based in the Cayman islands, and other inquiries have proved inconclusive.

Dounreay

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the Atomic Energy Authority's investigation into the nuclear material accountancy discrepancy at Dounreay.

Mr. Wakeham: I have now received the report from AEA Technology into the nuclear material accountancy discrepancy at Dounreay. The investigation by the Atomic Energy Authority has confirmed the preliminary view that the discrepancy has not involved safety or environmental hazards and that there are no grounds for believing that security procedures were deficient, or that any diversion of material has occurred.

A re-assessment of the discrepancy has reduced the earlier reported "Material-Unaccounted-For" (MUF) of 11 kg U-235 (10·2 kg U-235 in high enriched uranium and 1·1 kg U-235 in low enriched uranium) to approximately 3 kg total U-235. The new figure takes into account the discharge of liquid waste containing uranium, and the re-assessment of solid waste and other materials. A more refined measurement was also made of the hold-up of uranium in the plant.

The report identifies a number of areas where it will be necessary to improve management procedures, accountancy, and record keeping. The Atomic Energy Authority has accepted all the recommendations made in the investigation report and has taken action to implement them. I have asked my officials to monitor implementation of the report's recommendations by the Atomic Energy Authority.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Pollution, Russia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to provide assistance to the Russian Federation to reduce the problems of social dislocation and pollution arising from the 10 previously unknown Russian cities, including Arzamas-16 and Tomsk-7; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: In Russia our bilateral assistance through the know-how fund is concentrated in four priority sectors—banking and finance, energy, food distribution and employment services. We are already implementing several pilot projects in Moscow and St. Petersburg, designed to address the social consequences of the transformation to a market economy. Assistance through the European Community and through the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development is of growing importance. We will continue to consider the most effective ways of providing assistance through the various channels.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 23 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Honours

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if he has any proposals to review the present honours system; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate plans to do so.

EC Heads of State

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement as to the effect of the Maastricht agreement and the Single European Act upon the powers, role and future of the Crown and the heads of state of other European Community members.

The Prime Minister: The powers, role and future of the Crown remain unaffected by the Single European Act and the treaty on European union agreed at Maastricht. The position of heads of state of other member states of the Community depends on their respective constitutional arrangements.

Farmland

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Prime Minister whether he has any specific plans to reduce the protection to farmland currently in operation through the planning system; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: New planning policy guidance was set out on 22 January at columns 203-4 in a reply from my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter). This affirms the Government's commitment to protecting the best and most versatile agricultural land. Planning authorities should also weigh environmental considerations, including any special designation of the area, and economic factors, including the need for diversification to provide wider employment opportunities in rural areas, in preparing development plans and deciding planning applications.

Legislation (Repeal)

Mr. Tebbit: To ask the Prime Minister under which sections of the treaty of Rome, as amended by the Maastricht agreement, the powers of Parliament to repeal legislation enacted by its predecessors are curtailed.

The Prime Minister: The powers of Parliament to repeal legislation enacted by its predecessors are not curtailed by the treaty of Rome, either in its present form or as amended by the treaty on European union agreed at the Maastricht European Council.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Young Claimants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the additional annual cost to the Exchequer of providing income support for 16 and 17-year-olds at the same rates as (a) 18 to 24-year-olds and (b) people aged 25 years and over.

Mr. Jack: Based on caseload information for 1990, the best available estimate of the cost of increasing the rate of income support for 16 and 17-year-olds who satisfy current entitlement conditions is around an annual £50 million if the rate paid to 16 to 17-year-olds is increased to that paid to 18 to 24-year-olds, and around £170 million if the rate is increased to the full adult rate. Increasing the rate paid to 16 to 17-year-olds to the full adult rate would require that the rate paid to 18 to 24-year-olds be increased to the same figure, at an additional estimated cost of £280 million; or a total cost of £450 million.

Income Support

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the total number of households, including dependants, in receipt of income support, by tenure.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available in the form requested.

Disability

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether claimants with a disability who are receiving assistance with mortgage interest payments will retain that assistance if upon taking up a job they qualify for disability working allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Disability working allowance (DWA) will not include help with mortgage payments. However, no one will be obliged to claim and of those who choose to do so only a small number will be worse off than if they remained on income support. We estimate that about 10,000 DWA recipients will have mortgages and will be better off on DWA.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether employed status ET or YT trainees, or self-employed people, with a disability are eligible to claim disability working allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: People with a disability who are self-employed or working for an employer, including those on employment training and youth training schemes with employed status, are eligible to claim disability working allowance if they work for 16 or more hours a week.

Industrial Services Consortium

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many contracts the Industrial Services Consortium of Bradford has been awarded by his Department in the last two years, to date; if he will review a decision taken by the purchasing and supply directorate to concentrate leaflet work at Canons park; what reduction in employment of disabled people will result at ISCO 5 if this decision is approved; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The purchasing and supplying of leaflets is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Robert Ingram

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when social fund inspectors are to conclude their review of the refusal to pay community care grant to Mr. Robert Ingram, of Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by the social fund commissioner that the review to which the hon. Member refers was completed on 15 January. Mr. Ingram has been notified of the social fund inspector's decision.

Housing Costs

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the numbers of claimants of income support in respect of mortgage interest both nationally and in each standard region, for 1989, 1990 and the most recent date in 1991, distinguishing between claimants who are (a) unemployed, (b) economically inactive, including pensioners or long-term sick and (c) claimants who are working less than 24 hours a week.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 20 January 1992]: The information requested is in the tables:

Regions	Unemployed	Others	Part time work	Total
1990	82,000	210,000	18,000	310,000

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Trawlers

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many trawlers his Department has examined in the last year to ensure the physical output of their engines matches the details in their official documents, in respect of those with de-rated engines within the 221 kW limit.

Mr. Curry: None. There are no currently available and practicable means of verifying recorded engine power in the course of inspections at sea. My Department is considering whether there is any way of overcoming this difficulty.

Decommissioning

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to include details of a United Kingdom decommissioning scheme in the submission to the EC multi-annual guidance programme.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend the Minister has indicated that he is prepared to consider decommissioning as part of a package including effort control. The industry has put forward proposals in response to this invitation and fisheries departments are considering the options but no decision has yet been taken.

It is too early to say what will be included in the United Kingdom's submission on the multi-annual guidance programme.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the locations of all the cold stores in the United Kingdom where BSE-confirmed cattle carcases have been stored or are being stored, giving for each cold store the number of BSE-confirmed carcases which have been stored there in each year; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement about the legislative conditions imposed upon the storage of BSE-confirmed carcases in cold stores.

Mr. Gummer: BSE carcases are stored for short periods only prior to transportation to incineration plants and at the plants to even out the flow to the incinerators.

There are two dedicated storage centres in the United Kingdom, both in Devon. These centres are used only for BSE carcases. They are operating within local authority regulations and are bound by contractual conditions with the Ministry. The throughput of carcases at these centres is strictly controlled and regular inspections are carried out by the state veterinary service.

In addition to these centres refrigerated lorries are also sometimes used (in Staffordshire, Shropshire, Leicestershire, Lancashire and Derbyshire) for temporary storage while awaiting full loads for transportation.

Information on the number of carcases stored is not available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Coopers and Lybrand

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the projects, the purposes, and the cost of his Department's use of the Coopers and Lybrand group since 1989.

Mr. Redwood: In the period since 1 April 1989 Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte has been engaged by the Department in connection with projects and studies on the subjects listed. Further details, including details of the costs of these projects, are commercially confidential.

Auditing Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to prevent auditing firms from performing actuarial tasks for their audit clients.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the sections of the Companies Acts which relate to the selling by an auditor of non-auditing services to his audit clients.

Mr. Redwood: The relevant provision in the Companies Act 1989 is paragraph 7(1) of schedule 11, which requires recognised supervisory bodies to have adequate rules and practices regarding the professional integrity and independence of company auditors. In addition, the Companies Act 1985 (Disclosure of Remuneration for Non-Audit Work) Regulations 1991, made under section 390B of the Companies Act 1985, require companies that are not small or medium sized to disclose in their accounts the remuneration of their auditors and their associates for non-audit work for the company and its associated undertakings.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what rules he has approved relating to the action which the recognised supervisory bodies are required to take in respect of auditing firms whose standards are found to be deficient.

Mr. Redwood: Before recognising supervisory bodies for company auditors under part II of the Companies Act 1989, my right hon. Friend was satisfied that each had procedures for maintaining auditors' competence, adequate arrangements and resources for monitoring and enforcing compliance with its rules, effective arrangements for the investigation of complaints, and fair and reasonable rules and practices relating to membership, eligibility to accept appointments, and discipline.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make it his policy to require the recognised supervisory bodies to publish the names of the firms found to have poor auditing standards.

Mr. Redwood: The recognised supervisory bodies have undertaken to publish the names of auditors whose performance has been the subject of adverse disciplinary findings.

Instruments of Torture

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps are currently taken by his Department to prevent the export of instruments of torture.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will make it his policy to include exports of equipment used for executions within the remit of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989;

(2) if he will make it his policy to ban any exports from the United Kingdom of any equipment designed for use in the torture or ill treatment of prisoners or the carrying out of executions.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what powers he has to control the manufacture, sale and export of equipment used for execution and torture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is his policy on the manufacture and export of prisoner disorientation equipment;

(2) what is his policy on the exports of instruments of torture including electronic torture chambers.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what export licences are required prior to the export of equipment which could be used for torture or execution;

(2) if he will introduce a ban on the manufacture of equipment which can only be used for torture or for the purpose of execution.

(3) if he will press the European Commission for further European action to control the export of equipment which is likely to be used for internal repression or torture purposes only.

(4) if he will consider taking further measures to prevent British companies exporting equipment which can only be used for torture or for the purpose of execution.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department has received a copy of the Amnesty International report "Repression Trade (UK) Ltd" to which we will respond after careful study. The Government deplore the use of any equipment knowingly exported for the use of torture and other such violations of human rights. The Export of Goods (Control) Order 1991 provides for the control of the export of leg irons, shackles and gang chains. I confirmed on 17 October (Official Report, cols 200-201) the Government's long-held policy that no exports of these items will be permitted.

I announced at the same time measures to control certain oversized handcuffs with a linking chain which were usable as leg irons. Electronic equipment of the type which, it is alleged, has been used for torture is widely available and has many innocent uses. We will also consider Amnesty International's request for controls on the export of death penalty equipment.

There is no legislation controlling the manufacture of this equipment.

Company Directors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the individuals criticised in his Department's report on (a) Pergamon Press and (b) Kina Holdings are still permitted to act as company directors and auditors.

Mr. Redwood: These reports were published many years ago and other than the fact of Mr. Maxwell's death, I do not have information about the present status of those mentioned in the reports. The hon. Member will be aware that the disqualification provisions were enhanced as part of the Government's insolvency law reforms of 1985 and are now consolidated in the Company Directors Disqualification Act.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has made to the European Commission concerning the United Kingdom auditing industry.

Mr. Redwood: Auditing matters have been discussed in connection with negotiations over the fifth draft company law directive.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will investigate the level of audit fees in Britain.

Mr. Redwood: No.

James Ferguson Holdings plc

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many writs he has issued against the advisers to James Ferguson Holdings plc.

Mr. Redwood: One.

Accidents at Work

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to require companies to publish their work accident record in the notes to the accounts.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Bankers' Fees

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has plans to ask the Office of Fair Trading to investigate the fees charged by merchant banks during contested takeovers.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Textiles and Clothing

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet representatives of the textile and clothing industry to discuss the effect of the recession.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Secretary of State and I met with representatives of the textile and clothing industry on 8 January to discuss the Uruguay round. There are no plans at present for a further meeting.

Expo 92

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action the Government has taken to ensure that the interests of the United Kingdom are properly represented at Expo 92 in Seville.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 20 January 1992]: The Government have committed £25 million towards the British presence at Expo 92. This is more than was provided for any previous world exposition. The British pavilion is an outstanding design by Nicholas Grimshaw, an excellent example of the high quality of British engineering, including a spectacular wall of water. Inside, its exciting exhibition demonstrates British innovation and discovery. A wide range of cultural events has been organised for the six month period of Expo 92 and this, together with the pavilion, will show our originality in arts and culture.

WALES

Fish Farms

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information his Department holds on the impact of escapees from fish farms diluting the gene pool of wild species, with particular reference to salmon.

Mr. David Hunt: There is only one marine salmon farm in Wales and any escape of farmed salmon is therefore unlikely to have a significant effect on the stocks of wild salmon in Welsh rivers.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each of the last 10 years the number of fish farms in Wales indicating the location of each one by the use of ordnance survey grid reference numbers.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of fish farms in Wales in each year since 1986 was as follows:

	Number
1986	55
1987	60
1988	65
1989	75
1990	70
1991	68

Data were not collected before 1986. Fish farmers are not required, when registering with my Department, to give the ordnance survey grid references of their sites.

Pembroke Power Station

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions relating to the choice of fuel for the Pembroke power station he has had with the Countryside Council for Wales regarding the advice received from English Nature with regard to the impact of orimulsion on the pollution-sensitive species.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: None. The proposal to extend Pembroke power station (to enable it to burn orimulsion) is currently being considered by the Secretary of State for Energy under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989. I understand that the Countryside Council for Wales (CCW) has lodged an objection with the Department of Energy against the proposal. Concurrently Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) is considering an application from National Power under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 for authorisation to burn orimulsion fuel at Pembroke. As one of the statutory consultees, CCW is being consulted by HMIP about the application.

In these circumstances it would not be appropriate for my right hon. Friend to hold discussions with CCW on this matter, particularly in view of his statutory appellate role in respect of applications under the Environmental Protection Act.

Housing

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will respond to the fifth report of the Welsh Affairs Committee, Session 1990-91, "Affordable Housing" (HC 581).

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I am pleased to announce that the response has been published today.

Student Support

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money was made available to students in Wales through the access funds in the academic year 1990-91; and how many students benefited.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Access funds totalling £600,000 were distributed by the Welsh Office to further and higher education colleges outside the university sector in Wales for the academic year 1990-91. Allocations to individual institutions were made on the basis of eligible student numbers. According to returns from institutions £563,183 in access funds was actually disbursed to 1,930 students, which amounts to an average of about £300 per student assisted. The Universities Funding Council is responsible for the allocation of access funds to colleges of the University of Wales.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

International Organisations

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the name and nationality of the director, secretary-general or president, as applicable of (a) the Commission of the European Communities, (b) the World bank, (c) the International Monetary Fund, (d) the European bank for reconstruction and development, (e) the secretariat of the Council of Europe, (f) the secretariat of the Western European Union, (g) the secretariat of the Conference for Security and Co-operation in Europe and its new institutions, (h) the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and (i) the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade; and if he will make a statement on whether any British citizens are being advanced for these posts when vacancies arise.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: (a) The president of the European Commission is Jacques Delors, a French national. The president is appointed from among the members of the Commission by common accord, and British citizens will be advanced for the post when appropriate.

(b) The president of the World bank is Lewis Preston, a United States national. The post is customarily filled by the United States.

(c) The managing director of the International Monetary Fund is Michel Camdessus, a French national. The post will not become vacant until 1997. A decision about a possible British successor will be made nearer the time.

(d) The president of the European bank for reconstruction and development is Jacques Attali, a French national. The post will not become vacant until 1995, and a decision about a possible British successor will be made nearer the time.

(e) The Secretary General of the Council of Europe is Catherine Lalumiere, a French national. British candidates are advanced for posts in the secretariat as appropriate.

(f) The Secretary General of the Western European Union is W. F. Van Eekelen, of the Netherlands. A Benelux national has always held the post of Secretary-General of the WEU.

(g) The director of the secretariat of the Conference for Security and Co-operation in Europe is Nils Eliasson, a Swedish national; the director of the Conflict Prevention Centre is Bent Rosenthal, a Danish national; the director of the Office of Free Elections is Lucchino Cortese, an Italian national. These posts will become vacant in 1994. A decision on whether to advance British candidates will be made nearer the time.

(h) The Secretary-General of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development is Jean-Claude Paye, a French national. The post will become vacant in 1994. A decision on whether to advance a British candidate will be made nearer the time.

(i) The Director-General of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade is Arthur Dunkel, a Swiss national. The post may become vacant this year, but there is no British candidate.

EC Regional Policy

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his answer of 16 January, Official Report, column 615, which of the objective 1 regions of the European Community regional policy will not benefit from the cohesion funds agreed at the Maastricht summt; whether Her Majesty's Government requested the inclusion of Northern Ireland as a beneficiary of the cohesion fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The following objective 1 regions will not benefit from the cohesion fund: the French overseas departments, Corsica, Abruzzi, Basilicata, Calabria, Campania, Molise, Apulia, Sardinia, Sicily and Northern Ireland.

The cohesion fund benefits member states not regions, with a per capita GNP of less than 90 per cent. of the Community average. Northern Ireland is not a Community member state and so cannot qualify in its own right. The United Kingdom's per capita GNP is too high for it to qualify. Northern Ireland's objective 1 status is not affected by the cohesion fund. It will continue to benefit substantially from the three principal structural funds.

Mrs. Nazir Begum

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Mrs. Nazir Begum, born in 1931, applied to the post in Islamabad to visit her nephew in the United Kingdom; when the letter, dated 19 November 1990, from solicitors in Bradford, inquiring about the application was received by the post; when a decision on the application is to be made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of any information on this case held in the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, I have asked our high commission in Islamabad for a full report. I will give the hon. Member a substantive reply as soon as possible.

Official Visits

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his visits to Kazakhstan, Ukraine and Russia.

Mr. Hurd: I visited Alma Ata (Kazakhstan) on 18 and 19 January, Kiev (Ukraine) on 19 January, and Moscow (Russian Federation) on 19 and 20 January.

In each country, I held talks with the President and with Ministers responsible for foreign affairs and economic matters. I also met the Ukrainian Defence Minister, and Marshall Shaposhnikov, Commander in Chief of the Defence Forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States.

The main objectives of my visits were to discuss problems affecting stability and security, including the secure control and non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and technology; to assess the economic situation in preparation for the Washington conference which I shall be attending on 22 and 23 January; and to develop bilateral relations in their new form following the dissolution of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and recognition of former republics as independent countries.

In all three capitals, I was assured that the agreements of Alma Ata and Minsk of the Commonwealth of Independent States for strategic weapons and forces to be held under central control on behalf of that Commonwealth were being maintained. Russia, continuing the international responsibilities of the former Soviet Union, is a party to the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty. I discussed with the leaders of Kazakhstan and Ukraine the importance of the early accession of their countries to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty as non-nuclear weapon states. The leaders of both countries reiterated their commitment to the eventual removal of all nuclear weapons from their territories. Russia is co-ordinating the centralisation of tactical nuclear weapons before they are destroyed. For the removal of strategic weapons to Russia a deadline of 1994 has been agreed. This is a considerable task, but I was reasonably encouraged by what I heard.

I was pleased also to be told that progress is being made in negotiating agreed solutions to complex problems over the division of forces, although the process clearly has some way to go.

My interlocutors were conscious of the critical importance of all of these questions for future stability within their countries and more widely. I have told them of our readiness to provide advice and assistance. NATO Ministers agreed in December on the principle of offering such help. I think that the leaders I met would welcome help in the safe disposal of surplus weapons.

All the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States face an acutely difficult economic situation. I expressed support for policies of economic reform, and underlined the importance of moving towards integration into the world economic system, including membership of the international financial institutions. I expressed concern about the risk of protectionism and trade barriers between the member states of the Commonwealth and was given detailed accounts of problems arising from the legacy of the command economy, from price liberalisation, and from shortages of food, animal feedstock and consumer goods. My interlocutors expressed appreciation of the support being given by the United Kingdom and the European Community, and pressed for these efforts to be sustained and reinforced. They hoped that the Washington conference will lead to further international action.

In Kazakhstan, I issued with the Foreign Minister a joint statement on the development of bilateral relations. We agreed to exchange diplomatic missions, and to build on the contacts which have already taken place, including commercial exchanges. In Ukraine, I introduced the new British charge d'affaires, and discussed prospects for the opening of embassies in Kiev and London. In Moscow, I prepared in my talks with President Yeltsin and Foreign Minister Kozyrev for the visit to London by President Yeltsin on 30 January, at the invitation of the Prime Minister. We also discussed the meeting of the United Nations Security Council at summit level, which is to take place in New York on the following day.

It was helpful to have this early opportunity to discuss with the leaders of the three largest states in the new Commonwealth the massive political and economic transformation which they are undertaking. It is not surprising that there are strains within the Commonwealth, and much hard bargaining is taking place; but there is also a willingness to find answers. We are developing a close dialogue with the different leaders. They are following a tough-minded approach to political change and economic reform. However difficult the road, they seem determined to continue their course. They need the help of the international community, and it will be in all of our interests to continue to offer this. I therefore assured the leaders of these three countries of the determination of the United Kingdom to build close relations with them.

Namibia

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what extradition arrangements apply between the United Kingdom and Namibia.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

As yet no extradition arrangements have been established between the United Kingdom and Namibia.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Kidney Patients

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the intake of new patients per million of the population in Northern Ireland in 1990 for kidney treatment.

Mr. Hanley: In 1990 the intake of new patients for treatment of end stage renal failure was 62 per million of the population. This does not include patients admitted for other forms of kidney treatment.

Northern Ireland Airports Ltd.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the hon. Hugh O'Neill was appointed as chairman of Northern Ireland Airports Ltd.; and how many persons have served as chief executive of Northern Ireland Airports Ltd. since that date.

Mr. Needham: Mr. O'Neill was appointed in July 1986 since when three people have served as chief executive.

EMPLOYMENT

Bridging Allowance

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, separately for male and female, a table showing for each month since October 1988 (a) the number of young people who were receiving bridging allowance, (b) the number who began claiming bridging allowance and (c) the number of young people who ceased claiming bridging allowance; what were the numbers of those young people who exhausted their bridging allowance payments because they had used up their eight week entitlement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Disability

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what conditions a person with a disability has to satisfy if they wish to be registered under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944; what medical evidence they have to produce; what procedures exist for an appeal against a refusal to register; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: A person who wishes to register as disabled under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 must meet a number of eligibility conditions, which are set out in the 1944 Act, as amended by the 1958 Act, and in regulations made under the 1944 Act. The main conditions, briefly, are as follows:

(1) the person must, as a result of some mental, physical or sensory disability, be substantially handicapped in obtaining or retaining employment or self employment which would otherwise be suited to the person's age, experience and qualifications;
(2) the disability must be likely to last for at least 12 months; and
(3) the person must want to work and have a reasonable prospect of obtaining and retaining suitable employment or self employment.

Medical evidence is not always required to help determine eligibility to register, for example if an individual has an obvious disability. When medical evidence is needed it may be obtained, with the individual's agreement, from a number of sources, including the hospital consultant if the individual is receiving treatment at a hospital. Alternatively, arrangements may be made, by agreement, for the individual to be examined by the regional medical service. Employed applicants for registration may, if they wish, obtain a medical report from their family practitioner.

There is no provision in the Act for a formal appeals procedure where an application to register is refused. However, the Employment Service's disablement resettlement officers, who make decisions on applications, may not reject an application without first referring it for advice to a panel of the local committee for the employment of people with disabilities. Where applications are referred for advice to a panel, the applicant is invited to attend the meeting and put his comments to the panel. In practice, disablement resettlement officers will also consider any representations made by an individual whose application for registration has been refused.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment under what circumstances disabled persons can withdraw themselves from registration under the Disabled Persons (Employment) At 1944; in what other circumstances a disabled person's registration can lapse; if people can appeal against a decision to de-register them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The 1944 Act provides for the volunary withdrawal from registration at any time on receipt, by the Employment Service's disablement resettlement officer, of a written request to do so.

Registration is for a specified period, usually up to 10 years. However, registrations may be renewed, on application, if the eligibility conditions are still being met.

The Act also provides for an individual's registration to be terminated if he or she ceases to meet the eligibility conditions. This provision is rarely used.

There is no provision under the Act for people to appeal against a decision to de-register them before the specified period has elapsed. However, before such a decision is taken, the matter must be referred for advice to a panel of the local committee for the employment of people with disabilities, and the panel's recommendation must be referred, for a decision, to the Employment Service's regional office. Where such matters are referred for advice to a panel, the applicant is invited to attend the meeting and to put his comments to the panel.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has about the number of people out of work who have a health problem which limits the type of work they can do, for each year since 1987, in each region and for Great Britain as a whole.

Mr. Jackson: The available estimates from the "Labour Force Survey" are given in the following table.

People not in employment[1] who have any health problems or disabilities which limit the kind of paid work they can do

Industrial Disputes

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many working days per thousand workers have been lost in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) Great Britain in each of the last five years as a result of industrial disputes.

Mr. Forth: The data for working days lost per thousand workers[1] as a result of industrial disputes in Northern Ireland and Great Britain are as follows:

	Northern Ireland	Great Britain
December 1990 to November 1991[2]	32	35

[2] Latest 12 month period for which data are available. 1991 data are provisional and subject to revision, usually upwards.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Health and Safety

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether the European Community directive on health and safety at work covers the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Beith: I have been asked to reply.

It is the policy of the House authorities to comply with all legislative provisions relating to health and safety at work.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects to publish the Government response to the third report from the Procedure Committee, Session 1990-91, on parliamentary questions.

Mr. MacGregor: I am still considering the report and will reply in due course.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Colleges

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all colleges, giving their names and addresses, in the area of each local education authority, which are proposed should be freed from local education authority control under the terms of the Further and Higher Education Bill [Lords].

Mr. Eggar: On the basis of current information, I append a list of colleges in England maintained or assisted by local education authorities that would transfer automatically or be designated under the Further and Higher Education Bill currently before Parliament. Addresses are available from the "Education Authorities Directory and Annual 1991", a copy of which is in the Library. A definitive list must await an order under the eventual legislation, and would also reflect organisational changes between now and April 1993.

Questions relating to further education in Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Wulfrun College of Further Education

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are his plans for capital grant expenditure for grant-maintained schools for the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Eggar: The planned level of capital expenditure on grant-maintained schools in 1992-93 is £28·5 million.

Each grant-maintained school approved to begin by September 1992 is eligible to receive a formula based allocation to be used for small capital works and items of capital equipment. The formula will be £10,000 per school plus £20 per pupil. Schools becoming grant-maintained in September 1992 will be able to claim $\frac{7}{12}$ of the full year allocation.

We have agreed allocations for named capital projects with a total value of £15·2 million to begin in 1992-93. Some projects are phased over two years. Of the 102 eligible schools 50 have received an allocation for a named capital project. Schools approved to become grant-maintained as from January and April 1992 have been invited to submit bids for capital projects by 27 January. There will be a further announcement for allocations to those schools in due course.

Within the total, there are allocations totalling some £8 million (including £5 million to be spent in 1992-93) for projects at 18 schools which form part of the technology schools initiative which was launched on 4 December. These allocations will enable schools to enhance their provision for technology-related subjects and take forward the teaching of technology in the national curriculum. Four of these schools have been selected as particularly well placed to develop an innovative and committed approach to technology education and be awarded GM technology school status: Bournemouth school, Ecclesbourne school, Great Barr school and St. George's school, Sleaford.

The proposed allocation of £500,000 to St. George's school, Sleaford for a technology block is complemented by a sponsored donation of £250,000 from Mr. Reg Brealey, the school's chairman of governors, through a charitable trust set up for the benefit of the school.

Grant-maintained schools continue to show their energy and commitment. I am sure that these capital allocations will help the schools to realise their full potential. I particularly welcome the allocations for projects within the technology schools initiative which I launched on 4 December.

I shall look to the four schools named as leaders in the field of technology teaching. They will develop close and practical links with business and industry.

The sponsor investment from Mr. Brealey is very generous and an example that I hope others will follow. St. George's school in Sleaford has been interested for some time in becoming a technology school and this project will enable it to become a leader and developer of good practice.

The following is a list of the named capital allocations.

Named Project Capital allocations for grant-maintained schools in 1992-93

[1] Provisional allocation.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drugs (Prison Searches)

2. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison searches in the last 12 months resulted in drugs finds; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: During the year ending 31 December 1991 all methods of searching resulted in 683 drug equipment finds and 2,654 drug finds in prison service establishments in England and Wales.

Carl Bridgewater

8. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the police report into the prosecutions for the murder of Carl Bridgewater.

15. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the Merseyside police to complete their inquiry into the Carl Bridgewater case.

21. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the Merseyside police to complete their inquiry into the Carl Bridgewater case.

Mr. John Patten: The Merseyside police are conducting a thorough investigation into the representations made about the case. Every effort will be made to complete the review as quickly as possible but I cannot say at this stage when the review will be completed.

Children's Rights Convention

13. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of whether the Asylum Bill meets the requirements of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Asylum Bill is consistent with the provisions relating to refugees at article 22 of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child.

Prison Service (Industrial Relations)

16. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Prison Officers Association to discuss industrial relations in the Prison Service.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend last met the Prison Officers Association on 16 September 1991. I met its representatives on 7 November.

Asylum

17. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applicants for asylum status have replied to the offer of an initial interview in response to postal applications.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since 1 November 1991 all persons applying for asylum from within the United Kingdom who have been unable to produce a passport have been requested to attend a short interview for identification purposes. During November and December, 2,350 persons were invited for interview and 471—20 per cent.—attended.

Bail Offenders

18. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce his conclusions following the review of the recent studies of offending on bail.

Mr. John Patten: We are examining carefully the evidence from the review, and considering, in consultation with the Association of Chief Police Officers and others, what further action might reduce offending by people released on bail. We will announce our conclusions as soon as we can.

Vehicle Security

19. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals to ban the sale of car skeleton keys to the general public.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to ban or control the sale of skeleton car keys.

Many people, such as locksmiths and garage owners, have a legitimate need for such keys. These devices are, however, often no more effective in gaining entry to locked vehicles than other more rudimentary tools, such as screwdrivers or shaped pieces of metal, and often require some skill on the part of the user to work effectively.

Inquiries made by the Home Office crime prevention centre and the Association of Chief Police Officers have found that there is no evidence of widespread misuse of skeleton car keys. In particular, the Association of Chief Police Officers has reported that these devices have not been found in the possession of offenders charged with either theft of or from a vehicle. We therefore see no need at present to consider legislating to control the possession, sale or advertising of skeleton keys. We shall, however, continue to monitor closely the sale and use of these devices. It should be noted that it is already a criminal offence, under section 25 of the Theft Act 1968, to carry skeleton keys for use in connection with any burglary or theft, and an offender is liable to imprisonment for up to three years.

Derek Bentley

20. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of his review of the conviction of Derek Bentley.

Mr. John Patten: I have now received a report from the police which is receiving urgent considerations. I hope soon to be in a position to decide whether any action on my part is appropriate in this case.

Prisons

22. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons he has visited in the period since he became Home Secretary.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have visited 24 prison service establishments in England and Wales, and four prisons overseas.

Crime Prevention

23. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his plans to update crime prevention schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Government issued updated guidance on setting up local crime prevention partnership schemes to the police, local authorities and others in 1990. Schemes such as neighbourhood watch and crime prevention panels have now reached record levels. In addition the safer cities programme was increased to 20 projects at the end of last year, and Crime Concern is involved in local crime reduction schemes in 11 areas. Under the drugs prevention initiative 20 local drugs prevention teams are being established to work closely with local communities in finding effective ways of preventing the spread of drugs misuse.

Criminal Activity

24. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the time lags involved before a drop in criminal activity by people in different age groups can be detected.

Mr. John Patten: The best available measure of criminal activity, by age group, is the number of persons cautioned by the police or found guilty by the courts. This information is published annually for each calendar year —figures for 1990 were published in Home Office statistical bulletin 31/91 on 16 December 1991.

Prison Building

25. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new prison places he expects will be available over the next 12 months as a result of his Department's prison building programme.

Mrs. Rumbold: In 1992 nearly 5,000 new prison places are expected to come into use, 3,840 at new prisons and a further 1,014 at existing prison establishments.

Police Cells

26. Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are being held on remand in police stations in Lancashire.

Mrs. Rumbold: Today, there were 91 prisoners held in police cells in the Lancashire police area.

Firemen

27. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many firemen there are in England and Wales; what proportion of these are retained firemen; and what are the wage costs involved in each sector.

Mr. John Patten: On 1 January 1991 there were 49,729 firefighters employed by local authorities in England and Wales, of whom 14,630—29·4 per cent. of the total, were retained firefighters. Estimated salary and wage costs for the financial year 1990-91 were £607·5 million for wholetime and £52·9 million for retained firefighters.

Humberside Police

28. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present establishment of the Humberside police force.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The authorised establishment of the Humberside police is 2,025, an increase of 86 officers since the Government first took office. My right hon. Friend announced on 28 November 1991 his approval for the establishment to be increased by a further nine police posts from 1 April 1992.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on what basis decisions to order detention of those declaring themselves asylum seekers at ports of entry are made;

(2) if he will provide a breakdown of the country of origin of those declaring themselves asylum seekers at ports of entry who were ordered to be detained in each of the years 1980 to 1990;

(3) how many of those who declared themselves asylum seekers at ports of entry were ordered to be detained in each of the years since 1980, and what proportion of those seeking asylum at ports of entry this figure represented in each of those years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Asylum seekers are detained only when the immigration service is not satisfied that they will comply with the terms of temporary admission. The other information requested by the hon. Member is not available centrally.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 13 December, Official Report, column 585, which organisations submitted representations supporting the Government's planned changes to the law governing asylum; and whether he will list the names of these organisations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Amnesty International, the Bar Council, Charter '87, the Council on Tribunals, Justice and UNHCR expressed support for one or more of the Government's proposed changes to asylum procedures, while expressing concerns about others.

Murder Statistics

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the Great Britain totals for each year since 1975 of (a) murders reported to the police, (b) convictions for murder and (c) convictions for murder which have been set aside in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: The total number of homicides reported to the police in England and Wales for each year since 1975 is included in table 4·1 of "Criminal Statistics England and Wales 1989" a copy of which is in the Library. Figures for the number of homicide offences where there was a conviction for murder are shown in table 4·7(b) of the same publication; these figures take account of successful appeals against conviction.

The number of prisoners serving life sentences for murder in prison establishments in England and Wales whose appeal was upheld, who were given a free pardon or whose life sentence was remitted is shown for the period 1976 to 1990, by year of termination of the life sentence.

Year of termination	Successful appeal	Free pardon/ remission
1977	4	0
1978	8	0

Year of termination	Successful appeal	Free pardon/ remission
1979	4	1
1980	5	0
1981	3	0
1982	4	1
1984	5	1
1985	7	2
1986	8	1
1987	5	0
1988	4	0

The information in the table is not readily available for 1975 and data for 1991 are not yet complete.

Immigration

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria for inclusion in the immigration service's (a) INDECS computer, (b) intelligence and investigation unit computer based at Harmondsworth and (c) HOLMES system.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The immigration and nationality department electronic computer system (INDECS) contains details of the immigration status of individuals given conditional leave to enter the United Kingdom on a non-permanent basis.

Information accepted for inclusion in the immigration service intelligence and investigation unit computer is that considered to be of long-term immigration interest.

The HOLMES system is no longer in operation.

Prisoners (Medical Checks)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what medical checks are followed and by whom on prisoners released from prison on the grounds of ill health before the completion of their sentence; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: A decision to release a prisoner early on health grounds will be based inter alia on medical advice from the clinically responsible prison medical officer, usually following consultation with an appropriate specialist or specialists. The nature of the medical examinations carried out in such cases is a matter for the clinicians involved. It is also the medical officer's responsibility to make suitable arrangements with outside health agencies for post-release care.

Ports Records

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the purpose of the port suspect books; what sources of information are used to compile the books; and which authorities have access to the information;

(2) what is the purpose of the Home Office suspects index; what sources of information are used to maintain the index; which authorities have access to the information; and how many people are listed on the index.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The suspect index alerts the immigration officer to take action in respect of an individual who might not be identified in the course of routine examination. Information is received from a number of official sources. The index is used by the immigration authorities in the common travel area. Currently there are some 10,000 entries.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the capacity of the computer on which the Home Office suspects index is kept; and if it is linked to any other immigration service or police computers;

(2) which categories of information held in the port suspect books are computerised.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Home Office suspect index is not computerised and the information contained in it is not received in computerised form.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the ports administration system has rendered redundant any other computer systems or manual information registers previously used at Heathrow, Gatwick and Dover east.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The prototype computer system at Dover eastern docks will become redundant when the port administration system is installed there. The new system will also replace certain manual registers at Heathrow, Gatwick and Dover which record details of people who have been required to submit to further examination, or refused leave to enter, or detained under Immigration Act powers, or in respect of whom a liability has been notified under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the capacity of the computer for the ports administration system; what sources of information are used; and what divisions of the immigration department and which other authorities have access to the system.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The port administration system comprises seven computers, each with disk storage capacity of 1,008 megabytes. It records information about passengers who are the subject of further examination, drawn mainly from interviews, and from documents in their possession. Access to the system is limited to members of the immigration service at the port where each computer is installed. In addition access to all the systems for maintenance purposes is available to a support team of immigration service officers at terminal 3, Heathrow airport, staff of the Home Office computer bureau at Bootle and authorised employees of the hardware contractors.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the ports administration system will be capable of fulfilling the information technology requirements of the 1990 European convention on asylum (the Dublin convention) and the 1991 draft convention on the crossing of external borders of the states of the European Communities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Criminal Intelligence

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of his plans to computerise fully those regional criminal intelligence offices not earmarked for closure; what is the estimated cost of this programme; and if there will be a direct interface between regional offices and the proposed national criminal intelligence service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The five regional criminal intelligence offices not earmarked for closure will become part of the national criminal intelligence service which is to be established on 1 April 1992. Headquarters and regional offices will have direct access to the computer system being developed for the service. Until the specification for the system has been agreed, it is not possible to say what the cost is likely to be.

Police National Computer

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the sub-categories, and the size, of each index on the new police national computer.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The databases on the new police national computer are as follows:

	Entries
Vehicles (including stolen reports)	40,270,232
Persons	5,614,247
Convictions	4,036,366
Fingerprints	4,333,495
Stolen property	39,399
Police directories	3,542
The persons database includes:
Disqualified drivers	273,760
Wanted/Missing persons	141,484

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the purpose of, and what information is held on, the police directories index of the new police national computer.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The index is a computerised version of the police manual which gives the name, address, postcode and telephone number of the force/station code used in PNC records. The index contains similar information for courts and also the codes for PNC terminals. The latter enables forces to send messages to PNC terminals in other forces.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department where the information stored on the extremist crime index of PNC1 is now held.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is being retained on PNC1 for the time being.

European Police Co-operation

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress was made at the Maastricht EC summit in the area of EC police co-operation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The treaty agreed at the European Council at Maastricht provides for a framework for intergovernmental co-operation on justice and home affairs which includes police co-operation in the prevention and combating of terrorism, unlawful drug trafficking and other serious forms of international crime. The European Council also ensorsed proposals for the setting up of a European Police Office (Europol) for the development and exchange of intelligence concerning serious crime.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the initial functions of the proposed Europol; and if Europol will embrace members of (a) the European Community, (b) TREVI and (c) the so-called "friends of TREVI".

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Work on the establishment of Europol is being carried out under the auspices of TREVI, which provides a forum for co-operation on policing matters between member states of the European Community. Thus Europol will embrace all member states of the European Community, though there are at present no plans to go beyond this. It has been agreed that, as a first step, a Europol drugs unit will be set up to facilitate the co-ordination of information and intelligence on drugs misuse and trafficking in member states.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress was made in the field of European police co-operation at the last meeting of the TREVI group.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The meeting of TREVI Ministers held in The Hague on 3 December, attended on my behalf by my right hon. Friend the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten), endorsed measures to strengthen practical police co-operation. These include: the establishment of national contact points for public order matters; guidelines having the aim of strengthening mutual assistance in criminal cases; recommendations on the controlled delivery of drugs; and police co-operation in common frontier zones.

The Ministers agreed to submit a report to the European Council, prepared by the ad hoc working group chaired by the United Kingdom, recommending the establishment of a central European criminal investigation office—Europol—with a drugs unit as its first stage.

Ministers also agreed, at the United Kingdom's suggestion, that car crime should be placed on TREVI's agenda and that the United Kingdom, at the invitation of the Portuguese presidency, should convene an informal seminar of experts on this subject during the first half of 1992.

Data Protection

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the Data Protection Registrar's work has dealt with the transfer of data internationally.

Mrs. Rumbold: I understand that several of the registrar's functions include work related to international transfers of data, but the amount this represents could be determined only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is considering expanding the resources available to the Data Protection Registrar in response to the development of computer systems to exchange police and immigration data between states of the European Community.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is not possible at this stage to assess the resource implications of any system that might in future be established.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the annual staff and administrative expenditure on the offices of the Data Protection Registrar from its inception to date.

Mrs. Rumbold: The total expenditure of the office of the Data Protection Registrar, and the expenditure on salaries and wages, are set out in his annual reports to Parliament. In summary, they are as follows:

	Total expenditure	Of which salaries and wages
1984-85	262,164	8,578
1985-86	1,612,906	273,865
1986-87	2,371,313	615,991
1987-88	2,604,099	680,866
1988-89	2,584,879	825,932
1989-90	2,888,134	947,777
1990-91	3,101,323	1,166,112

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many serving officers of the Metropolitan police force of the rank of inspector or above were reduced in rank as a result of disciplinary hearings in each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: These are matters for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Ports Administration System

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the purpose of the port administration system; and if the system is to be extended to ports of entry other than Heathrow, Gatwick and Dover east.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The purpose of the port administration system is to carry out many existing caseworking functions with greater accuracy and speed, to produce standard forms and to record and collate management and satistical information. A decision will be taken about extending the system to other ports after a post-implementation review of the existing system has been completed later this year.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the ports administration system has the capacity to interface with functionally similar computers in other European Community states.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the ports administration system has indexes of people claiming asylum or people who have tried to gain illegal entry to either (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other EC member states.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The system holds for each port at which it has been installed an index of people, including asylum claimants, who have been required to submit to further examination under the Immigration Act or in respect of whom a liability has been notified under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987. No index is held of people who have tried to gain entry to other EC member states.

Firearms

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will require the use of computerised systems for the registration and licensing of gun shops and firearm dealers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have no plans to do so. Under the Firearms Act 1968 firearms dealers (whether owners of gun shops or not) must be registered with the chief officer of police in whose area their business is located. Under the Firearms Rules 1989 the register held by the police may be kept manually or on computer.

Assaults on Police

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what conclusions he has reached as a result of the Home Office survey of sentences awarded to persons convicted of assaulting police officers.

Mr. John Patten: We will announce our conclusions as soon as we have received and analysed all the returns from the six-month survey which covered the period to 31 December 1991.

Opium Derivatives

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will detail the steps taken by his Department to implement the recommendations contained in paragraph 9.66 of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on opium derivatives, Cm. 630, published in 1988.

Mr. John Patten: The attention of the European Commission and our EC partners has been drawn to the need to develop a common policy with regard to the licit trade in controlled drugs and in particular trade in opium derivatives, as recommended by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. The matter has been raised at meetings of the European Committee Against Drugs (CELAD) and is currently being taken forward by the Commission in discussion with member states.

Operation Container

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the percentage increase of prisoners held in Operation Container in the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of prisoners held in Operation Container increased by 11 per cent. over the 12-month period to 22 January.

During the past year, in order to reduce the number of prisoners held in Operation Container, prison service management brought back into use 340 places in Manchester prison. The role of Everthorpe was changed from young offender institution to adult training prison and additional young offender places have been made available in Stoke Heath young offender institution and remand centre. In addition the roles of two young offender establishments in the midlands have been changed to adult use in order to increase the number of adult training places available generally for the allocation of sentenced adult prisoners. Every effort is being made by the prison service fully to utilise available accommodation in the north-west.

Mr. Sohail Yousaf

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the naturalisation application of Mr. Sohail Yousaf of 59 Maryland road, Stratford, London E15, was referred to the Metropolitan police for the purposes of arranging an interview; and when he expects the interview to take place.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Mr. Yousaf's application was first referred to the Metropolitan police on 6 March 1990. The papers were returned to the Home Office in April 1990 when Mr. Yousaf requested an endorsement to be placed in his passport. After completion of this action his papers were referred back to the police on 17 May 1991. I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that a date has not yet been fixed for Mr. Yousaf's interview but an interview should be arranged within the next three months.

Police Statistics

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the increase in the authorised establishment of police officers in each year since 1987 for (a) England and Wales and (b) north Yorkshire.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is set out in the table and is provided on the basis of financial years:

Year	England and Wales	North Yorkshire
1987-88	859	nil
1988-89	965	nil
1989-90	1,156	15
1990-91	1,030	25
1991-92	711	6

Mr. Akhtar Zaman

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when instructions were sent to the post in Islamabad to issue an entry clearance visa to Mr. Akhtar Zaman (Ref: 81956) enabling him to join his wife in the United Kingdom; when they were received in Islamabad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A copy of the adjudicator's determination was sent to the entry clearance officer in Islamabad on 20 December 1991 and arrived on 8 January 1992. A visa was issued on 20 January.

ESDA Testing

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on evidence that officers have been instructed to place a plastic card under the page on which hand-written statements of evidence are being recorded to frustrate any subsequent ESDA testing.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that plastic cards were introduced for officers conducting surveillance operations for two main purposes; to stiffen the soft-cover notebooks used and to provide officers with procedural guidance which is printed on the card. Each note book and each page of every notebook is uniquely numbered and this ensures the integrity of the record.

Plastic cards are not used between the sheets of manual records of interviews with suspects.

Travellers

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to review the law affecting gipsies.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I take it that my hon. Friend is referring to the use of section 39 of the Public Order Act 1986 which deals with aggravated trespass. We have only recently conducted a thorough public review of section 39. The Home Secretary announced his conclusions on 22 May 1991. He decided that no change to the law was required at present.

SCOTLAND

Housing Finance

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the housing revenue account capital allocation for (a) Edinburgh and (b) Scotland for each of the past 10 years; and if he will give the percentage in each year based on capital receipts.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The gross HRA capital allocations and the percentage based on capital receipts, issued to Edinburgh and to Scottish local authorities in aggregate in each year since 1982-83 are set out in the table. The figures incorporate any supplementary allocations made during the year and are expressed in cash terms.

Royal Navy Reserve

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the occasions when port divers from the Royal Navy Reserve have rendered assistance to police forces, coast guards or harbour authorities in Scotland in the last five years; and if he will make a statement on the effect of the closure of Royal Navy Reserve port diving branch on such civil authorities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Assistance from RN divers is sought occasionally but there are no separate records showing when this was provided by RN Reserve port divers. I do not anticipate that the closure of the RN Reserve port diving branch will have any significant effect on such authorities.

Dental Anaesthesia

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will now publish his response to the Poswillo report on safety in dental anaesthesia.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Poswillo report was commissioned by the Secretary of State for Health's standing dental advisory committee and his response to the clinical recommendations of the report was published on 18 October 1991. The Secretary of State for Scotland concurred with his views and a similar paper was issued in Scotland on the same day. Funds of £1·2 million are being made available to health boards in 1992-93 to commence the implementation of the report's recommendations.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, for each year since 1965, the number of children under the age of 16 years who have died in Scotland while undergoing, or shortly after undergoing, general anaesthesia for dental treatment in (a) dentists' surgeries and (b) hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 13 December 1991]: It is not possible to provide these numbers in the form requested. Death certificates from which the information has been taken do not always record that a death occurred under anaesthetic or shortly after it, nor, if death did occur under these circumstances, why or where the anaesthetic was administered. The figures include all deaths to children under the age of 16 years in Scotland where the death certificate did indicate that the death occurred during or following general anaesthesia and that the anaesthetic was administered during dental treatment.

[1] The death in 1987 is one which is known to have occurred under the conditions requested but which could not be identified through the death certificate.

On Monday, 20 January I opened a new dental and oral surgery, orthodontus and endoscopy unit at Falkirk and Royal district hospital. The new unit will provide a high quality general anaesthetic service for community dentistry.

Shettleston Health Centre

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cost of the recent re-decoration of Shettleston health centre; how many rolls of wallpaper and square yards of carpeting were used; and what were the costs per roll and per square yard.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member has written to the general manager of Greater Glasgow health board who is responsible for these matters.

Health Boards Circular

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate when the proposed circular on inter-agency co-operation dealing with resource transfer from health boards to local authorities will be published; and if he will make a statement as to its scope.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's proposals for resource transfer were issued for consultation on 13 January 1992. As well as continuing with shared financing we propose to introduce arrangements to enable boards to transfer resources to local authorities where it is proposed to transfer the responsibility for obtaining care for individuals or groups of people. These arrangements would include cash transfers where boards considered these appropriate. The "dowry" scheme, introduced in England in the 1980s, is an example of such a transfer.

Limestone Pavement

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many areas of limestone pavement have been notified for protection in Scotland; how many have had orders made; and when limestone pavement protection will be complete in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The presence of limestone pavement is one of several features which in each case have led to the notification of seven separate sites of special scientific interest under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. No orders have been made for any of these sites but it is open to the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland or the Countryside Commission for Scotland to seek such further protection should the need arise.

Fish Farms

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that the level of fees charged by river authorities in Scotland to fish farms are related to the size of enterprises and quantity of water used.

Mr. Lang: Charges under the river purification boards' charging schemes are related to the cost to the boards of monitoring specific discharges. The amount of monitoring reflects the protection necessary for the water environment in each case. Charges for fish farms vary according to a range of factors which are not always related to size. These include the degree of dilution available at each location and the sensitivity to pollution of the waters concerned. The board's schemes have been approved following extensive consultation with interested parties and we have no plans to seek changes at this time.

Doctors

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many serving doctors are members of health boards; and how many of those are from the Indian subcontinent.

Mr. Lang: There are eight serving doctors among the non-executive members of health boards; and 13 doctors, mainly directors of public health, among the executive members. Records of ethnic origin of health board members are not held centrally at present.

Fire Regulations

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make it his policy not to amend the building standards for Scotland to include a trade-off between fire resistance periods and the installation of sprinklers until there is evidence to show that fire safety will not be jeopardised;

(2) if he will make it his policy not to alter the building regulations for Scotland in respect of fire resistance periods and structural non-combustibility to conform with the England and Wales building regulations until his experts have had the opportunity to assess the impact in practice of those regulations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations are regularly reviewed to take account of changing circumstances and legislation consequent upon European Community directives. Any proposed amendments are first considered by the Building Standards Advisory Committee before going out for consultation with relevant interested bodies. No amendments will be made therefore until there has been the opportunity for all shades of opinion to be taken fully into account.

Forestry Commission Land

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the land that was sold by the Forestry Commission in 1991 in each county or region, giving the name of the property, the amount of land sold, the name of the purchaser and the amount of money the land was sold for; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Forestry Commission is preparing a list of the areas of forest land which it sold in 1991. I shall arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Details of sales of land other than forest land are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

ESAs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce the areas he is considering to designate as environmentally sensitive areas; with whom he is consulting about this initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend has sought advice from the statutory conservation agencies in Scotland on the areas suitable for designation as environmentally sensitive areas. Consideration is currently being given, in consultation with the conservation agencies, to proposals for a number of areas and an announcement will be made in due course.

Islay (Geese)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he took to ensure that the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland would meet all interested parties to reach a conclusion with regard to goose management on Islay before the beginning of the autumn season in 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 January 1992]: It is for the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland (NCCS) to decide the nature and timing of the consultations which will take this matter forward. The chairman of NCCS, Magnus Magnusson KBE, met the Islay Goose management committee in February 1991. Officials of NCCS have maintained a dialogue with the management committee subsequently. They have also taken part in a series of joint meetings with the Scottish Office Environment Department and the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department seeking to develop proposals for future goose management arrangements. Given the complexities of the matter it has not been possible to provide a new system of financial support for farmers for the present season but proposals for future years are to be put to the local area of the National Farmers Union of Scotland in February. To cover the period from autumn 1991 when geese have been on the island, the arrangements for scaring to protect crops and grassland were extended in October 1991 for a further year.

Coal Industry

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons were employed in the coal industry in Scotland in (a) 1979, (b) 1984, (c) 1989 and (d) 1991, respectively.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 20 January 1992]: The number of persons employed in coal extraction and manufacture of solid fuels in Scotland was 17,150 in 1984 and 3,420 in 1989. These data are taken from the census of employment: the data from the 1991 census are not yet available, and no census was conducted in 1979.

British Steel

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the dates of the meetings between himself or any other Scottish Office Minister and the management of British Steel during the last six months.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 January 1992]: My hon. Friend and I met the chairman of British Steel on 6 January.

HEALTH

Dental Anaesthesia

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will now publish his response to the Poswillo report on safety in dental anaesthesia.

Mr. Dorrell: My noble friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, announced on 18 October 1991 that most of the clinical recommendations made by the expert working party under the chairmanship of Professor Poswillo have been accepted. Additional funds will be made available from April this year to ensure that where general anaesthesia is necessary during dental treatment the highest standards are met.

Bio Products Laboratory

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will include the Bio Products Laboratory in the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what account is taken by the Bio Products Laboratory in establishing its prices for plasma-related products of (i) the return on sales of red blood cells products and (ii) the total cost of producing plasma-related products;

(3) if he will make it his policy to publish the accounts of the Bio Products Laboratory separately from those of the Central Blood Laboratories Authority;

(4) if he will list the surpluses or losses made by the Bio Products Laboratory in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Bio Products Laboratory is an integral part of the Central Blood Laboratories Authority. As with commercial enterprises, its internal management accounts are not intended for publication. The Central Blood Laboratories Authority publishes an annual report covering its activities as a whole. In the past five years, the Central Blood Laboratories Authority has stayed within the cash limit set by the Department.

The Bio Products Laboratory produces only plasma-derived products, not cellular products. In establishing its prices, the Bio Products Laboratory takes account of its operating costs, which include reimbursement of the cost of plasma collection by the regional transfusion centres.

There are no plans at present to include the Bio Products Laboratory in the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the products which were affected by the transitional arrangements on licensing when the Bio Products Laboratory lost its Crown immunity status on 1 April.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested in respect of the Bio Products Laboratory is confidential by virtue of the restrictions on disclosure contained in section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968.

Mental Illness

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many residential places and places for day care for the mentally ill there were in (a) 1979-80 and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Dorrell: Information on residential and day centre places provided by local authority social services departments at 31 March 1980 and the latest available date is given in the table. Detailed figures for the period 1980 to 1990 were published in the statistical bulletin "Personal Social Services: Provision for people with mental illness in England 1980-90", a copy of which is in the Library. Information is not available centrally on the numbers of day care places provided by mental illness hospitals.

Number of places in residential homes and day centres for people with mental illness

Genetic Research

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what ethical guidelines have been published by his Department for research scientists engaged in genetic research.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has issued guidance to local research ethics committees to which all proposals for research on human subjects in the national health service must be submitted for approval. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

On 16 January 1992 the Government published the report of the Committee on the Ethics of Gene Therapy. The Government are consulting widely on the conclusions and recommendations of the committee and will decide what steps to take once the consultation process is completed.

Diagnostic Equipment

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set a guideline as to the number of magnetic resonance imagers that is needed to serve the diagnostic health needs of the British people.

Mr. Dorrell: Magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) is only one of a number of diagnostic imaging techniques which include conventional radiography, nuclear medicine, ultrasound and computerised tomography. It is therefore not possible to give any generally valid guidance on the number of magnetic resonance imaging imagers needed either for England and Wales as a whole or for individual regions. Provider units in each region will need to assess their need for additional imagers in the light of diagnostic facilities already available and their own and purchasing authorities' judgment of clinical priorities.

Private Health Insurance

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation to prevent the private health insurance schemes placing restrictions on payment for in-patient psychiatric care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: It is for the companies concerned to decide the cost and scope of cover offered. The national health service continues to provide comprehensive care to all, regardless of means.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received about the performance of the London ambulance service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received a number of representations. The London Ambulance Service Board is currently introducing measures to improve performance, including —Spending £1·5 million on new technology to improve response times.

—Introducing 60 new frontline accident and emergency and patient transport vehicles at a cost of £3·8 million.
—The recent introduction of motor cycles manned by paramedics to overcome traffic congestion problems.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what were the total numbers of patients removed from waiting lists for reasons other than admission in the six months ended September 1991;

(2) what were the numbers of patients admitted from the waiting lists in the six months ended September 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Provisional figures for September 1991, which are based on 90 per cent. of expected returns, show that admissions from waiting lists increased from 1,384,900 to 1,390,300 (0·4 per cent.) in the six months since March 1991.

Removals from waiting lists for reasons other than admission fell from 168,918 to 165,200 (2 per cent.) in the same period.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which hospitals were used in the survey of patients' attitudes for the information given in his press release of 14 January on NHS trusts; and what was the sample size of the survey.

Mr. Dorrell: The survey was carried out amongst 901 patients at the following trust hospitals:

Newcastle Mental Health NHS trust
Hillingdon Hospital NHS trust
Southend Healthcare NHS trust
The Guy's and Lewisham NHS trust
The West Dorset General Hospitals NHS trust
Taunton and Somerset NHS trust
Walsall Hospitals NHS trust
Manchester Central Hospitals and Community Care NHS trust

Dementia

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many elderly patients suffering from dementia have been taken in the past year from hospitals in London to private nursing homes in the North and elsewhere in the United Kingdom, thus transferring the costs of caring for them from hospitals to the Department of Social Security; what consultation his Department has had with the Royal College of Psychiatrists about the effects of this for the patients concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The data held centrally do not record the geographical location of patients on discharge.

It has been made clear to health authorities in health circular HC(89)5 that patients should not be discharged until proper arrangements have been made for any continuing care which may be necessary.

In addition, circular HC(90)23/LASSL(90)11 provides that no mentally ill patient should be discharged without an agreed care programme which ensures that their needs for continuing health and social care and for accommodation are assessed and that appropriate arrangements are made. Care programmes must include the nomination of a key worker to keep in close touch with the patient and monitor the provision of the agreed package of health and social care. If appropriate care in the community cannot be arranged, then the patient must be offered in-patient care. Copies of both circulars are available in the Library.

Officials of the Department have regular contact with the Royal College of Psychiatrists' section of old age psychiatry. In November last year the Department supported a one-day conference on long-term care held by the royal college.

Child Health

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government are taking to reduce inequalities in child health.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 20 January 1992]: The Government's approach to variations in the health of children and other groups was set in paragraphs 4.15 and 4.16 of the "The Health of the Nation" (Cm. 1523), a copy of which is in the Library. In particular, the Government have, as there explained, sought to tackle specific issues which can be targeted for effective action. Examples in the field of child health include guidance on children's needs for hospital services (already issued) and for community services (in preparation), improvements to record levels in the rates of immunisation to reduce death and disability from preventable diseases, increased participation by GPs in child health surveillance and increased emphasis on investigating the causes of perinatal deaths.

In making such changes the Government will continue to make the best use possible of the improved systems now available for the delivery of health care, including the contractual arrangements with GPs and between purchasers and providers, and the new responsibilities of health authorities for assessing the health and health care needs of their local population and for the better integration of family, community and hospital services.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the future role of (a) general practitioners, (b) health visitors, (c) nurses and (d) clinical medical officers and senior clinical medical officers in the development of child health services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 20 January 1992]: In addition to general health services such as immunisation programmes, a key aspect of the development of child health services is the provision of child health surveillance. An important change, since the introduction in April 1990 of the new GP contract, has been the increase, to over 50 per cent., in the number of GPs now undertaking primary child health surveillance of children under five. As a consequence we are, with NHS management and the professions, taking steps to ensure that the respective duties of doctors, health visitors and nurses in the community child health services are reviewed and updated. Health authorities are being issued with a core programme for child health surveillance prepared by the professions. A joint working party, with the conference of (medical) royal colleges and the British Medical Association, is also considering the integration of medical staff careers in the hospital and community child health services.

DEFENCE

Plutonium

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any contracts with the Atomic Energy Authority for research into the fabrication of weapons' components using plutonium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There are no such contracts.

Building 220, Harwell

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the recent refurbishment of building 220 at Harwell is related to any contract which has been placed with the Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No.

"Secrets of the Sands"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will obtain for his Departmental Library a copy of the transcript and videocassette of the BBC 2 nature programme "Secrets of the Sands" on the United Kingdom nuclear test site at Maralinga in Australia, broadcast on 28 October.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department has a copy of this programme.

Rescue Helicopters

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received for an increase in the number of rescue helicopters based at RAF Chivenor.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since 1 October 1989, when search and rescue cover at RAF Chivenor was reduced to daylight hours only, my Department has received one such representation.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions the rescue helicopters at RAF Chivenor were (a) called out and (b) called to locations in Somerset in each of the last four years for which figures are available.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is given in the table:

Year	Number of Callouts	Number of Callouts to locations in Somerset
1988	188	4
1989	189	7
1990	157	5

Marine Markers

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about his Department's recent removal of the seaward marker of the western limit of the measured mile at Spithead, from Browndown, Gosport.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Three representations have been received from commercial shipbuilders in the area.

Spithead Marker

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will take any necessary action to restore a seaward marker for the western limit of the measured mile at Spithead, to replace the marker recently removed by the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Royal Navy no longer has a requirement for the measured mile at Spithead and one of the western markers was removed to make way for the erection of an aerial farm on the same site. There are no plans to replace the marker. Other measured mile facilities are available around the coast.

Nuclear Reactors (Decommissioning)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what will be the expected cost to his Department of the eventual decommissioning of the Calder Hall and Chapelcross reactors;

(2) if he will make a statement about the expected lifespan of the Calder Hall and Chapelcross magnox reactors.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The expected lifespan of the reactors at Calder hall and Chapelcross is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels Limited and the nuclear installations inspectorate. British Nuclear Fuels Limited has responsibility for assessing the costs of decommissioning these reactors. MOD's share of the costs will be influenced by a number of factors that cannot be accurately determined at this time.

Hafnium

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's use of the element hafnium.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Hafnium is a constituent of alloys used in engines for both civil and military aircraft as well as certain other classified applications.

Nuclear Weapons Safety Review

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the current procedure for reporting the recommendations of the nuclear weapons safety review;

(2) what have been the 10 most recent recommendations of the nuclear weapons safety review; on what dates they were recommended; and what action has been taken to implement them.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 20 January at column 20.

Civilian Employees

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the current total of his Department's civilian employees and the percentage based in Scotland, together with cost of employment for the relevant figures.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 1 October 1991, my Department employed a total of 140,697 United Kingdom-based civilians and a further 27,588 locally engaged civilians overseas. The estimated total cost of employment of civilian staff in 1991-92 is £2,849 million. Approximately 8·6 per cent. of the United Kingdom-based civilians are employed in Scotland. The estimated cost of civilian employment in Scotland is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Kirkcudbright Range

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what inquiry has been carried out into alleged irregularities at the Kirkcudbright range; what was the outcome of the inquiry; what action he has taken as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A number of allegations were made in August last year by TGWU representative concerning misuse of official property and labour at the Kirkcudbright range, which is part of the military division of the Defence Research Agency. The allegations were investigated by the Ministry of Defence police who concluded that there were no grounds for proceeding with criminal charges against the individuals concerned. It was evident, however, that there were a number of management deficiencies that should be rectified. This is now in hand. The managing director of the division has taken the necessary managerial action to ensure that such deficiencies will not recur.

Forces Benevolent Funds

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will request the service benevolent funds to report to him on the use they have made of funds donated to the Gulf trust that were passed to them; and if he will place copies of the reports in the Library;

(2) how much money donated to the Gulf trust by the public was allocated by him to each of the service benevolent funds.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The service benevolent funds are meeting claims arising from the Gulf conflict by payments made to them from the Gulf trust fund; so far, over £600,000 has been distributed. Final allocations to the service benevolent funds of moneys donated to the Gulf trust will take place when the Gulf trust is formally wound up; this is planned for February 1993. It is not the practice for the service benevolent funds to release details of how they have dealt with individual cases.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will bring forward proposals to lessen the difference in levels of payment from Government Departments and the forces benevolent funds received by members of the forces who sustain similar injuries whilst serving in (a) the Falklands war, (b) the Gulf war and (c) in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. Particular account was taken of the experience of operating the South Atlantic fund when establishing the Gulf trust. The main aim was to provide for the long-term relief of the physical and mental distress and financial needs of those who suffered as a result of the Gulf conflict, and we are satisfied that the Gulf trust, working through the service benevolent funds, provides the best and most effective way of meeting that aim.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what conditions were laid down by him for the use of Gulf trust money by the service benevolent funds; and if the money can be paid to anyone other than members of the forces who participated in the Gulf war or their families.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The deed of trust for the Gulf trust prescribes that moneys must be used to meet the financial needs of the beneficiaries and for the relief of sickness, distress or any other physical or mental disability, arising from the involvement of the Armed Forces in military and other operations relating to or in connection with the Gulf conflict. Potential beneficiaries are limited to members of the Armed Forces involved in the Gulf conflict; civilian personnel attached to or accompanying the Armed Forces in the Gulf conflict; and their respective dependants.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints he has received from members of the forces who served in the Gulf, their families or their representatives, regarding the distribution of money given by the public to the Gulf trust; and what was the nature of the complaints.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A small number of representations has been made to the Department about the use of Gulf trust money. It would be inappropriate to comment on individual cases.

Faslane Submarine Base

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many methods are available of achieving the same effect as that being worked on in the abandoned magnetic treatment facility project, Faslane; and what estimate has been made of the cost of adapting these alternatives to the enhanced specifications currently derived for submarines.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Following the decision not to proceed with the magnetic treatment facility, work is currently under way to examine alternative means of achieving the effective magnetic treatment of submarines. Firm cost estimates have not yet been made but we expect costs to be significantly less than for the original project.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) of 20 December, Official Report, column 387, on the magnetic treatment facility project, when it was abandoned; and what percentage of the original budget for the magnetic treatment facility, Faslane, the sum spent represented.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The decision not to proceed with the magnetic treatment facility project was reached in June 1991. Expenditure at the time of cancellation represented 23 per cent. of the original cost estimate.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate was made of the cost effectiveness and likely completion of the magnetic treatment facility project, Faslane, before giving it his approval.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: As with all Ministry of Defence equipment projects, the cost effectiveness of the proposed magnetic treatment facility project was subject to careful examination in the light of all the available evidence before it was approved. The project was judged to represent good value for money at the original cost estimate to meet the operational requirement for the rapid and efficient magnetic treatment of submarines. The project was to be completed in the mid-1990s.

MV Polar Circle

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long is the lease taken out on the MV Polar Circle; if it remains his policy to retain a naval vessel in Falklands waters beyond April 1992; and if he will consider renaming MV Polar Circle, HMS Endurance for the duration of its lease.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Pursuant to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea on 8 November at column 295, the Government are to purchase HMS Polar Circle as the permanent replacement of HMS Endurance as the Antarctic ice patrol ship. Polar Circle will return to home waters in May on completion of this season's patrol. She will remain Polar Circle for the rest of her current deployment. Her permanent name can now be considered, and it is intended that the Admiralty Board will reach a decision by the time she returns to the United Kingdom.

Woolwich Garrison

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be able to answer the letter sent to him by the chair of the public protection committee of Greenwich council regarding radioactive contamination discovered at the Woolwich garrison.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department replied earlier this week.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what happened to the Kuwait office of the Defence Export Services Organisation during the Iraqi occupation of that country; and what is the current position.

Mr. Alan Clark: The First Secretary (Defence Supply) is the Defence Export Services Organisation representative in the British embassy in Kuwait. He was out of the country on leave when the Iraqi invasion took place and returned in April 1991.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the overseas offices of the Defence Export Services Organisation, together with the dates they were set up.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Defence Export Services Organisation has established overseas offices as follows:

	Year
Washington	1972
New Delhi	1984
Riyadh	1984
Kuala Lumpur	1986
Seoul	1988
Ankara	1988
Kuwait	1988
Canberra	1989
Jakarta	1991
Bangkok	1991

Menwith Hill Station

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the police post at Menwith Hill station in North Yorkshire was built and at what total cost; on which budget the expenditure was shown; and what agencies in the United Kingdom or overseas contributed to the costs of construction.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who owns the land on which Menwith Hill station is located; who has the power to evict and charge persons entering the station and surrounding land; and whether any part of the land is leased.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The land on which Menwith Hill station is located is owned by the Secretary of State for Defence, in right of the Crown. Those authorised by the Secretary of State, as the landowner, are entitled to remove trespassers from Menwith Hill station. Local farmers are licensed to make use of parts of the site under the Agricultural Holding Acts.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons those who trespass at Menwith Hill station have been evicted for civil trespass rather than arrested under byelaw 2(b) of the Forest Moor and Menwith Hill byelaws; what plans he has to seek injunctions, similar to that served on Ms. Lindis Percy, to be served on others; and what plans he has for legislation to replace the byelaws.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Whilst we consider that the HMS Forest Moor and Menwith Hill station byelaws remain valid, it is at present Crown prosecution service policy not to prosecute under these byelaws. Improvements to the byelaws are currently under review. Further injunctions against other persistent trespassers are under consideration.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Rates

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate how many Northern Ireland pensioners and others in receipt of benefits other than income support will pay more rates in 1991-92 as a percentage of disposable income than they paid in 1990-91.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Harbour Improvements

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on improvements to the harbours at Church Bay and at Ballycastle.

Mr. Needham: In the current financial year Moyle district council, with the aid of grant from the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, has undertaken improvements to the harbours at Church bay, Rathlin and Ballycastle. These works include dredging at Church bay and repairs to Boyd's wall, Ballycastle. In addition hydraulic model testing, which will assist the design work on proposed major improvements at Ballycastle, will shortly be completed.

The Department had hoped to be able to provide substantial grant support to the council over the financial years 1992-93 and 1993-94 for major improvement works to both harbours. In the event it has not proved possible to allocate the necessary resources for this purpose. However the council and the Department are now considering, as an interim measure, the provision of slipways at both harbours which would enable a small roll-on/roll-off vessel to operate the ferry service between the two harbours.

Child Benefit

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the cost of the provision of child benefit in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Hanley: The total expenditure on child benefit was as follows:

	£ million
1986-87	177·3
1987-88	182·8
1988-89	178·2
1989-90	180·2
1990-91	182·4

Ecstasy

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what problems have been reported regarding use of ecstasy and similar drugs in the Province; and what action is being taken to meet those problems.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 17 January 1992]: I am informed by the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary that misuse of ecstasy, LSD and amphetamine is increasing in Northern Ireland. These drugs continue to be associated with young people and places of entertainment, particularly "rave parties". The RUC is working closely with other police forces in Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland, and with Her Majesty's Customs, to counter this trend in drugs misuse.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Universities (Research Funding)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money allocated by the Universities Funding Council in 1990-91 to each university and university college can be identified as being for research; and of this allocation how much was utilised for purposes other than research by each institution.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Universities Funding Council allocated £680 million on research-based criteria to universities in academic year 1991-92. This sum was not hypothecated for research. The council has allowed each institution to determine its own spending on teaching and research within the aggregate funds available to it from all sources.

A-Levels

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students were entered for advanced-level examinations in mathematics, physics and chemistry in England and Wales, for each year from 1979 to the present, giving the information (a) as the number of entrants and (b) as a percentage of the total number of entrants for all subjects in that year.

Mr. Eggar: For the academic years 1978-79 to 1989-90 —the latest year for which information is available—the numbers of school leavers attempting advanced level examinations in mathematics, physics and chemistry in English schools, were as are shown in the table. The table also shows these numbers as a percentage of all school leavers attempting any subject at the advanced level.

The figures for Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Primary Classes

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will estimate the current cost of reducing all primary class sizes to 30 or less; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The average size of classes taught by one teacher in maintained primary schools in January 1991 was 26·3. If local education authorities and schools were to organise their provision differently, pupils in primary schools could be taught in class sizes of 30 or less with the existing number of teachers in primary schools.

Primary School Teachers

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out his estimates of the number of primary school teachers he expects to be employed in each school year until 1996-97.

Mr. Fallon: A total of 176,300 full-time equivalent teachers were employed in primary schools in January 1991, the latest year for which we have information. The number of teachers which will be employed in each year up to 1996-97 will depend on the decisions taken by local education authorities and schools with delegated budgets on the deployment of the funds at their disposal.

Youth Service, Warwickshire

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with Warwickshire county council about its decision to completely close its youth service from 1 April 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: None. I understand that a proposal is to be considered by the education committee of Warwickshire county council on 28 January to end the directly provided youth and community service, and to make such provision in future through voluntary groups, schools and colleges.

The youth service is statutorily part of further education. Section 41 of the 1944 Education Act, which is inserted under section 120 of the Education Reform Act, places a duty on loal education authorities to secure the provision of adequate facilities for further education. Section 53 of the 1944 Act places a duty on local education authorities to secure that the facilities for primary, secondary and further education provided for their area include adequate facilities for recreation and social and physical training. It is for each local education authority to discharge these statutory obligations in accordance with local needs, circumstances and priorities.

School Leavers

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide a table showing for Greater London the numbers of young people who left school at each of ages 16, 17, and 18 years in each year since 1988, the numbers expected to leave school in 1992, and the number of people at each of these ages in each of those years.

Mr. Fallon: The following table gives the breakdown of the pupils leaving school in Greater London, analysed by age for the years 1987-88 to 1989-90—the latest year for which information is available. The table also shows the projected population figures for Greater London for the same years.

Music

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the teaching of music in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. Friend issued last August proposals for music and art in the national curriculum, representations on which were sent to the National Curriculum Council.

In the light of the National Curriculum Council's advice, he intends on Monday to publish for consultation, draft orders with associated documents setting out attainment targets and programmes of study for art and music in the national curriculum for pupils aged five to 14, as he is required to do by section 20(5) of the Education Reform Act. Copies will be placed in the Library.

The period for consultation on the draft orders will end on 4 March 1992. My right hon. Friend intends to make the final orders in March 1992 in good time for schools to begin teaching national curriculum art and music to pupils aged five, seven and 11 from the following autumn. The draft orders apply to England. My right hon. Friend will be publishing for consultation draft orders for art and music for Wales.

TRANSPORT

British Rail Escalators

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to keep records on the number of escalators operated by British Rail; and how many of them are broken at any one time and for how long.

Mr. Freeman: These are operational matters for British Rail.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what procedure he has set up to consult the London borough of Newham over the route of the channel tunnel rail route and the new international station to be built at Stratford.

Mr. Freeman: I intend very shortly to issue invitations to a consultative forum for local authorities affected by the proposed route corridor and stations for the channel tunnel rail link.

Railways (Research and Development)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how research and development for the railways will be funded after the privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: This will depend on the future structure of British Rail, on which the Government have not yet taken decisions.

SS Richard Montgomery

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is now able to make a statement on the recent survey on the SS Richard Montgomery.

Mr. McLoughlin: A very thorough survey of this dangerous wreck was completed in September. The Medway ports authority has since completed a fresh hydrographic survey of the surrounding area.

There is no evidence of any recent major changes to the wreck itself, although it continues to deteriorate and may be expected to begin to break up within a few years. No dangerous material was identified during the latest survey, although a substantial quantity of explosives must be presumed to remain on board. The surveys have shown that the silt around the site is mobile and extensive scouring under the wreck itself was observed. This can only accelerate its breaking up and the disappearance of what is now still visible above the water surface.

I have decided in the light of the survey findings that the site of the wreck should remain a prohibited area under the Protection of Wrecks Act 1973 and that no attempt be made to clear it or its cargo. The wreck will continue to be monitored and another survey will be undertaken in due course.

I have placed in the Library a paper summarising the results of these and previous surveys, and the steps taken over the years to quantify and contain the danger from explosives on this wreck.

I am sending a copy to my hon. Friend.

ENVIRONMENT

Genetic Engineering

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what research his Department is funding into whether genetically engineered micro-organisms decay in the environment or multiply in an uncontrollable fashion threatening ecological balance;

(2) what research his Department is funding into the possible hazards to the health of man and of animal and plant life from the release of genetically engineered micro-organisms into the environment.

Mr. Baldry: My Department spent over £1 million in 1990-91 on research into genetically modified organisms and expects to maintain future expenditure at a similar level. A substantial part of the research programme focuses on risks associated with the release of genetically modified micro-organisms, and more particularly on developing and assessing techniques for their isolation, identification and tracking in the environment. Results from this research are now being used to determine accurately whether populations of micro-organisms multiply or decay after release and to assess their subsequent impacts on other organisms in the environment.

Greenhouse Effect

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's estimate of the contribution to the greenhouse effect from (a) the combustion of fossil fuels in Britain and (b) the escape of natural gas into the environment during the production and processing of North sea gas and its distribution to the consumer.

Mr. Baldry: Revised figures for annual United Kingdom emissions of greenhouse gases up to 1990 will be published in late February or early March in the 14th edition of the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics". The new estimates indicate that in 1990 United Kingdom emissions of CO_2 from fossil fuel combustion were about 2·6 per cent. of world emissions. Current estimates of world methane emissions from natural gas production are uncertain within a factor of at least two. United Kingdom emissions in 1990 can therefore be estimated only very approximately at between 1·7 per cent. and 3 per cent. of world emissions from this source.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what figures he has on the relative efficiency of absorption of infra-red radiation leading to the greenhouse effect for (a) carbon dioxide, (b) nitrogen dioxide, (c) methane and (d) chlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Baldry: The relative impact of greenhouse gases is only partly explained by their radiation absorption properties. Differences in concentration, atmospheric lifetime and secondary effects on the concentration of other gases are also important.

To take account of all these factors, the inter-governmental panel on climate change (IPCC) developed the concept of the global warming potential (GWP).

Initial tentative GWP values for a wide range of substances were published in the panel's first scientific assessment, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

The IPCC, in a supplementary report which will be made public within a few months, will give revised GWPs for the main greenhouse gases. However the summary of the assessment, published recently, indicates that there is now greater uncertainty in the calculation of GWPs.

United Nations Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the meeting between his Department and non-governmental organisations regarding progress towards the United Nations conference on environment and development, held on 15 January.

Mr. Baldry: The meeting on 15 January enabled representatives of non-governmental organisations to give a verbal report on the international meeting they attended in Paris in December. They undertook to provide the Department of the Environment with the final report of the meeting as soon as it was available.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West, Official Report, 15 January, column 574, on liaison with non-governmental organisations on the forthcoming United Nations conference on environment and development, he will set out (a) the dates of the meetings held to date, the issues discussed at each meeting and (b) the dates of the planned meetings and issues expected to be discussed.

Mr. Baldry: Ministers and officials of the Department of the Environment and other Departments liaise regularly and often with a wide range of non-governmental organisations, individually and in groups, on UNCED issues and will continue to do so in the course of the government's preparations for the conference in June.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 15 January, Official Report, columns 574-75, how many copies of the booklet on the United Kingdom's overall approach to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development have been published; and where else the booklet has been made available for the wider public.

Mr. Baldry: Six thousand copies of the booklet were originally printed and a further 6,000 have been ordered. It has been made available to posts overseas and is being widely used in replies to Ministerial and official enquiries about UNCED.

"Eco Decision"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for his Department's library to subscribe to the new international journal, "Eco decision", published in Canada.

Mr. Baldry: The library will obtain a specimen copy to see if it is likely to be of use to the Department.

Audit Commission

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list all the management and occasional papers published by the Audit Commission, showing the dates they were commissioned and completed, and the cost of producing each paper;

(2) how many comparative and other studies were undertaken by the Audit Commission in each year since 1983, under section 26 of the Local Government Finance Act 1982; what the total cost of these studies was for each of the years, expressed in 1991 prices; and how long each study took to complete.

Mr. Key: The Audit Commission is responsible for deciding what papers it will publish and what studies it will promote or undertake. Any available information will be obtainable from the Audit Commission.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the Audit Commission's operating costs for each year since 1983 is attributable to activities not related to auditing the performance of local authorities.

Mr. Key: This information is not available in the form requested. The Audit Commission's annual reports show that the percentage of the Audit Commission's total operating costs represented by central studies was as follows:

	Percentage
1983-84	5·0
1984-85	4·7
1985-86	5·1
1986-87	4·3
1987-88	4·2
1988-89	4·3
1989-90	3·9
[1]1990-91	3·6

[1] Excludes operating costs and costs of central studies relating to the NHS, for which the Audit Commission assumed responsibility on 1 October 1990.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will show (a) the total salaries and (b) the total staff costs of the Audit Commission for each year since 1983, expressed in 1991 prices.

Mr. Key: Total salaries and staff costs for field and support staff in the district audit service and the Audit Commission headquarters at 1991 prices[1] are listed. Payments to audit firms and contract audit staff are excluded.

Year	Total salaries	Total staff costs
	£000	£000
1983-84	9,859	13,279

[2] Includes additional salaries and staff costs payable from 1 October 1990 in relation to NHS activities.

District Auditors

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, for each year since 1983, he will list all the public interest reports issued by district auditors, showing the names of the local authorities concerned, the dates they were issued and the political control of those authorities at the time the reports were issued.

Mr. Key: Auditors are required to send copies of public interest reports concerning local authorities to the Audit Commission and do not send copies to the Secretary of State for the Environment. Any available information will be obtainable from the Audit Commission.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what percentage the fees payable by local authorities for the services of district auditors were increased each year since 1979; and what was the annual rate of inflation applying at the time of each increase.

Mr. Key: Increases in audit fee rates charged to local authorities in England and Wales are not readily available for the years prior to 1984. In subsequent years provincial fee rates have increased as shown in the table. Provincial fee rates cover around 70 per cent. of authorities. Supplements are charged to authorities in London and the south-east to cover additional costs.

Year	Per cent. rise compared to previous year	GDP deflator index (per. cent. inflation)
1984-85	0·0	5·0
1985-86	7·1	5·5
1986-87	5·8	3·3
1987-88	6·5	5·4
1988-89	5·8	7·2
1989-90	8·1	6·5
1990-91	10·4	8·5
1991-92	6·5	7·0

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount paid by local authorities, in England and Wales, in fees to district auditors each year since 1979, expressed in (a) current prices and (b) 1991 prices.

Mr. Key: The gross fee income obtained from local authorities in England and Wales before 1983-84 is not readily available. The amounts of gross fee income obtained from the annual reports and accounts of the Audit Commission for 1983-84 onwards are as listed.

Year	Gross fee income (£000) Current prices	1991 prices[1]
1983-84	14,987	22,391
1984-85	20,002	28,459

Hostels for the Homeless

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of occasions in the last year for which records are available when grants from his Department to hostels for the homeless run by charitable organisations have been paid late; and in how many cases over the same period interest and charges on bank overdrafts incurred by the charity as a result of late payment has been refunded.

Mr. Yeo: Most revenue funding of hostels for the homeless is made by the Housing Corporation, using hostel deficit grant (HDG) or special needs management allowance (SNMA).

Under the rough sleepers initiative, my Department is meeting some revenue costs of hostels and emergency shelters under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985: These payments are made as soon as my officials are satisfied with the financial and other information required from the voluntary organisation concerned. No payments of interest or charges on overdrafts have been made or requested.

Housing, Walsall

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive an answer to the letter written on 17 December to the Minister of State over housing in the borough of Walsall.

Mr. Yeo: I have written to the hon. Member today.

Local Authority Staff

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total number of staff employed directly by local authorities, in England and Wales, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Key: The information for England is as listed. Staffing levels of local authorities in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Year	Staffing levels at June of each year Total staff (full-time plus part-time)	Total (full-time equivalents)
1979	2,512,593	1,975,170
1980	2,474,900	1,951,070

Note:—Three major events caused significant losses from the local authority sector during the period covered by this table. The numbers involved are:

1. Approximately 6,300 ftes due to the abolition of the GLC and the metropolitan county councils in 1986.
2. Around 14,500 ftes due to the change in status of the local authority bus and municipal airport staff in 1986 and 1987.
3. Around 39,000 ftes when polytechnics and higher education institutions transferred from the public to the personal sector in 1989.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence his Department has that local authorities have abused the current rules with regard to compulsory competitive tendering; and if he will publish a list of those authorities involved.

Mr. Portillo: A full list of local authorities against whom statutory action has been taken under sections 13 and 14 of the Local Government Act 1988 and sections 19A and 19B of the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980 follows. There are many other instances where there is evidence of a breach of the statutory provisions but the Secretary of State has concluded that the case for statutory action is not made.

Drinking Water

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken to meet the requirements of the EC drinking water directive in the light of the Advocate General's opinion on the case before the European Court.

Mr. Trippier: The significance of this opinion has been widely misrepresented. First, it does not have to be followed by the court, which will give its judgment at a later date.

Secondly, the standards in the EC drinking water directive are not necessarily those currently met in other member states, but those which all member states should meet. All member states are having difficulty in doing that, and the Commission has so far taken legal action for failing to meet the directive's requirements against 10 other member states besides the United Kingdom.

There are two respects in which this country is unique. We alone have a detailed, firmly committed and fully funded programme, costing £2 billion, for remedying almost all breaches of the directive by 1995. And we are the only member state to have a comprehensive and completely open system for monitoring drinking water quality and publishing the results at national level, in England and Wales, through the drinking water inspectorate's annual report.

The drinking water inspectorate has confirmed that the standard of our drinking water is in fact already very high. Of 3·3 million tests carried out in England and Wales during 1990, 99 per cent. showed compliance with the requirements of our national regulations, which are more stringent than those of the EC directive.

In this court case, the Commission made five allegations. One was about compliance with the standard for lead in certain parts of Scotland. The Advocate-General concluded that the United Kingdom is not in breach of the directive in this respect. However we accept that some supplies do exceed our more stringent national standard, and action is therefore being taken by the water undertakers to reduce the risk of that standard being breached.

Three of the five allegations had nothing to do with the quality of drinking water as such, but were solely concerned with whether United Kingdom legislation had been passed to enact all the provisions of the directive. The Advocate-General considers that the court must look at the position in 1989, when the preliminary procedures finished, rather than the actual position today. Legislation in Scotland came into effect in 1990, and legislation covering water used in food production in September 1991. The remaining point in dispute was legislation in Northern Ireland. This is at an advanced stage of preparation. The absence of legislation has not, however, delayed the action being taken by the Northern Ireland water service to achieve full compliance with the standards in the directive.

The remaining allegation was about nitrate levels in some parts of England. Breaches of the standard for nitrate are being eliminated as quickly as is practicable. Of the 29 supply zones originally named by the Commission, seven now comply. But in some other cases compliance cannot be achieved until 1995. If there were any evidence of a health hazard in these zones meanwhile, immediate action would be taken to make an alternative supply of water available to vulnerable groups.

The Commission's case did not contain any allegations about compliance with the directive's standards for substances other than lead and nitrate.

This is the first case brought against the United Kingdom on an environmental issue in the 20 years that we have been a member of the European Community. Few member states can match this record.

Birmingham (Heartlands)

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for the future of the Heartlands area of Birmingham.

Mr. Heseltine: Having considered the problems of the area carefully, and having received proposals from Birmingham Heartlands Limited and the Birmingham city council, I am pleased to announce that I propose to establish a Birmingham Heartlands urban development corporation. The necessary statutory order will be laid before the House as soon as possible. I am also pleased to announce that Sir Reginald Eyre has agreed to become the chairman of the development corporation.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by local authority area the proportions of local authority finance derived from revenue support grant, specific grant, non-domestic rate income and poll tax for 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 23 January 1992]: I am arranging for the available information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his latest estimates for each local authority of (a) the percentage of total budgeted poll tax income collected so far in the current year, (b) the amounts outstanding in £ million and (c) the numbers of liability orders taken out for poll tax debt.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 23 January 1992]: I am arranging for the available information on community charge collection to be placed in the Library of the House. No information is available on the number of liability orders obtained by each local authority.

Battersea Power Station

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when officials from the Department last inspected the fabric of Battersea power station; and what steps are currently being taken by the Department to safeguard the building.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 23 January 1992]: English Heritage, my right hon. Friend's statutory advisers on historic buildings matters, who have extensive listed building powers in London, visit Battersea power station regularly to monitor its physical condition. They last visited the building in November 1991 and will be visiting again within the next couple of weeks. They are also in regular contact with the owner. There is no evidence to suggest that the building has deteriorated over the last two years and the most important internal features are being kept weathertight and waterproof.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many genetically modified organisms were released into the environment in 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

Under the Genetic Manipulation Regulations 1989, the Health and Safety Executive was notified of 12 proposals to release genetically modified organisms to the environment, in the year 1991.

Public consultation has just been completed on proposed new regulations to be made under part VI of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. Under the proposed regulations releases of genetically modified organisms would be subject to consents by the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Health and Safety Executive.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Blasphemy

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Attorney-General if he will prosecute the authors and publishers of the free booklet, "Crucifixion or Cruci-Fiction", published by the Islamic Progagation Centre, Small Heath, Birmingham, for blasphemy.

The Attorney-General: This booklet has not been referred by any complainant to the Crown Prosecution Service headquarters for consideration.

Legal Aid

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General how many investigations are currently being undertaken by the investigation branch of the Legal Aid Board; and what is the average length of time taken for those investigations to be completed.

The Attorney-General: Sixty-three cases are currently being investigated by the Legal Aid Board. It took an average of some two years to conclude each of the seven cases prosecuted in the past three years.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General what consultations have been held with the Association of Chief Police Officers concerning the number of fraud squad investigations into fraudulent claims for legal aid which are awaiting data processing by the Legal Aid Board.

The Attorney-General: There has been no direct consultation with the Association of Chief Police Officers. However, the investigation manager of the Legal Aid Board liaises regularly with various police fraud squads throughout England and Wales to discuss possible fraudulent legal aid claims.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General how many (a) successful and (b) total prosecutions there have been following evidence supplied to fraud squads by the investigations branch of the Legal Aid Board over the last three years; how much public money has been (a) lost and (b) subsequently recovered arising from such investigations; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: In the past three years there have been seven Crown Court prosecutions, five of which have been successful. The Legal Aid Board has been awarded some £52,000 formal compensation by the court for three of these cases. The board pursues the recovery of any sums overclaimed from the legal aid fund, whether or not there is evidence of fraud and irrespective of the outcome of any criminal proceedings.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Attorney-General what effect the introduction of central taxing teams has had on the time taken to deal with legal aid claims; and if he will take steps to reduce this time.

The Attorney-General: Since the establishment of the central taxing teams in March 1991, only cases under £4,000 are determined in the Crown Court. In the year until March 1991, the percentage of non-standard fee determinations paid within one month of the Crown Court was 62·5 per cent. for solicitors and 62·4 per cent. for counsel. In the eight months from March to November 1991, the percentage of non-standard fee determinations remaining in the Crown Court paid within one month had increased to 71 per cent. for solicitors and to 71·3 per cent. for counsel. The percentage of standard fee claims paid within 10 days had increased from 67·8 per cent. to 70·2 per cent. for solicitors and from 67·9 per cent. to 70·1 per cent. for counsel. The average time taken to deal with standard fee claims had been reduced from 12 days to 10·5 days for solicitors and from 11 days to 9·75 days for counsel. Equivalent figures are not available for claims amounting to more than £4,000 which are now handled by the central taxing teams, but the times taken by the teams to determine such claims in November 1991 were provided in a recent written answer to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlisle) Official Report, 11 December 1991, column 421.

The Lord Chancellor's Department has recently increased the number of determining officers available to the teams by nearly 40 per cent. In addition, where a number of claims for less than £4,000 are linked to claims for between £4,000 and £8,000, circuit taxing directors have been authorised to release these claims to the court for determination and this is done wherever appropriate. These initiatives have resulted in a significant increase in the disposal rate of the teams which will lead to a reduction in waiting times in the coming months. A number of initiatives to train additional determining officers are also being carried forward.

Social Security Appeals

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General what is his assessment of the delays experienced by applicants for benefit by the Office of the Social Security Commissioners in Edinburgh in dealing with appeals.

The Attorney-General: In 1990-91 the average waiting time from the date on which appeals became ready for determination by commissioners to the notification of the decisions to the claimants was 14 months. This was caused by a backlog of appeals in the office of the social security commissioners in Edinburgh. The situation has now improved considerably and the current average waiting time is seven months.

EMPLOYMENT

Training Schemes

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each region and for Great Britain as a whole how many people were participating in (a) employment training, (b) the enterprise allowance scheme, and (c) youth training in each month since September 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: As the information requested is contained in a number of tables I will write to the hon. Member.

Disability

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what arrangements he proposes to introduce after re-organisation of services for people with disabilities to enable members of placing, assessment and counselling teams or disablement resettlement officers to make home visits to those people who because of transport difficulties or the severity of their disability are unable to attend a local employment service office;

(2) if disabled persons who are at an interview to establish whether they are eligible to register under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 can (a) be represented or escorted by a third person, (b) see what is being written about them on an employment registration document and (c) ask for the counsellor to be changed if they feel they are being treated unreasonably; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what information he has on the number of people registered under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 for each year since 1987; how many were registered under section 1 or section 2; how many were (a) male or (b) female; how many were aged under 25 or over 50 years of age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service Executive Agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Vocational Training

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will indicate the forecast amounts of European social fund money that will be received by British industry in respect of vocational training in 1992 and 1993; what is the forecast of United Kingdom public sector provision towards vocational training for each of these years supporting such European social fund funding; and what are the principal sources from which such public sector provision is forecast to be provided, together with the amounts of funds for each of these years.

Mr. Forth: The main objective of the European social fund (ESF) is to assist the unemployed into permanent employment by means of vocational training and other employment measures. To the extent that ESF contributes to a better trained work force, the fund is of benefit to the whole of British industry.

A wide variety of organisations secure direct ESF support, including training and enterprise councils, local enterprise companies in Scotland, and industry training organisations. The fund also provides major support in respect of such national programmes as employment training and youth training which are in turn delivered locally by TECs and LECs.

Under the current European Community rules, money from the ESF is used to fund 45 per cent. of the eligible costs of a project, with the remaining 55 per cent. to come from matching by public funding. The principal sources of this public expenditure are central Government and individual local authorities. In 1991-92 we anticipate receiving £499·5 million from the ESF for Great Britain, requiring public matching funding of at least £610·5 million. Details of anticipated receipts from the ESF for 1992-93 and 1994-95 will be published shortly in departmental expenditure plans.

Privatisations

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for the five years prior to privatisation the loss or profit of (a) the Skills Training Agency and (b) Professional and Executive Recruitment; and if he will list any grants or loans made over the same period.

Mr. Jackson: (a) The privatisation of the Skills Training Agency (STA) was completed in May 1990. From 1 April 1984 STA was required to operate trading accounts. These are contained and fully explained within the published MSC/TA White Paper accounts for the financial years 1984-5 to 1988-89 which have been laid before Parliament. For 1989-90 no separate trading accounts were produced for STA and its activity is covered in the Trading Agency White Paper accounts (1989-90) which were published in July 1991. The total surplus/deficit position for the five financial years 1984-85 to 1988-89 (after exceptional items and extraordinary costs) is as follows:

Years	£ million[1]
1984-85	(15·2)
1985-86	(17·5)
1986-87	0·2
1987-88	(2·9)
1988-89	(27·3)

STA, as part of MSC and its successors was included in the Department's vote and was able to draw funds from that vote in meet its commitments. No loans were made to STA.

(b) The privatisation of Professional and Executive Recruitment (PER) was completed in September 1988. From April 1983 PER was required to operate a trading account. Full details are contained in the MSC White Paper accounts for the years 1983-84 to 1986-87. Accounts for 1987-88 are contained in House of Commons Papers Nos. 582 and 603 of 1987-88. The net surplus/deficit position for the five financial years 1983-84 to 1987-88 is as follows:

Years	£ million[1]
1983-84	0·1
1984-85	0·2
1985-86	0·1
1986-87	(0·2)
1987-88	(1·0)

[1] Figures in brackets reflect deficit amounts.

PER as part of MSC and the employment service was included in the Department's vote and was able to draw funds from that vote to meet its commitments. No loans were made to PER.

Radiological Emergency

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to incorporate European Community directive 89/618 Euratom on informing the general public about health protection measures to be applied and steps to be taken in the event of a radiological emergency into the United Kingdom law at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Forth: I can confirm that it is the Government's policy to incorporate the requirements of European Council Directive 89/6182 Euratom into Great Britain law; and I would refer the hon. Gentleman to my answer given in reply to the hon. Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. O'Hara) on 13 January 1992, Official Report, column 457, for the timetable for implementation.

TECs

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide figures of training and enterprise councils' budgets for each of the regions in Great Britain for the last two years.

Mr. Jackson: The following table shows the TEC operational budgets for 1990-91 and 1991-92. Information for Scottish local enterprise companies is for the Secretary of State for Scotland to provide. Budgets are for the period of TEC operation only and vary in the periods they cover because of the differing operational dates of TECs.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria he has set down for the circumstances in which training and enterprise councils may fund visits to overseas conferences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: We have given training and enterprise councils a great deal of freedom of action to carry out the plans on which the Department contract with them. It is for them to decide on matters of this kind.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of the costs of the visit to the conference on partnership in education, in Washington DC which are being borne by the Teesside training and enterprise council.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise councils have been given an important role in ensuring that education and training are relevant to the needs of local business. Through the contract the Department has with each TEC we agree the overall outputs they will achieve for the funding they receive. As such, detailed matters such as attendance at conferences are for the TEC itself to decide.

Construction Statistics

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the numbers employed in the construction industry in each year since 1981.

Mr. Jackson: The information is shown in the table.

Employees in construction in the United Kingdom

September	Thousands (seasonally adjusted)
1981	1,096
1982	1,062
1983	1,051
1984	1,045
1985	1,011
1986	987
1987	1,023
1988	1,044
1989	1,091
1990	1,077
1991	951

Youth Training

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide for Greater London a table showing the number of YTS and YT places (a) available and (b) filled, for June of each year from 1988 to 1991, or the nearest available month.

Mr. Jackson: The information is not available in the form requested.

All young people under 18 who are not in full-time education or a job and are seeking youth training are entitled to the offer or re-offer of a suitable training place.

Additionally, young people who are aged 18 or over who have not previously been available for YT because of disability, ill health, pregnancy, custodial sentence, remand, language difficulty or care order are entitled to the offer of a suitable training place.

The Government remain committed to meeting their guarantee in London as elsewhere.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Private Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if prison inmates in privately-run prisons will be able to petition against governor's adjudications in such prisons; to whom they will make their application; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Disciplinary proceedings at privately-run prisons will be the responsibility of the on-site controller, a crown servant. Inmates will be able to appeal to the head of the remands contracts unit, a division in prison service headquarters, against an adjudication.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will require privately run prisons to produce annual reports; to whom those reports will be sent; and who will be able to take action upon recommendations made in such a report.

Mrs. Rumbold: Private contractors who are responsible for managing prisons will not be required to produce an annual report. Instead they will have to provide regular management information to the on-site controller, a crown servant who will be monitoring their performance to ensure that they comply with the terms of the contract.

Belmarsh Prison, London

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present number of vacancies of prison officers and their grades at Belmarsh prison, London; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Staff have been provided to operate the four house blocks and three of the four spurs of the category A unit at Belmarsh. There are vacancies in the specialist prison officer grades for three senior hospital officers, one officer instructor, one principal officer works and two works officers.

Visitor Visas

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many overseas domestic workers entering the United Kingdom have been issued with visitor visas prohibiting employment since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available.

Bail and Probation Hostels

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the numbers of occasions in the last year for which records are available when grants from his Department to bail and probation hostels and institutions run by charitable organisations have been paid late; and in how many cases over the same period interest and charges on overdrafts incurred by the charity as a result of late payment have been refunded.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Home Office awards grants to a wide range of charitable organisations and the information requested could not be obtained without disproportionate costs.

Grants to bail and probation hostels are paid quarterly in advance but during the latter part of the year actual expenditure may exceed planned expenditure for justifiable reasons. In these circumstances interest charges are reimbursed in the final grant claim but the amounts are not separately identified. In the case of grants awarded to charitable organisations who provide other supported accommodation for offenders there have been no claims for a refund of interest charges on overdrafts.

Escaped Prisoners

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the escape of prisoners from police custody while being transported from Walton prison to the magistrates' court on 21 January.

Mrs. Rumbold: On the morning of 21 January, 15 prisoners were being escorted to Liverpool magistrates' court, under the supervision of eight staff from Her Majesty's prison, Liverpool. The coach had travelled only a short distance from the prison, when the majority of the prisoners moved en masse and attacked staff; it is believed that the prisoners were armed with knives. A fierce struggle ensued, during which three members of staff and two prisoners sustained injuries. Several windows of the coach were kicked out and a total of six prisoners succeeded in making good their escape, although still handcuffed. Initially eight prisoners succeeded in escaping through the coach windows but two were immediately restrained by prison staff.

Four of the six escaped prisoners were arrested by police within 40 minutes of the escape and all are facing further criminal charges. These four prisoners will be located in a prison other than Her Majesty's prison, Liverpool. Two prisoners remain unlawfully at large.

The injured staff and prisoners were taken to the accident and emergency department of Walton general hospital. Of the three staff, one sustained a deep wound to the forearm, another wounds to his arms and face and the third head and leg injuries. All three staff are now recovering from their injuries in their own homes. The two injured prisoners sustained, respectively, a cut to the neck; and a fractured jaw and a suspected fractured arm. One of the inmates remains in Walton general hospital while the other is recovering in Liverpool prison hospital.

A full inquiry into the circumstances of this incident will commence on 23 January 1992 led by the governor of Her Majesty's prison Birmingham.

Obscene Publications

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to reform the law of obscenity in order to prevent the publication of books openly advocating sadism, incest, bestiality, genocide, cannibalism and other such practices.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 21 January 1992]: The Government fully recognise the need for the law to deal effectively with those who would seek to profit from the trade in pornography. We have introduced or supported a range of measures strengthening the law in relation to child pornography, indecent displays, video recordings and broadcasting. Previous attempts to reform the Obscene Publications Act 1959 and 1964 did not command sufficient support in Parliament but we remain willing to support any apropriate proposals which would make the law more effective and which would appear to command public and parliamentary endorsement.

WALES

Electrical Goods Industry

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what household electrical goods are currently made in Wales; what steps he is taking to promote this industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The main household electrical goods currently made in Wales are as follows:

Colour televisions
Video cassette recorders
CD/Hi-Fi systems
Microwave ovens
Washing machines
Dishwashers
Tumble dryers

In the case of colour televisions, video recorders, microwave ovens and washing machines production in Wales accounts for over 50 per cent. of the total United Kingdom output.

I continually refer to the strengths of Welsh industry in my discussions with various industrialists and organisations both here and overseas.

Cancer

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each of the last five years the number of new cases whose diagnosis was confirmed in that year for the following cancer types: (a) lung, (b) colorectal, (c) breast, (d) lymphoma, (e) pancreatic, (f) leukaemia, (g) ovarian, (h) melanoma and (i) cervical.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The latest available published information for usual residents of Wales are given in the table:

Water Pollution

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish on a county by county basis the number of abandoned coal mines in Wales which continue to discharge ferriginous material to surface waters.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

Urban Environment

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment has been made by his Department of the effect of the European Community's Green Paper on the urban environment upon strategic planning processes in Welsh local authorities.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The European Community Green Paper on the urban environment, published in 1990, was welcomed by the Government. The Community has subsequently set up an expert group to consider how the proposals in the Green Paper should be taken forward. The United Kingdom is represented on the group and we will, in due course, assess the effect of its findings on the strategic planning process in Welsh local authorities.

"Free for All"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the videocassette and transcript of the television programme, "Free For All," broadcast on Channel Four on 9 January.

Mr. David Hunt: Yes.

Neath and Port Talbot Hospital

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when invitations for tender were issued for the first contracts for the new Neath and Port Talbot hospital; and when they are expected to be returned.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: On current programming, I understand that West Glamorgan health authority anticipates being able to invite tenders for the first infrastructure contract in the second half of 1992.

Neighbourhood Hospitals

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer on 20 January, Official Report, column 76, what guidance he has issued to Welsh health authorities contemplating the development of neighbourhood hospitals concerning the incorporation of national health service nursing homes; how residents and patients of such nursing homes are to be funded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The "Caring for People" White Paper (Cm. 849) makes it clear that health authorities will need to ensure that their plans allow for the provision of continuing residential health care for highly dependent people who need it. Whether this requires an increase or reduction in the level of continuous health care provided under the national health service will depend very much on local circumstances. Our subsequent guidance on the development of joint plans for social and community care by health and social services authorities and others confirms that they should agree the level and form of continuous care which will be secured for their local population. Any such care provided under the national health service, whether contracted by a health authority from an national health service facility or from a private or voluntary sector provider, will be free of charge to the patient.

SCOTLAND

Toxoplasmosis

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will implement a campaign to educate pregnant women and their health carers about toxoplasmosis and its prevention in Scotland;

(2) which health authorities in Scotland provide information on infectious disease during pregnancy to pregnant women; which health authorities provide specific information about the prevention of toxoplasmosis to pregnant women; which health authorities in Scotland routinely test pregnant women for toxoplasmosis; and which test pregnant women on demand for toxoplasmosis;

(3) what representations he has received on toxoplasmosis.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A new leaflet containing advice on toxoplasmosis and other infections has recently been issued to health boards by the Health Education Board for Scotland for the guidance of pregnant women. The leaflet, which is published by the Department of Health and entitled "While you are pregnant: safe eating and how to avoid infection from food and animals", encourages pregnant women to take precautions when handling and consuming food and in their contacts with animals.

Health boards do not routinely test pregnant women for toxoplasmosis and no information is available centrally about the availability of such a test on demand.

In the last 12 months, my right hon. Friend has received five inquiries about toxoplasmosis, all from hon. Members.

Stobhill Maternity Unit

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of times in the past year that Greater Glasgow health board has advertised for neo-natal nurses for the Stobhill maternity unit; and where the advertisements were placed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The board has not needed to advertise for neo-natal nurses at Stobhill over the past year.

British Steel

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what public funds British Steel has received in grants for the development of its Scottish plants, including Ravenscraig, since privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: British Steel has received no public funds for the development of its Scottish plants since privatisation. Any application for state aid for that purpose would have to be considered in the context of the relevant EC regulations.

Lingerbay Quarry Development

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to publish the result of the aggregates in Scotland working party survey completed in 1989; and whether he intends to have the survey updated before he decides whether or not to call in the planning decision due to be given on the Lingerbay quarry development.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend is still considering the results of the aggregates in Scotland working party survey and is not yet in a position to predict a date for publication of the findings. He has no plans, for the present, to have the survey updated before he decides whether or not to call in the application for planning permission made by Redlands Aggregates Ltd. for development at Lingerbay near Rodel on the Isle of Harris.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his office will be commissioning their own independent assessment of the potential effects upon the local marine environment of ballast dumping in Lingerbay in connection with any quarry development.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish Office officials are already looking into the possible implications for the marine environment of any project that may go ahead, including any effects that might arise from discharges of ballast water and potential discharges into the sea from quarrying operations. Any marine construction works would need a licence under part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985. A detailed assessment of the impact of the project as a whole on the marine environment would be required before such a licence was issued.

Social Security Commissioners

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what request he has had from the Social Security Commissioners in Edinburgh for additional qualified staff to process appeals.

Mr. Lang: To date no such request has been received from the Commissioners.

SOCIAL SECURITY

War Pensioners

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on extending the limit of war pension to be disregarded in calculating housing benefit and the community charge.

Miss Widdecombe: The statutory disregard on war widows' and war disablement pensions was doubled to £10 in April 1990. In addition, local authorities have discretion to enhance this disregard at their own expense when assessing entitlement to housing benefit and community charge benefit. There is a full statutory disregard of the special payments for pre-1973 war widows—currently £44·36 a week. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the councils which (a) operate and (b) do not operate a total disregard scheme for war pensioners for housing benefit and the community charge.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested, as reported by local authorities in the financial year 1990-91, as listed in the following table.

Old Age Pensions

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to increase pensions to the level of those received by old age pensioners in Germany.

Mr. Jack: The provision of incomes in retirement, including pensions, is structured on a different basis in the two countries and consequently it is not possible to make meaningful comparisons.

Benefit Deductions

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the total number of people who are having poll tax deducted from their benefits at the latest available date and at three monthly intervals prior to that date.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand from the chief executive of the Benefits Agency that the information requested is available in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Budgets

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was spending on the total social security budget in 1979, 1983, 1987 and 1990-91.

Miss Widdecombe: Total social security spending was as follows.

	£ million
1978-79	16,602
1982-83	33,000
1986-87	46,851
1990-91	59,001

[1] Estimated outturn.

National Insurance

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the effect in 1991-92 and 1992-93, on both a first year and a full year basis, on the national insurance contributions of (a) employees, (b) employees and the self-employed, if (i) national insurance contributions were chargeable at the current rates on fringe benefits, (ii) national insurance contributions were chargeable at the current rates on unearned income of those under retirement age in excess of £60 per week, (iii) the ceilings on contributions were abolished, (iv) a combination of (i), (ii) and (iii) and (v) as (iv), but if the contracting-out rebates were abolished and the current 9 per cent. contribution rate was cut to 8 per cent.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is as follows:

(i) The yield in a full year for 1991-92 for employees in the United Kingdom is estimated to be £230 million.

The estimates are based on an employee contribution rate of 9 per cent.

Figures are not available for self-employed people.

The yield in the first year would depend on the administrative arrangements made for collecting such a charge.

The yield for 1992-93 would depend on the level of employer-provided benefits in that year.

It is not possible to provide separate estimates for Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

(ii) The yield in a full year for 1991-92 for individuals in the United Kingdom is estimated at:

	£ million
(a) Employees	640
(b) Employees and self-employed	810

The estimates are based on an employee contribution rate of 9 per cent.

The amount of revenue collected in the first year would depend on the administrative arrangements for collecting such a charge.

The yield for 1992-93 would depend on the levels of investment income for that year. These estimates take no account of any behavioural changes following the introduction of such a charge.

The figures do not include people who are neither employees nor self-employed, but who nevertheless receive investment income.

It is not possible to provide separate information for Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

(iii) Revenue yield

	First year £ billion	Full year £ billion
1991-92 (employees only)	2·2	2·5
1991-92 (employees plus self-employed)	2·4	2·9
1992-93 (employees only)	2·4	2·7
1992-93 (employees plus self-employed)	2·6	3·2

(iv) Revenue yield

	Full year £ billion
1991-92 (employees only)	3·8
1991-92 (employees plus self-employed)	4·3

All notes to parts (i) and (ii) apply here.

(v) Revenue yield

	Full year £ billion
1991-92 (employees only)	7·6
1991-92 (employees plus self-employed)	[1]8·2

All notes to parts (i) and (ii) apply here.

[1] Assumes that the Class 4 contribution rate remains at 6·3 per cent.

If the contracted-out rebates and 2 per cent. incentives in respect of personal pensions and 2 per cent. incentives for contracted-out schemes were also abolished, there would be additional yield of £2·9 billion in a full year in 1991-92.

Social Fund

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date he expects to receive the report of the Social Security Advisory Committee on the social fund.

Mr. Scott: We have not yet received a firm date from the Committee.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give most recent figures for reasons for refusals from the social fund for (a) budgeting loans, (b) crisis loans and (c) community care grants.

Mr. Scott: The figures for December 1991 are shown in the tables.

Budgeting loan

Reason for refusal	Number
Loan refused as Community Care Grant awarded	4,401
Not receiving Income Support	4,565
Not receiving Income Support for 26 weeks	12,750
Excluding Item(s)	1,325
Previous application and SFO decision for the item	2,272
Inability to repay	2,209
Insufficient priority	12,267
Other reasons	2,750

Crisis loans

Reason for refusal	Number
Excluded item(s)	101
Previous application and SFO decision for the item	171
No serious damage or risk to health or safety	3,202
Suitable alternative available	133
Help available from another source	305
Enough money for a crisis	114
Inability to repay	433
Insufficient priority	194
Other reasons	732

Community care grants

Reason for refusal	Number
Savings over £500 sufficient to meet cost	113
Not in receipt of income support and unlikely to become entitled	4,282
Excluded item(s)	1,414
Excluded applicant	384
Amount less than £30, not travelling expenses	245
Previous application and SFO decision for the item	2,164
Insufficient priority	5,279
Direction 4 not satisfied	39,253
Other reasons	1,483

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much was left in each of the local office social fund budgets on Merseyside in November and December; and whether any offices received or applied for additional resources.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people who seek a review of a social fund decision received a favourable decision at (a) social fund officer level and (b) social fund inspector level.

Mr. Scott: Information on the number of decisions revised in the applicant's favour for the period 1 April to 31 December 1991 is shown in the table.

	Numbers
Number of decisions by Social Fund officer	44,487
Number of decisions substituted by Social Fund inspector	2,981

Notes:
1. Figures refer to numbers of cases not numbers of people.
2. Decisions revised at social fund officer level include cases referred back by social fund inspectors for re-determination by higher executive officer (social fund).

Disability Allowances

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants will be worse off if they claim disability working allowance instead of invalidity benefit including housing costs.

Mr. Scott: The great majority of potential disability working allowance recipients will be better off than they would be on invalidity benefit. It is not possible to estimate with confidence the small number of invalidity benefit recipients who would be worse off taking into account help with housing costs from income support or housing benefit.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women over the age of 60 years have been awarded (a) invalid care allowance and (b) severe disablement allowance as a result of recent case law.

Mr. Scott: Following decisions of the social security commissioners in 1988, there have been some 1,600 awards of invalid care allowance to women over age 60. Figures for severe disablement allowance are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about cold weather payments made in Bradford.

Mr. Scott: Bradford and District Age Concern wrote to me on several occasions between July 1991 and November 1991.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many times, in the last three months, to date the weather stations in Leeds and Wilsden have triggered cold weather payments to people living in Bradford; which Bradford postcode areas were not covered by the payments triggered by Leeds between 6 and 13 December; when the local office in Bradford was notified of the payments; when recipients were informed; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he is taking to ensure cold weather payments are made to the maximum number of eligible people living in Bradford on a predicted temperature basis; and what arrangements are being made to ensure that local offices and the public are given prior notice of when payments are to be made.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Take-up Campaign

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claimants on Merseyside have requested a review of their supplementary benefit entitlement under the recent regulation 72 take-up campaign; how many have had their requests for review refused; how many have received payments; and how many are pending;

(2) how many cases have been identified by his Department's offices on Merseyside for eligibility for an ex gratia compensation payment due to delays in paying benefit.

(3) how many additional staff and how much additional resources have been allocated to each office on Merseyside to cope with work arising from the regulation 72 take-up campaign for arrears of benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Press and Publicity

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) the number of staff and (b) the total cost, of the press and publicity section of his Department for each year since July 1988.

Miss Widdecombe: For the numbers of staff, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 9 May 1991 at col. 579;

For the available information on total costs up to 1989-90, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras on 17 June 1991 at cols. 49-50.

The total staff and running costs in 1990-91 were £1,218,560. This includes staff and resource costs for activities undertaken by the information division as a whole. Separate figures for staff and running costs for the press and publicity sections are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefits (Teenagers)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a table for Greater London showing the number of people aged 16, 17, and 18 years who were in receipt of each of housing benefit, unemployment benefit, and income supplement and the numbers of each age in receipt of any one of these benefits for October of each year since 1988.

Mr. Jack: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefits (Patients)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much revenue is raised by reducing benefits for those in hospital for more than six weeks; how much this scheme costs to administer; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The reduction of benefits paid to people in hospital is not a revenue raising measure. The reductions are based on the view that public funds should not make double provision for the same needs. As the national health service provides free maintenance as well as free treatment, it has always been the policy that maintenance benefits, also paid out of public funds, should not continue to be paid in full indefinitely. Information on the total value of the reductions for all benefits and the administrative costs involved is not available.

Asthma

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action his Department has taken to publicise the changes in the occupational asthma scheme introduced in September.

Mr. Scott: The proposed changes were covered in a press release on 4 July announcing the introduction of our new disability benefits. A revised leaflet, NI 237, "Occupational Asthma" was issued this week to local offices.

DEFENCE

Coopers and Lybrand

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the projects, the purposes, and the cost of his Department's use of the Coopers and Lybrand group since 1989.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Since 1 January 1989 the Department has placed 26 contracts with the Coopers and Lybrand group to a total value of £7·8 million. These contracts cover a wide variety of consultancy activities such as management information systems, the procurement executive information technology strategy, Royal Navy logistics and studies following on from the "Options for Change" studies.

SSN Warspite

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on where the SSN Warspite will be berthed on being de-commissioned.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: HMS Warspite is expected to be berthed for afloat storage by the end of March 1992.

Royal Navy (Support Infrastructure)

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if final decisions have yet been made on the proposals announced in July for rationalising the Royal Navy's support infrastructure.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Following extensive consultation, the proposals announced by my right hon. Friend on 16 July 1991 will now proceed. I can say, however, that the number of posts affected at Rosyth and Copenacre are respectively some 100 and 220 fewer than previously anticipated.

Royal Air Force (Organisation)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further changes are planned in the organisation of the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Work has continued on the structure of the Royal Air Force required for Britain's Defence for the 1990s. The following decisions have been taken:

It was announced in the statement on the Defence estimates that RAF Abingdon would close by May 1993. We now plan closure on 31 July 1992. The flying units from Abingdon, which comprise the Oxford and London university air squadrons and No. 6 Air Experience Flight will move to RAF Benson in July.

Following the announced withdrawal of the USAF from RAF Kemble it will no longer be economic to maintain the RAF maintenance tasks at the base. It is proposed that airfield operations should end on 31 March 1992—when US flying will also cease—and that the RAF will withdraw by 31 July 1992. In the meantime the Army will use RAF Kemble for vehicle storage on a temporary basis, while reviewing its longer term requirement for such a facility.

All flying training at RAF Brawdy will cease on 31 August 1992 as part of the general reorganisation of advanced flying and tactical weapons training which will be concentrated at RAF Valley and RAF Chivenor. RAF Brawdy will remain open and possible alternative uses will be explored.

Nuclear Weapons (CIS)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) which republics in the Commonwealth of Independent States have ben offered assistance to safeguard and destroy nuclear weapons;

(2) pursuant to his reply of 19 December, Official Report, column 285, what was the date on which he first made clear to the authorities in the republics his willingness to provide assistance and advice on safeguarding and destroying nuclear weapons;

(3) what numbers and types of his Department's personnel and equipment he is prepared to make available to republics in the Commonwealth of Independent States to assist in safeguarding and destroying nuclear weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We and our allies have made clear on several occasions, to the authorities first in the former Soviet Union and more recently in Belarus, Kazakhstan, Russia and Ukraine, our concern that existing arms control agreements, including the non-proliferation treaty, be honoured. We have also made clear our willingness to provide assistance and advice on safeguarding and destroying nuclear weapons where necessary and practicable. The form any such assistance might take will be established in consultation with allies and the countries concerned.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his assessment of the ability of the facilities in the Russian Federation to destroy the strategic and tactical nuclear warheads that were due to be disposed of by the former Soviet Government.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Russian Federation has specialist facilities capable of carrying out nuclear warhead dismantlement. Together with our allies we are considering with the Russians the best way of providing appropriate assistance to help with this task.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his statement in the debate on nuclear weapons, Official Report, 14 January, column 822, he will set out the source of his information that tactical nuclear weapons, including torpedoes, air-launched missiles or nuclear artillery shells, are located at 100 sites in 13 different republics of the former Soviet Union.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what calculation he has made of the length of time the nuclear warheads presently deployed in the individual republics of the Commonwealth of Independent States can remain operational without refurbishment in the central nuclear facility of Nizhnyaya Tura in Russia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Routine servicing would probably maintain the majority of warheads in their normal condition for several years. No nuclear warheads in the republics of the CIS can become operational or useable, however, without the implementation of appropriate command and control procedures.

Potton Island

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West, Official Report, 16 December, columns 57-58, any dispersal experiments with nuclear materials not involving firings took place at Potton island.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No such experiments have taken place at Potton island.

Uranium Dust, Kuwait

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any health tests were conducted on members of 21 EOD Squadron on their return from clean-up operations in Kuwait in 1991 to assess whether any depleted uranium dust was inhaled or ingested during their period of assistance to Royal Ordnance.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have no reason to suppose that 21 EOD Squadron handled or otherwise came into contact with depleted uranium while in Kuwait. With this in mind, no additional health checks were instituted over and above the regular/routine health checks carried out on all service personnel.

"Toward Minimum Deterrence"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of Aurora paper number 11, "Toward Minimum Deterrence: How Low Can We Go", edited by Peter Gizewski.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The MOD library does receive the publications of the Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament, but Aurora Paper Number 11 has not yet arrived.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his statement in the debate on nuclear defence, Official Report, 14 January, column 824, he will list the professional advisers, who are not civil servants, he has consulted on the level of minimal nuclear weapons needed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The professional advice referred to by my right hon. Friend is provided both by serving members of the armed forces and by civil servants, including scientific and technical staffs.

Uranium Use

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence further to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 19, on uranium use, what was the nature of the operational reasons; and what were the dates of occurence and amounts of uranium involved in each case.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It would not be in the national interest to provide the details requested.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Illegal Fishing

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has recently taken, or is planning to take, on fisheries enforcement to counter illegal landings of fish.

Mr. Curry: A total of 277 offences were identified in 1991 relating to illegal landings of fish. Of these, 81 resulted in prosecutions and 92 in warnings; 104 are still outstanding. (All figures are provisional.) Enforcement procedures, both ashore and at sea, are kept under regular review to maximise their effectiveness in controlling illegal landings of fish and other breaches of EC or national legislation.

Foodstuffs (Health Claims)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food from which organisations or individuals he has received representations on the health claims made by the Food Advisory Committee in its report on its review of food labelling and advertising 1990.

Mr. Maclean: Representations were received from:
Advertising Authority
Advertising Standards Authority
ASDA
Association of Metropolitan Authorities
Association of Public Analysts
Mr. R. Banks
Biscuit, Cake and Confectionery Alliance
Boots
British Meat Manufacturers Association
British Nutrition Foundation
British Retailers Association
British Soft Drinks Association
Consumers Association
Consumers in the European Community Group (UK)
Co-operative Union Ltd
Coronary Prevention Group
East Lothian District Council
Federation of Bakers
Food and Drink Federation
Food Law Group
Mr. L. G. Hanson
Health Education Authority
Incorporated Society of British Advertisers
Institute of Food Science and Technology
Kelloggs
Leatherhead Food R. A.
Local Authority Co-ordinating Body on Trading Standards
MAFF Consumer Panel
Meat and Livestock Commission
Milk Marketing Board
National Consumer Council
National Farmers Union
National Housewives Association Ltd
Nestlé
Procter and Gamble
Proprietory Association of Great Britain

Quaker Oats
Retail Consortium
Robert Gordon Institute of Technology
Roche
Sainsburys
Royal College of Physicians
Scottish Association of Master Bakers
United Kingdom Association of Frozen Food Manufacturers
United Kingdom Federation of Business and Professional Women
United Kingdom Home Economics Federation

A full list of respondents to the consultation exercise has been placed in the Library of the House; copies of responses can be inspected, by appointment, at the Ministry's library at 3 Whitehall place.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the EC directive on health claims for foodstuffs to be published.

Mr. Maclean: I understand that the European Commission's intended proposals on health and other food claims are unlikely to be issued until later this year.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will announce his conclusions on the Food Advisory Committee's report on its review of food labelling and advertising 1990.

Mr. Maclean: The Food Advisory Committee has recently considered the response to the public consultation on the recommendations made in its report. I expect to receive shortly any further advice from the committee and shall consider this, together with the comments made by those responding to the committee's original recommendations, before making any final decisions and taking any further action. I shall make my announcement as soon as possible thereafter.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy regarding health claims and food labelling prior to the EC's amendment of 79/112/EC (Food Labelling).

Mr. Maclean: The Government's policy on food labelling, including health claims, is that food labels should enable consumers to make fully informed choices and should not mislead or confuse. I intend to announce the Government's response to the Food Advisory Committee's recommendations for further controls in this area as soon as I have received and considered the committee's final advice on its review of food labelling. I expect this to be in time to influence the European Commission's intended proposals on claims.

Sheep Scab

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his review of the control arrangements which apply when sheep scab is confirmed.

Mr. Gummer: Sheep scab is a particularly unpleasant disease which results in distress to sheep and financial loss to farmers. The new provisions simplify the control measures and place greater responsibility in the hands of the industry.

The Sheep Scab Order 1992, which replaces earlier legislation, retains sheep scab as a notifiable disease. Where infection is confirmed, movement restrictions will be put in place and farmers will be required to dip their sheep and complete declarations to that effect.

The main changes to the earlier legislation are:
reduction in the involvement of inspectors supervising dipping on infected premises; simplification of the system for licensing movements; and simplification of the affected area provisions.

Chicken Imports

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the level of chicken imports in 1990 and in 1991.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is as follows:

	tonnes
	1990	[1] 1991
Total imports of chickenmeat into the United Kingdom	110,651	104,197

[1] January to November.
Source: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

United Nations Agencies

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give a full list of United Nations agencies; and how much Britain contributed financially to each agency in cash and real terms for each year from 1979 to 1990.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Sri Lankan Government about the security forces preventing food and medical supplies from reaching people living in certain areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have frequently urged the Sri Lankan Government to take all necessary steps to ensure the well-being of all its citizens. Although we have heard of instances of goods being held up at military check points, we believe the Sri Lankan Government are now making serious efforts, in co-operation with relief agencies, to maintain the supply of food and medicines to people affected by fighting. Recently the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam have created difficulties for food shipments into areas they control.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a senior member of the British High Commission in Sri Lanka last visited Jaffna; and what report was made, and to whom, following the visit.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British High Commissioner in Colombo visited Jaffna from 23 to 26 May 1990 and reported on 28 May to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. Such visits have not been practicable since 11 June 1990, when the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam renewed fighting against the Sri Lankan Government.

Mercenaries

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to sign the 1989 United Nations convention on the use, finance and training of mercenaries for activities which violate principles of international law.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No. Implementation of the convention would require primary legislation. Following the consideration of the whole question by the Diplock committee, we decided not to introduce legislation on mercenaries. We still do not consider that the need for such legislation has been established.

Overseas Domestic Workers

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom posts abroad have available the IND leaflets containing advice for prospective overseas domestic workers seeking to accompany their employers to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Supplies of this leaflet have been sent to all 158 visa-issuing posts.

EC Legislation and Policy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West, Official Report, 16 December, column 44, about closer contacts between the European and national Parliaments, he will now make it his policy to answer substantive questions on reports prepared for committees of the European Parliament on EC legislation and policy.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I shall be happy to continue to provide replies when it is appropriate to do so.

Kuwait

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress made in Kuwait to establish democratic institutions and political processes since its liberation by allied forces in Operation Granby/Desert Storm in 1991.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Kuwaitis are preparing for a general election, to which his Highness the Amir has said that he is personally committed, planned for October. The establishment of the Kuwait Democratic Forum, effectively the country's first publicly proclaimed political party, was announced in December 1991. The repeal of the 1986 press censorship law was announced this month. We welcome these developments.

East Timor

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West, Official Report, 13 December, column 596, the special United Nations rapporteur to East Timor has now visited that country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what current plans there are for a delegation by the current Portuguese presidency of the EC to East Timor to investigate human rights.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None to our knowledge.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning allegations that witnesses to the Santa Cruz massacre in East Timor were summarily shot by Indonesian security forces.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no reliable evidence to substantiate these allegations.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding the Indonesianisation of East Timor with reference to educational and language policies.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 20 January 1992]: The educational policies and curriculum in East Timor are similar to those applied in schools throughout Indonesia. As elsewhere, there are a number of Catholic schools in East Timor. One of these in Dili teaches in Portuguese. The official language of government in East Timor is Indonesian.

Indonesia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to modify Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Indonesia following the publication of the Indonesian military investigation into the massacre of civilians in November 1991 by Indonesian soldiers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No. We will consider Her Majesty's Government policy towards Indonesia when we have received the full reports.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 10, if he will list the Ministers of Her Majesty's Government who met with their Indonesian counterparts; and where each meeting took place.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: List of Ministers is as follows:

Mr. Eggar	Jakarta
Lord Caithness	Jakarta
Lord Arran	Jakarta
Mr. King	Jakarta
Mr. Sainsbury	London
Mr. Wakeham	London

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which of the former states of the Soviet Union (a) have been recognised by Her Majesty's Government as independent nations and (b) have signed or acceded to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Hurd: (a) The Government have recognised Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Kazakhstan, Kirgistan, Moldova, Tadikistan, Turkmenistan, Ukraine and Uzbekistan as independent sovereign states. We accept the Russian Federation as the continuing state of the Soviet Union.

(b) We regard Russia as a party to the non-proliferation treaty as continuing the statehood of the former Soviet Union. No other former republics have yet acceded to the NPT. We have urged them all to do so as soon as possible.

IAEA

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the nuclear facilities currently identified in Iraq and those previously registered with the International Atomic Energy Agency for international inspection.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: Details of the sites visited by IAEA inspection teams under the authority of SCR 687 (1991) are given in the agency's inspection reports. These have been circulated as UN Security Council documents. Copies are available in the House of Commons Library.

The following facilities were declared to the IAEA for inspection purposes under Iraq's safeguards agreement with the IAEA of 29 February 1972.

(i) IRT-5000 research reactor: Tuwaitha, Baghdad
(ii) Tamuz 2 research reactor: Tuwaitha, Baghdad
(iii) ERLFF fuel fabrication plant: Tuwaitha, Baghdad
(iv) Separate storage facility: Tuwaitha, Baghdad

Albania

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects Britain to re-establish full diplomatic relations with Albania; when an ambassador will be appointed in Tirana; and whether an embassy building has been purchased.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Britain re-established diplomatic relations with Albania on 29 May 1991 but a decision has yet to be taken on the form of our representation in Tirana. No embassy building has been purchased.

Defence and Disarmament

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the resolutions on defence and disarmament (a) sponsored and (b) supported by the United Kingdom at the 46th regular session of the United Nations General Assembly; and if he will make a statement on reasons in each case for the way in which the United Kingdom voted.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At the forty-sixth regular session of the United Nations General Assembly, the United Kingdom co-sponsored the following resolutions on defence and disarmament matters:—

46/25—Transparency of Military Expenditures.
46/26—Compliance with Arms Limitation and Disarmament Agreements.
46/35A—Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Publication of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on their Destruction.
46/35B—Chemical and Bacteriological (Biological) Weapons: measure to uphold the authority on the 1925 Geneva Protocol.
46/35C—Chemical and Bacteriological (Biological) Weapons.
46/36F—Regional Disarmament, including Confidence-Building Measures.
46/36G—Confidence and Security-Building Measures and Conventional Disarmament in Europe.
46/36L—Transparency in Armaments.
46/36I—Regional Disarmament.

The United Kingdom supported the following resolutions on defence and disarmament matters:—

46/31—Establishment of a Nuclear-Weapon-Free-Zone in South Asia.
46/33—Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space.
46/27—Education and Information for Disarmament.
46/30—Establishment of a Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone in the region of the Middle East.
46/34B—Implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearisation of Africa.
46/36A—Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Use of Prohibition on Military or Any Other Hostile Environmental Modification Techniques.
46/36B—Study on charting potential uses of resources allocated to military activities for civilian endeavours to protect the environment.
46/36C—Relationship between Disarmament and Development.
46/36E—Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Radiological Weapons.
46/36H—International Arms Transfers.
46/36K—Prohibition of the Dumping of Radioactive Wastes.
46/37A—World Disarmament Campaign.
46/37B—Regional Confidence-Building Measures.
46/37E—United Nations Disarmament Fellowship, Training and Advisory Services Programmes.
46/38A—Report of the Disarmament Commission.
46/38D—The Transfer of High Technology with Military Applications.
46/40—Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of certain Conventional Weapons which may be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effect.

Space and time do not allow us to explain our voting in each, but details on individual resolutions can of course be provided if required.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent meetings Ministers or officials of his Department have had with representatives of non-governmental organisations from (a) the United Kingdom and (b) abroad regarding perceived risks of the international commerce in plutonium and other nuclear explosive materials.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This subject was raised at my meeting with NGOs to discuss non-proliferation on 26 November 1991. More recently, Dr. David Lowry of the European proliferation information centre (EPIC) had a meeting with an official from non-proliferation and defence department at which this issue was discussed.

Libya (Lockerbie)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to utilise the procedure outlined in article 14.1 of the 1971 Montreal convention to refer to arbitration the jurisdictional dispute with the Government of Libya concerning the two men named in the warrant issued in relation to the bombing of Pan Am flight 103.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 21 January the Security Council adopted unanimously resolution 731. This urged the Libyan Government to provide a full and effective response to the requests addressed to it by the British, French and United States Governments, which include a demand for the surrender of those accused of the bombing of Pan Am flight 103. We await Libya's response.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Incomes Statistics

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what would be the estimated income from a 9 per cent. levy on all unearned income over £3,000;

(2) what is the estimated number of people who have savings and occupational pensions producing more than £3,000 income per year.

Mr. Maude: A charge at 9 per cent. on the amount of any investment income and occupational pension above £3,000 would yield about £3·3 billion in a full year at 1991-92 levels of income. About 3¾ million people would be liable to the charge. These estimates take no account of any possible behavioural effects following the introduction of such a charge.

Defence Spending

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what adjustments to the Government's published plans for defence spending announced in the Autumn Statement will be necessary during the forthcoming financial years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

Plans for defence spending will be reviewed in the normal way in the autumn during the Government's annual survey of public expenditure.

Valuation Appeals

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will tabulate the amounts awarded so far under appeals against Inland Revenue assessment of non-domestic rate valuations for local authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. Maude: The information is not readily available at present and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Income Tax

Mr. Carr: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the yield/cost in 1991-92 and 1992-93 on both a first year and a full year basis of (a) raising the basic rate limit to taxable income of £29,000, (b) charging higher rate tax at 33 per cent. on taxable income between £29,000 and £46,000, (c) charging higher rate tax at 41 per cent. on taxable income above £46,000, (d) restricting all personal tax allowances to the basic rate, (e) restricting relief for pension contributions made by individuals to the basic rate, (f) a combination of (a), (b), (c) and (d) and (g) a combination of (a), (b), (c) and (e).

Mr. Maude: Estimates of the increase in liability to income tax compared with statutory indexation in 1992-93 are as follows. They do not allow for any behavioural effects that might result from such a change to the tax system and do not include capital gains tax:

£ million

	Cost(-)/yield(+) in a full year at 1992-93 levels of income
Tax regime specified in (a), (b) and (c)	−1,530
(d) Restriction of all personal allowances to the basic rate	+1,460
(e) Restriction of pension contributions to the basic rate	+400
(f) Combination of (a), (b), (c) and (d)	−820
(g) Combination of (a), (b), (c) and (e)	−1,250

Approximately one half of the full year yield from such regimes would affect income tax receipts in the first year.

Nuclear Power Industry

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will revise the definition of the public sector borrowing requirement so as to treat equally the financing arrangements of British Nuclear Fuels and Nuclear Electric; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 21 January 1992]: No.

Privatisation Receipts

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each year since 1979-80 the total Government receipts from privatisation, including debt repayment, indentifying the industry concerned in each case.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 23 January 1992]: Privatisation proceeds from 1979-80 to 31 March 1991, including the repayment of debt, are shown in the following table by industry.

[6] Gross proceeds (costs yet to be reported to Parliament).

Privatisation Receipts

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each year from 1992-93 the total receipts for privatisations which have been carried out, including debt repayments, identifying the industry concerned in each case.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 23 January 1992]: The equity proceeds expected to be received from 1992-93 for sales which have been carried out are shown in the following table. In addition, proceeds will be received in respect of BT loan stock, British Gas debt and the electricity companies' debt, although the precise timing of repayments depends on future decisions.

HEALTH

Consultancy Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of management and accountancy consultancy services incurred by each health authority in England and Wales in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally. In England decisions to employ management and accountancy consultants are a matter for individual health authorities.

Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Trust Funds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what were the trust fund balances held by each health authority in England and Wales on 31 March 1989, 1990 and 1991 in respect of capital reserves for (a) funds held in perpetuity and (b) other funds, distinguishing in each case between (i) general purposes and (ii) special purposes; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was (a) the total trust fund income and (b) total trust fund expenditure of each individual health authority in England and Wales in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Tables showing the information requested and derived from the annual trust fund accounts of health authorities and special trustees in England have been placed in the Library.

Health authorities are empowered under section 90 of the National Health Service Act 1977 to accept, hold and administer any property on trust for all or any purposes relating to the health service. Income and expenditure arising and balances accruing from the activities of third parties such as League of Friends and independently registered charitable trusts are not identifiable within the trust fund accounts of health authorities and are often accounted for separately.

The information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Doncaster Healthcare Trust

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the names, qualifications, occupation, ages, employers and addresses of the chair and non-executive directors of the Doncaster healthcare trust.

Mr. Dorrell: The names of the chairman and non-executive directors of the Doncaster healthcare trust are as follows:

Chairman
Mr. Peter Horsburgh

Non-executive directors
Mr. John Millar
Mr. John Lucas
Mr. John Liversedge
Miss Carol Fleming
Mrs. Margaret Spencer

It is not the Government's policy to disclose the private addresses and other personal information about appointees to health authorities and trusts.

Nurses

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the latest statistics for the number of qualified nurses who have been unable to gain full-time employment in the nursing profession.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines he has issued to the appointed chairs of hospital trusts with respect to their personal use of NHS provisions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

Domiciliary Care Service

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is issued by his Department to local authorities with regard to charging for domiciliary care service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Existing guidance is contained in the Department's circular LAC(84)7, a copy of which is available in the Library. We intend to produce new guidance about the discretionary powers available to local authorities to make charges for domiciliary and day care services.

Emergency Ambulance Calls

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) for each ambulance authority in England and (b) for each financial quarter of 1990-91 and for the first three quarters of 1991-92 the percentage of emergency calls reached (i) within seven minutes, (ii) within 14 minutes in urban areas and (iii) within 19 minutes in a rural area.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is not available in exactly the form requested.

Figures are collected centrally on a financial year basis, and the standards of seven and 14 minutes for metropolitan authorities and seven and 19 minutes for non-metropolitan authorities were not widely used until 1991-92.

The tables show the numbers and percentages of emergency calls being responded to within the standards of eight and 20 minutes for non-metropolitan authorities and seven and 14 minutes for metropolitan authorities for the financial year 1990-91 which are the latest available.

National Health Service Reform

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost of the production and distribution of the document "NHS Reforms—The First Six Months".

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure by the national health service management executive on the production and launch of the booklet "National Health Service Reforms—The First Six Months".

Mr. Dorrell: The estimated cost of producing, distributing and launching the booklet "NHS Reforms —The First Six Months" is £34,000.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the details of the forecasts of the financial position of each district health authority and national health service trust referred to in the national health service management executive's publication "National Health Service Reforms—The First Six Months."

Mr. Dorrell: The following district health authorities are referred to in the publication "National Health Service Reforms—The First Six Months":

Worcester
Northumberland
Riverside
North Derbyshire
West Dorset
Doncaster
Bromley
South Birmingham

The latest financial forecasts show each district health authority in surplus or balance for the year.

The following National Health Service trusts were also referred to in the report:

Southend Health Care
Northumbria Ambulance Services
United Bristol Healthcare
West Dorset Community Health
Freeman Group of Hospitals
Royal Free Hospital
Broadgreen Hospital

Each of these trusts is forecasting that it will meet its key financial duties of remaining within its external financing limit and achieving breakeven.

Press and Publicity

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) the number of staff and (b) the total cost of the press and publicity section of the Department of Health for each year since July 1988.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the replies my hon. Friend and I gave the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 26 April 1991 at column 575 and 5 November 1991 at columns 103-104.

Private Care Agencies

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward legislation to require the registration and regulation of private agencies concerned with the domiciliary of elderly and disabled persons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to legislate for the compulsory registration and regulation of such agencies.

Hospitals

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring the national health service management executive undertakes of the state of hospital cleanliness.

Mr. Dorrell: As I explained in my reply to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) at column 151, specifying the required standards of hospital cleanliness and ensuring they are maintained is the responsibility of local management.

The national health service management executive would, however, intervene if there were any indication that appropriate standards were not being applied.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the training available to national health service staff on the prevention of hospital acquired infections.

Mr. Dorrell: It is the responsibility of the relevant professional bodies, the Royal College of Pathologists and the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting to assess the adequacy of training for specialist staff in hospital acquired infection. These staff are in turn expected to provide the necessary training for non-specialist colleagues and it is the responsibility of local management to see that this happens.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department has on hospital readmissions resulting from hospital acquired infections.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally.

Health Authority Finance

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those health authorities receiving allocations from their regional health authorities risk money reserves.

Mr. Dorrell: Comprehensive information about allocations to district health authorities from regional health authorities' reserves is not held centrally.

Guardians Ad Litem

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what basis his Department is calculating the formula for distributing the specific grant for guardians ad litem.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are discussing with the local authority associations a formula based on the number of children aged under 18 and the number of care orders for each local authority averaged over the three years 1988-90.

Care Homes (Restraint)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will specify which forms of restraint in care homes are (a) acceptable and (b) unacceptable to his Department; and what guidance has been given to registration officers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Residents of residential care homes have a right to dignity, independence and choice.

The Residential Care Homes Regulations require that the owners and managers of homes should both safeguard and promote the welfare of residents and take proper account of their wishes and feelings. This is emphasised in "Home Life"—a code of practice for residential care published in 1984 and endorsed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. This is also emphasised in "Homes are for Living In", the social services inspectorate's model for evaluating care and the quality of life in homes for the elderly, and the inspectorate's current series of standards publications relating to homes for other client groups.

This guidance has been made available to those running homes and to local authority inspectors. Copies are also available in the Library.

Children's Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the number of unqualified officers in charge and deputy officers in charge of children's homes in England.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A recent survey of 106 English local authorities indicated that 380 officers in charge and 926 deputy officers in charge of local authority maintained and controlled residential homes for children were not qualified to CQSW/CSS/DipSW standard.

Following the recommendation in Sir William Utting's report "Children in the Public Care", a copy of which is available in the Library, that all heads of homes should be suitably qualified, a special training initiative is being introduced from 1992-93 as a part of the training support programme to help local authorities ensure that this is achieved by 1995-96.

Hospital-acquired Infections

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if national health service providers will be required to publish details of their record for incidences of hospital-acquired infections;

(2) what statistics are held centrally on the incidence of hospital-acquired infection.

Mr. Dorrell: Provider units are responsible for monitoring hospital-acquired infection (HAI) as part of their infection control procedures. It is for provider units to consider whether and in what form to make available the results of such monitoring, as it is for purchasing authorities to determine the measures of quality of service that they specify in contracts. However it is clear that factors leading to HAI and the methods used to record it are so many and varied that it would be impossible for health authorities to publish tables on the overall incidence of HAI which would be both accurate and comparable, and such figures are not collected centrally. In a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) on 16 January at column 627, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced that the clinical standards advisory group in its forthcoming study, may wish to address the possibility of encouraging a greater degree of standardisation of data on HAI.

Fund Holding

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the expenditure by his Department on the general practitioner fund-holding scheme.

Mr. Dorrell: In the first year of the scheme 306 practices representing 1,720 GPs are managing a total budget of £397,600,000 to purchase health care for their patients. The benefits of fund holding are now widely recognised.

Risk Money Reserves

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will outline the criteria being used by the national health service management executive and regional health authorities in allocating money from the risk money reserves.

Mr. Dorrell: The reserves are there to provide health authorities with flexibility in managing risk throughout the year.

Haemodialysis Machines

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many haemodialysis machines are currently owned by the NHS.

Mr. Dorrell: Based on information from a sample of regions the estimated total is 2,500.

ENERGY

Non-Fossil Fuel Order

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the extension beyond the current 1998 limit for renewable energy generation projects qualifying for a premium price under the Non-Fossil Fuel Order, which he is negotiating with the European Commission will apply to wind energy-projects alone, or to all renewable projects qualifying under the Non-Fossil Fuel Order.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government wishes to see an extension of the fossil fuel levy for renewables beyond 1998, which would apply to all relevant renewable technologies, not just wind.

Natural Gas

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's estimate of the percentage of natural gas that is lost to the environment during its production, transmission from the North sea, processing, distribution to the consumer, and during combustion.

Mr. Moynihan: It is currently estimated that losses of natural gas during production, transmission from the North sea, processing and distribution to the customer amount to about 2 per cent. of production. No official estimates of losses during combustion are available.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Pass Holders

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the names of right hon. and hon. Members, together with the number of researchers and staff pass holders, and their names, accredited to them.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 25 November 1991]: It has been the policy of my predecessors not to give the names of staff working for right hon. and hon. Members. However the latest pass office figures show that

(a) 165 hon. Members have one full researcher's pass;
(b) 2 hon. Members have two full researcher's passes;
(c) 12 hon. Members are on the waiting list;
(d) 4 Front Bench Members are on the waiting list for a full researcher's pass;
(e) 57 Members have places on the research assistants list which are currently not filled.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

INWARD Group

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how much money his Department has given this year to INWARD and how much in each of the last 10 years; and which local authorities within the INWARD group have not supported INWARD;

(2) If he will make a statement on INWARD's achievements over the last 10 years.

Mr. Redwood: Since INWARD was established in 1985 my Department has provided grant in aid for its overseas inward investment activities, details of which are set out in the table.

DTI grants to INWARD since 1985

	DTI grant aid £000	Total funding £000	Grant Percentage
1985-86	187	407	46
1986-87	263	488	54
1987-88	380	620	61
1988-89	450	718	63
1989-90	541	918	59
1990-91	840	1,243	67
1991-92	990	1,566	63

In 1991-92, my Department will provide £990,000 grant in aid, representing an 83 per cent. increase over the last two years. This reflects the Government's continued commitment towards INWARD and acknowledges its valuable contribution to the overall success of the United Kingdom in attracting inward investment. According to information notified to my Department's Invest in Britain Bureau since INWARD's formation in 1985, 225 decisions have been made by foreign companies to invest in the region. At the time these decisions were announced they were expected to create or safeguard 36,000 jobs. INWARD's activities on behalf of the region have contributed to this recent level of success.

As to local authority support, I understand that 29 out of the 47 local authorities within INWARD's region are currently paid up members of INWARD. Those currently not in membership are Manchester, Salford, Bury, Thameside, Wigan, Stockport, Congleton, St. Helens, Sefton, Ellesmere Port and Neston, Fylde, Preston, Pendle, Allerdale, Barrow-in-Furness, Carlisle, Copeland and South Lakeland.

Furniture (Safety)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has made recently to the EC regarding regulations on the safety of furniture.

Mr. Leigh: The Commission decided to suspend further work on its draft directive on the fire behaviour of upholstered furniture in May last year pending further research into the burning behaviour of upholstery materials and into test methods. We made it clear to the Commission that the United Kingdom will retain its regulations until a regime consistent with the level of protection in the United Kingdom is available under the directive.

Officials from my Department and from the Home Office are participating in discussions with the Commission in drawing up proposals for research.

Breathing Apparatus

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to announce details of bodies to certify United Kingdom manufactured breathing apparatus in order for manufacturers to comply with the EC directive under article 100A.

Mr Leigh: Approved inspection bodies will be appointed once the implementing regulations are made. We hope to publish the regulations in draft for consultation in the near future.

Human Rights Records (Export)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consideration the Government pay to the human rights situation in a country prior to granting a licence for the export of equipment which is likely to be used for internal repression.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department receives expert advice from other Government Departments when considering whether to permit the export of virtually all military and paramilitary items in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1991. This advice includes, where appropriate, consideration of the human rights record of the country of ultimate destination.

"199?" Poster Campaign

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the effects of the recent "199?" poster campaign advertising the DTI business hotline 181-200 1992.

Mr. Sainsbury: Whilst it is not possible to attribute calls to the hotline to the poster campaign there has been a significant increase in the number made. In the first three weeks of this year, there were nearly twice as many calls as in the same period last year—3,917 compared with 2,216.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of 15 January, Official Report, column 571, if the commercial overseas services offered by the nuclear industry are eligible for export credit.

Mr. Sainsbury: Contracts for reprocessing spent fuel associated with the nuclear fuel industry can be considered in principle for export credit cover subject to satisfactory underwriting conditions.

Export Control Organisation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which parts and groups of the Export of Goods (Control) Order were referred to in his answers on 26 April 1991, Official Report, column 595, to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) and 21 October 1991, Official Report, column 312, to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer).

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 23 January 1992]: The answer on 26 April 1991 covered group 1 of part II of schedule 1 of the 1989 order (now superseded by the 1991 order).

The answer on 21 October dealt with all goods in schedule 1 of the 1989 order.

Iran

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what items are subject to an embargo on trade with Iran.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 January 1992]: Exports to Iran which require a licence under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1991 are scrutinised rigorously in accordance with the policy notified to the House by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 29 October 1985 (Official Report, col. 450).

Instruments of Torture

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, if he will make a statement outlining the procedures used by his Department in examining a country's human rights record before equipment can be exported to a country under the remit of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department receives expert advice from other Government Departments when considering whether to permit the export of virtually all military and paramilitary items in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1991. This advice includes, where appropriate, consideration of the human rights record of the country of ultimate destination.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Newspapers (Complaints)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list those national newspapers by title and ownership which have now established systems of ombudsmen or readers' representatives to take up complaints and breaches of the code of practice to which they were committed under the terms of the joint declaration of November 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We understand that the newspapers that were party to the joint declaration of November 1989 and which currently have readers" representatives are as follows:

Daily Express	Express Newspapers plc
Daily Mail	Associated Newspapers plc
Daily Star	Express Newspapers plc
The Daily Telegraph	The Daily Telegraph plc
Evening Standard	Associated Newspapers plc
The Guardian	Guardian Newspapers Ltd
The Independent	Newspapers Publishing plc
The Mail on Sunday	Associated Newspapers plc
News of the World	News Group Newspapers Ltd
The Observer	The Observer Ltd
The Sun	News Group Newspapers Ltd
Sunday Express	Express Newspapers plc
The Sunday Times	Times Newspapers Ltd
The Sunday Telegraph	The Daily Telegraph plc

DNA Analysis

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals for guidelines to govern the national and international use of DNA analysis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no immediate plans for guidance in this area. My right hon. Friend asked the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice to consider the use of DNA and we await its recommendations.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision is made for the destruction of the DNA profiles of persons cleared of committing an offence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Guidelines adopted by the Home Office and Metropolitan police forensic science services provide that DNA profiles of persons excluded from or acquitted of offences are removed from the central database and the sample from which the profile is taken is also destroyed.

Release of Prisoners (Ill Health)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of prisoners released from prisons in England and Wales before the completion of their sentences on the ground of ill health in each of the last three years.

Mrs. Rumbold: The numbers of prisoners released from their sentences by the exercise of the royal prerogative on the ground of serious illness are as follows:—

Year	Number
1989	4
1990	1
1991	Nil

Prisoners may also be released from prison on parole provided they are considered suitable for release on licence. Any ill health will be taken into account when the case is being considered.

Private Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what prison industries are proposed for privately run prisons; who will be responsible for obtaining contracts for such prison industries; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Proposals for work for prisoners are solicited from bidders as part of the invitation to tender for the management of a contracted out prison. It is for the successful bidder to implement his proposals.

Mr. Osama Ibrahim Al-Asfoor

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State proposes to answer the letter of the hon. Member for Basingstoke of 19 January, and subsequent letters and telephone calls, regarding Mr. Osama Ibrahim Al-Asfoor, c/o 258 Kempshott lane, Basingstoke.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have written to my hon. Friend.

TRANSPORT

Computer Hacks

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what investigations have taken place into allegations that computer specialists have hacked into the driving licence records at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency in Swansea; and with what result.

Mr. Chope: The DVLA has disscussed the recent allegations about unauthorised access to its computer records with the author of the original Police Review article who has confirmed that there is no substance to them. The author has agreed to retract the allegations in his next article.

King's Cross

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what funds are being made available to British Rail for design and other work in connection with planning and preparation of the King's Cross project.

Mr. Freeman: The external finance limit for BR next year will be £2,041 million. This will allow BR to spend £66 million on design and preparatory work for the King's Cross, Thameslink 2000 and channel tunnel rail link projects.

Train Doors

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 21 January, if he will make an early statement on the subject of the reliability of slam-shut doors on British Rail; and if he will ensure that adequate care is given to British Rail passengers.

Mr. Freeman: Both the Government and British Rail attach the highest priority to railway safety. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State will give very careful consideration to the report of the Health and Safety Executive's investigation into the pattern of falls from train doors when it is completed in the spring, and respond appropriately at that time.

Road Schemes

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 503, on the environmental assessment of road schemes, how he proposes to judge whether the environmental impact of a road scheme is significant to the extent that it is within the terms of the EC directive.

Mr. Chope: An environmental impact assessment is required for all projects listed in annex I of directive 85/337/EEC. The environmental appraisal, which is standard departmental practice for all schemes in the national roads programme, reveals the extent to which the impact of annex II projects is significant within the requirements of the directive.

A34

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the side road orders required before work can start on the remaining section of the A34 in Hampshire and the Newbury bypass to be completed; and whether he will make a statement on progress on the A34 improvements.

Mr. Chope: Supplementary side road orders and a compulsory purchase order for the Newbury bypass were published in draft last October. In the light of objections received, it has been decided that a public inquiry should be held. Details of the arrangements for the inquiry will be issued as soon as possible. Further progress will depend on completion of the statutory procedures.

Leicester Bypasses

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's estimates of traffic flows on the proposed eastern bypass, Leicester; and how many vehicles use the western bypass each day.

Mr. Chope: Traffic information from consultants for Leicester eastern bypass is not yet available. Construction of Leicester western bypass is due to begin later this year. Estimated flows for the first year of operation—1994—range from 22,000 to 41,000.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost to the taxpayer of appointing consultants to plan the eastern bypass, Leicester.

Mr. Chope: Fees are a commercially confidential matter between the Department as client and the consultant as provider of a service.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the date when the Severn bridge will be free of lane restrictions and have four lanes open to traffic.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 24 January 1992]: Four lanes are available to traffic now at peak time, but work following the completion of the resurfacing, such as the erection of central reserve safety fencing, will be in evidence until about the middle of this year.

Airbags

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is his Department's current policy on the use of airbags as an additional safety measure for motorcycles;

(2) what research his Department has undertaken on the accidental inflation of airbags on motorcycles.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 24 January 1992]: The Government are currently funding a research programme at the Transport and Road Research Laboratory in which motor-cycles are tested with and without airbags. The research is in its early stages, and it is not yet clear whether airbags will prove a practical safety measure.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department has undertaken on the potential health hazards from gas contained in airbags used as safety devices on motor vehicles.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 24 January 1992]: A study is looking at the use of airbags in motor vehicles, including any potential health hazards from the gas discharged from airbags.

East Midlands Regional Office

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the grade of the director of network management and construction of the East Midlands regional office.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 24 January 1992]: Grade 5.

Itchen Valley Watermeadows SSSI

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he has taken to ensure that the contractors do not carry out potentially damaging operations on the River Itchen watermeadows site of special scientific interest in breach of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981;

(2) if he has received the consent of English Nature for potentially damaging operations, as defined by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, on the River Itchen watermeadows site of special scientific interest;

(3) if the advance bridge works being carried out on the M3 Bar End-Compton will involve potentially damaging operations as defined by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 on the River Itchen watermeadows site of special scientific interest prior to 1 March.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 January 1992]: The potential impact upon the Itchen Valley watermeadows site of special scientific interest of the construction of the M3 between Bar End and Compton was fully considered at the public inquiry into the scheme and the inspector's report thereon. The inspector concluded that the scheme should proceed notwithstanding the impact upon some 3·5 hectares—less than 2 per cent. of the 175-hectare site of special scientific interest. Under the requirements of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, the Department does not need to obtain any further consent from English Nature, but is required to give four months notice before carrying out any works within the site of special scientific interest. No works will be carried out in the site of special scientific interest until the notice has expired.

DVLA

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the security of the DVLA computer from unauthorised access or interference.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 23 January 1992]: The DVLA is alert to the sensitivity and value of the data held on its computer system and has protected them accordingly. This has involved measures to combat unauthorised access, including the use of internal and external scrutineers. The security measures are a combination of physical restriction and procedural control.

Motorway Service Areas

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the expected location and date of operation of new motorway service areas on the M25 and M40 motorways.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 23 January 1992]: Motorway service areas—MSAs—are currently under development for the M25 at Clacket Lane—junctions 5 to 6—and for the M40 at Ardley—junction 10. Both are expected to open by the autumn of next year. As intimated in the citizens charter, the Government are considering a new system with the aim of ensuring that more MSAs are provided more quickly.

THE ARTS

Disabled People (Access to Buildings)

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will make it a condition for public funding that arts venues are fully accessible to people with disabilities.

Mr. Renton: The responsibility for the allocation of Government funding to individual arts organisations rests with the Arts Council of Great Britain. Its funding criteria include requirements on access, including access to artistic and employment opportunities for people with disabilities. The council's appraisals of the performance of individual clients pay particular attention to this.

The Arts Council published in 1990 an action plan on the arts and disability, a follow-on from the code of practice published in 1985. These documents have been sent to all the council's client bodies and other interested parties.

The Arts Council is committed to ensuring that improvements are made to increase the accessibility of arts venues to people with sight impairments, hearing impairments, mobility difficulties and all other forms of disability. However, the council does not consider that it would be in the best interests to make complete accessibility a mandatory condition of grant, as grants are normally paid to performing companies, many of which do not own the buildings in which they appear.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Duchy Visit

34. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next plans to visit the duchy; and if he will make a statement.

37. Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next expects to visit the duchy.

38. Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next plans to pay an official visit to the duchy.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) earlier today.

Official Duties

35. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to increase the amount of time spent on official duties.

Mr. Chris Patten: No.

Official Car

36. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what arrangements are made for the reimbursement of public funds for any use of his official car for non-official purposes.

Mr. Chris Patten: I use my ministerial car only when undertaking duties as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and in my capacity as a Government Minister.

ENVIRONMENT

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will increase capital investment in home energy efficiency.

Mr. Yeo: The Government make substantial capital sums available for home energy efficiency. Provisional figures indicate local authorities spent over £120 million on insulation works, and some £110 million on other energy conservation measures, on the council house stock in 1990-91. They are spending an extra £60 million on energy efficiency over three years under the green house programme. An additional £24 million has been made available for spending on public and private sector insulation under the home energy efficiency scheme in 1991-92. Further smaller sums are spent on these measures through house renovation grants and the Housing Corporation. We have also recently launched a major publicity campaign called "Helping the Earth Begins At Home", to encourage householders to adopt energy efficiency measures in response to global warming. The campaign emphasises that many measures have short payback periods and are therefore cost-effective for householders to finance themselves.

Urban Programme

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much money Sheffield's urban programme budget has lost, in 1990-91 and 1991-92, as a result of the Government's policy not to implement full additionality; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much money urban programme local authorities have lost in 1990-91 and 1991-92 as a result of the Government's policy not to implement full additionality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Expected European Community receipts are taken into account annually in setting national public expenditure programmes which are therefore larger than they would otherwise be. Consequently, ERDF grants must be covered from within the public expenditure provision.

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the new forms of optional alternative working patterns introduced into each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment and provide a breakdown by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern for each agency;

(2) how many staff were in post in each of his Department's executive agencies on the date on which it was established; and how many are now in post;

(3) if he will list each of his Department's executive agencies that operates on a group bonus scheme; what cash amount per person was awarded in the last year for which figures are available; and what conditions were attached to its award.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave on Monday 13 January 1992 at columns 420-21.

Water Pollution

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to assure himself that the chlorine levels present in drinking water are sufficient to prevent infection in consumers from oocysts of Cryptosporidium.

Mr. Baldry: In July 1990, the group of experts on cryptosporidium in water supplies, chaired by Sir John Badenoch, reported that water treatment processes in current use were not designed to deal specifically with the problem of cryptosporidial oocysts which are also unaffected by chlorine in the concentrations that can be used. Although treatment processes cannot be relied upon to prevent all oocysts from entering mains water, they are quite effective in dealing with low numbers of the parasite.

The Government accepted all the recommendations of the expert group designed to minimise infection. They also initiated the research programme proposed by the group.

Copies of the report were placed in the House Library at the time of publication.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to require British Coal to obtain consent to discharge ferric iron from abandoned coal mines to surface waters.

Mr. Baldry: The National Rivers Authority has been reviewing the extent of problems from abandoned mine workings in England and Wales, and we are considering how best they might be tackled.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements exist to report and collate information from the littoral states relating to the surfacing of dumped chemical weapons in the North sea and surrounding areas; and how many reports of such incidents have been received by his Department in the last 12 months.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom is party, with all other north sea littoral states, to an international agreement designed to facilitate co-operation in dealing with major oil or chemical pollution incidents in the North sea. Known as the Bonn agreement, it requires contracting states to report any pollution incident to other members which may be affected by subsequent pollution. The agreement also provides for each member to use its best endeavour to provide counter-pollution assistance if requested by another contracting party.

The Department of Transport's marine pollution control unit exercises the Government's responsibility in this area. It has received no reports of the surfacing of dumped chemical weapons in the last 12 months.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department holds on the quality of water in marinas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The National Rivers Authority is responsible for monitoring the quality of coastal waters, as defined under section 104 of the 1991 Water Resources Act, including marinas. The monitoring data is publicly available on the registers maintained in the regional offices of the NRA.

Privatisations

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for the five years prior to privatisation the loss or profit of the water industry; and if he will list any grants or loans made over the same period.

Mr. Baldry: Full financial details for each of the former water authorities covering the five years prior to privatisation were included in the accountants' report chapter of each company's section of the prospectus for the sale of the water holding companies, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Waste Shipments

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce further controls on the regulations of trans-frontier shipments of waste.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom is pressing for agreement in the European Community on a regulation which will strengthen existing controls. The regulation will enable member states to ratify the UNEP Basel convention on the trans-boundary movements of hazardous wastes and their disposal.

Car Paint Spraying

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the environmental and health effects of effluent resulting from industrial-scale car paint spraying waste; what regulations govern the operation of such plants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The pollution most likely to result from industrial-scale car paint spraying is to air, the main pollutants being volatile organic compounds. Volatile organic compounds contribute to the formation of ground level ozone and photochemical smog, and can cause a local smell problem; certain volatile organic compounds are toxic or carcinogenic. From 1 April this year, paint application in vehicle manufacturing where five tonnes or more of organic solvent is used per year will require authorisation under the local authority air pollution control system set up by part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Liquid effluents arising from industrial-scale car paint spraying are also subject to control. Discharges of effluent to sewer require the consent of the relevant water company; discharges to a watercourse require the consent of the National Rivers Authority. Where the application of paint in a manufacturing process is likely to produce 1,000 tonnes or more of special waste a year, the process will be subject to integrated pollution control which is enforced centrally by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

MINIS Report

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the next MINIS report to be published; if he will make it his policy to place a copy in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: The next MINIS reports, MINIS 13, will be published after the end of the round of reviews and meetings now starting in my Department. I expect them to be available in June. It was from the start, and remains, my policy to place a copy of the MINIS returns in the Library of the House.

New Estates (Crime Prevention)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward legislation to make it obligatory for local authorities and private developers to liaise with the police crime prevention officers at the initial stages of the development of housing and industrial estates.

Mr. Yeo: The Town and Country Planning (Development Plan) Regulations, which come into force on 10 February, will require local planning authorities to have regard to crime prevention when preparing development plans. Furthermore, my Department's circulars 1/84 (issued jointly with the Home Office) and 22/88, provide guidance on the role of planning in crime prevention. They encourage local planning authorities to consult police architectural liaison officers on planning applications for developments, such as housing and industrial estates, where there is potential to eliminate or reduce criminal activity through the adoption of best practice at the design stage.

Bats

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue a development control policy note for the guidance of local planning authorities in relation to applications in which an issue arises from the presence of bats on an application site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales today.

Development Corporations

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total amount of money made available to each development corporation in England for each year of operation up to December 1991.

Mr. Key: This is tabulated as follows:

Grant in aid to UDCs

£ million

UDC	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86

Sheffield	—	—	7·958	9·500	18·967	13·300

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many jobs have been created in each development corporation in England in each year of its operation.

Mr. Key: The totals for permanent jobs created in UDC areas to March 1991, net of losses, are as follows. Individual figures for each year are not available on a consistent basis for all the corporations.

	Numbers
London Docklands	26,000
Merseyside	4,626
Black Country	2,600
Teesside	4,650
Trafford Park	2,557
Tyne and Wear	3,169
Bristol	4,000
Central Manchester	950
Leeds	5,862
Sheffield	7,580
Total	61,994

London Boroughs (Statutory Duties)

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will examine the scope for additional Departmental assistance to outer London boroughs incurring unavoidable additional expenditure outlays from extra statutory burdens since 1987-88.

Mr. Key: We are satisfied that standard spending assessments take proper account of all statutory burdens falling on each class of authority.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people are currently employed by the Property Services Agency; and if he will give a breakdown of the number of employees in Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland, the English regions and overseas, respectively.

Mr. Yeo: As at 31 December 1991, PSA Services employed a total of 17,581 staff in the following locations:

	Number
Scotland	1,542
Wales	799
Northern Ireland	393
English regions[1]	11,538
Overseas	3,309
Total	17,581

[1] (including all staff in London and Croydon).

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes he has made in the Property Services Agency to prepare it for privatisation; and if he will make a statement on the Government's plans for this sale.

Mr. Yeo: PSA Services was restructured in 1990 into two main businesses, PSA Projects and PSA Building Management, which now consists of five regional businesses. A contractor manager was appointed for BM in November 1991. Improved management and accounting systems are being installed and commercial contracts with client Departments are being negotiated. Action has been taken to reduce costs. A major staff rundown is in hand, as far as possible by voluntary means, though compulsory redundancies cannot be ruled out. I intend to offer PSA Projects for sale early this year; I am currently considering the timing and the form in which it should be offered for sale. I expect to offer the five BM businesses for sale in the second half of 1992-93 on the basis of the implementation plan currently being developed.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were employed by the Property Services Agency on 1 April 1991; and what were the corresponding numbers in 1990, 1989, 1988 and 1987.

Mr. Yeo: PSA Services employed a total of 19,571 people on 1 April 1991. Corresponding totals for previous years are:

Year	Number
1 April 1990	23,441
1 April 1989	26,046
1 April 1988	28,420
1 April 1987	29,311

Public Access to Information

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish the consultation paper on the implementation of the EC directive on public access to information.

Mr. Trippier: I have today issued the consultation paper setting out the Government's proposals on implementing this directive (EC 90/313).

The United Kingdom Government took a leading part in the negotiation of the EC directive which was agreed by the Environment Council of ministers in 1990. This directive must be implemented by member states by the end of 1992.

Improving the public's access to environmental information was one of the key principles set out in the Environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance". Better access to environmental information will help to raise the standard of public debate on environmental issues by clarifying the facts.

We have already taken steps towards the implementation of the directive through the establishment of public registers of decisions taken by the enforcement authorities such as those held by the National Rivers Authority and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. The directive extends the public's right of access to information held by public authorities beyond that already held on registers.

The consultation paper sets out the Government's proposals on implementation. In particular it covers the following issues:

the kinds of information covered by the Directive;

a guideline list of the public authorities subject to the Directive;

the exemptions provided for in the Directive; and legislation proposals.

Views are invited on these proposals by 30 April 1992.

Copies of the consultation paper have been placed in the Library of the House.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money his Department has spent on producing its citizens charter proposals, arising from production, distribution and publicity costs.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 21 January 1992]: I issued on 24 January a council tenants charter. Production, initial distribution and publicity costs are estimated at £291,550. Further distribution costs will be incurred in response to demand.

Local Government Finance

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average number of liability orders for arrears of community charge processed per hour in the magistrates courts.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

For each hour which magistrates courts in England and Wales specifically set aside for community charge enforcement proceedings, an average of 243 liability orders are issued.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average cost per hour to public funds of magistrates courts hearings to grant liability orders for recovery of community charge.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

The average cost per sitting hour in magistrates courts is £217.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the number of mortgages repossession actions begun in each county court for 1990 and 1991.

The Attorney-General: The total number of mortgage repossession actions entered, suspended orders and orders made during 1990 and 1991 in each county court in England and Wales is contained in two lists which have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament. These figures do not indicate how many houses have been repossessed through the courts as not all of the orders made will have resulted in the issue and execution of warrants of possession.

Bankruptcy

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the number of bankruptcy cases begun in each county court for 1990 and 1991.

The Attorney-General: The total number of creditors' petitions, debtors' petitions and company winding-up petitions issued during 1990 and 1991 in each county court in England and Wales having insolvency jurisdiction is contained in two lists which have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

Forensic Scientists

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Attorney-General if he will take measures to ensure that independent forensic scientists receive legal aid payments due to them without delay.

The Attorney-General: It is the responsibility of the solicitor who commissions a report from an expert, such as an independent forensic scientist, to pay for the report. In a legally aided case, the solicitor may then claim reimbursement of the cost of the expert's report, in accordance with legal aid regulations.

Experts' Fees

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Attorney-General when he intends to introduce the scheme for interim payment of experts' fees from legal aid funds.

The Attorney-General: In a legally aided civil case, a solicitor may claim a payment on account for disbursements, including experts' fees. The Lord Chancellor had hoped to introduce a similar scheme last year for the payment of Crown court legal aid bills, but the proposals he put forward for the scale and operation of such a scheme were not acceptable to the Law Society.

The Lord Chancellor is now reconsidering his proposals, and hopes to continue consultation with the Law Society and be in a position to introduce a scheme later this year.

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Attorney-General what sums have been recovered by administrators or receivers in each of the past four years as a result of investigations by the Serious Fraud Office.

The Attorney-General: The purpose of investigations by the Serious Fraud Office is to establish whether or not criminal offences have been committed.

The Serious Fraud Office does co-operate with administrators and receivers, but insofar as funds are recovered by the latter, such information is not routinely reported to the Serious Fraud Office. It would in any event be impossible to specify the property recovered as the result of investigations by the Serious Fraud Office.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the development of practical co-operation between the Serious Fraud Office and authorities in (a) Switzerland and (b) Liechtenstein.

The Attorney General: The passing of the Criminal Justice (International Co-operation) Act 1990 enabled the United Kingdom to ratify the European convention on mutual assistance in criminal matters. The Convention has been ratified by both Switzerland and Liechtenstein and thus in addition to bilateral assistance on a reciprocal basis the scope for co-operation has been enlarged.

The director of the Serious Fraud Office is satisfied that effective channels of communication have been estalished to enable full advantage of these arrangements to be taken.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

European Standing Committees

44. Dr. Godman: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on the first report of Session 1991-92 from the Select Committee on Procedure "Review of European Standing Committees".

Mr. MacGregor: I am grateful to the Procedure Committee for its thorough review of the first Session's experience of the new European Standing Committees. The Government are considering their recommendations carefully and will respond soon.

Kiosk

46. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Lord President of the Council what were the takings of the House of Commons kiosk (a) for the month of December 1991 and (b) for the year to 31 December 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The takings at the souvenir kiosk in the House for December last were £191,426; the equivalent figure for souvenirs and other goods sold from the kiosk in Bellamy's was £28,425. In the 12 months to 31 December 1991 the takings for the souvenir kiosk in the House were £691,571; the takings for Bellamy's kiosk for the three months since it opened on 1 October 1991 were £42,573. All figures include VAT.

Car Parking

47. Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many car parking spaces are available to (a) Members and (b) the press.

Mr. MacGregor: A summary of car parking spaces available is given in annex A of the leaflet "Car Parking" obtainable from the Serjeant at Arms. I am arranging for a copy to be sent to my hon. Friend.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Beith: To ask the Lord President of the Council when debates on statutory instruments were last adjourned under (a) Standing Order No. 14 (1)(b) and (b) Standing Order No. 15 (2).

Mr. MacGregor: The last occasion on which a debate on a motion to approve a statutory instrument was adjourned because the time for debate was not considered adequate by the Chair was Wednesday 16 February 1983.

The last occasion on which a debate on a motion to address the Queen for the annulment of a statutory instrument was adjourned because the time for debate was not considered adequate by the Chair was 9 February 1976.

Pedestrian Underpass

Sir David Steel: To ask the Lord President of the Council what estimate he has made of the cost and time of construction of a pedestrian underpass from the foot of the existing steps outside No. 1 Parliament street to the other side of Bridge street.

Mr. MacGregor: I understand that during the design stage for phase I of the new parliamentary building a number of options for a subway were considered but they proved either impractical or expensive. The particular location mentioned by the right hon. Member was considered, but there is insufficient space between the road surface and the roof of the District and Circle Line.

The design proposals for the next phase of the new building do envisage, however, that the existing subway will be dedicated to the use of the two Houses and that there should be a direct link through the new building to No. 1 Parliament street.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Exit Visas

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russian authorities about their failure to grant an exit visa to Yakov Fukson, of St. Petersburg.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can certainly raise the case of refusenik Yakov Fukson of St. Petersburg with the Russian authorities, but in order to make our representations most effective, we shall need further details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russian authorities about their failure to grant an exit visa to Vadim Shlyaliter, of Yekaterinburg.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can certainly raise the case of refusenik Vadim Shlyaliter of Yekaterinburg with the Russian authorities, but in order to make our representations most effective, we shall need further details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russian authorities about their failure to grant an exit visa to Simon Eppel, of Angarsk.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can certainly raise the case of refusenik Simon Eppel of Angarsk with the Russian authorities, but in order to make our representations most effective we shall need further details.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his statement, Official Report, 14 January, column 901, if he will outline the circumstances in which the threat of the use of a strategic weapon would not be credible whereas the threat of a sub-strategic weapon might be credible.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. It has been the policy of successive Governments not to comment on the circumstances in which nuclear weapons might be used. Deterrence is best served by ensuring uncertainty in the mind of any aggressor about the nature of our response.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy towards the complete removal of all tactical and sub-strategic nuclear weapons from Russia, all of the other former Soviet republics and from NATO countries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We strongly endorsed United States and Soviet undertakings last autumn to eliminate all their ground-launched sub-strategic nuclear weapons, and have subsequently welcomed the Commonwealth of Independent States stated intention to honour that commitment.

Ukraine

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the retention of nuclear weapons by the Ukraine.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commonwealth of Independent States has agreed that nuclear weapons on Ukrainian territory will remain under unified control until they have been dismantled by the end of 1994. The Foreign Secretary, during his recent visit to Kiev, welcomed this as well as Ukraine's intention to accede to the non-proliferation treaty as soon as it is in a position to abide by the treaty's obligations.

Jonathan Moyle

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent communications Her Majesty's Government have had with the Chilean Government over the death of Jonathan Moyle

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A senior Foreign and Commonwealth Office official discussed the case with the Chilean Foreign Minister in November 1991. He expressed Her Majesty's Government's concern that those responsible for Mr. Moyle's death should be brought to justice.

Our embassy at Santiago maintains regular contact with the Chilean authorities and continues to monitor the case closely.

Dubai

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek the agreement of the Government of the United Arab Emirates to disclose details of all discussions he has held with it about the export of materials from Britain to the special branch of Dubai.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have had no such discussions.

India

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning human rights abuses by Indian state forces in the Punjab; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received many representations about human rights abuses in Punjab, where the authorities are facing a campaign of murder and terrorism by Sikh separatists. The Indian Government are fully aware of our concerns.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the numbers of people in the Punjab (a) killed, (b) arrested, (c) missing feared killed or imprisoned and (d) tortured by Indian security forces since 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: According to the latest Indian figures, it is estimated that approximately 12,000 people have been killed in Punjab since 1984. The other particulars requested are not available.

Maastricht Agreement

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 101, if he will make his policy to make available the revised text of the Maastricht agreement, as prepared for signatures, at least seven days before the treaty is signed.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The text of the treaty on European union agreed at Maastricht was made available to the House on 16 December. It is now being prepared in a form suitable for signature on 7 February. This process will be completed only shortly before 7 February. I will ensure that a copy of the text is made available to the House immediately after signature.

Western European Union

Mr. Mates: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in discussions within the Council of the Western European Union over the United Kingdom's obligations under article VI of protocol No. II to the modified Brussels treaty of 1954; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In accordance with the procedure set out in article VI of protocol II of the modified Brussels treaty, on 11 July 1991 the Permanent Council of Western European Union considered the changes in the levels of United Kingdom forces stationed in Germany proposed in "Options for Change". In the light of the views of the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe, and the decisions of the NATO Defence Planning Committee, the council noted the planned reductions.

PRIME MINISTER

UN Security Council

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to his oral reply to the hon. Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham), Official Report, 14 January 1992, column 807, he will set out the policies he plans to propose to the special summit of the permanent members of the Security Council of the United Nations on (a) improving good government, (b) improving human rights and (c) disarmament and non-proliferation; and whether he has consulted any non-governmental organisations or specialist independent institutions to help develop such proposals.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 January 1992]: I shall make clear at the meeting of the Security Council on 31 January the importance that the Government attach to good government, human rights, arms control and non-proliferation in the maintenance of international peace and security. Our policies on these matters are well known and benefit from our valuable dialogue with a range of non-governmental organisations.

World Commission on Environment and Development

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer on 15 January, Official Report, column 579, if he will set out (a) the amount of financial support and (b) the types of other support, Her Majesty's Government plans to give organisers of the reconvention of the World Commission on Environment and Development in London in April.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 January 1992]: The Department of the Environment is contributing £30,000 to the costs of the London meeting of the World Commission on Environment and Development in April. In addition the Government will be hosting engagements for the commissioners.

UN Environment and Development Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 15 January, Official Report, column 579, if he will give the names of the organisations to which reports of the preparatory committee meetings of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development have been distributed and the cost of this distribution to date.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 January 1992]: The United Kingdom for United Nations Environment Programme has circulated reports on UNCED preparatory committee meetings to nearly 2000 organisations, under its contract with the Department of the Environment to keep the non-governmental community informed on preparations for UNCED.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Bolivia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the previous land use of areas now planted with soya beans under the World bank's lowlands programme in Bolivia.

Mrs. Chalker: Up to 20 or 25 years ago the land was largely unsettled and forested. The agricultural uses to which the land was put after settlement and clearance were based on short-term returns, with little consideration for sustainability of the environment. Decline in fertility and weed growth encouraged further expansion of the cleared area.

The eastern lowlands project is intended to support agricultural production, including soya beans, by technologies which are both economically attractive and environmentally sound. The intention is to reduce the pressure for further clearance of forest areas.

Humanitarian Aid

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make additional donations to the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organisation for the United Nations inter-agency humanitarian programme for Kuwait, Iraq and the Iraq-Iran-Turkey Kurdish area.

Mrs. Chalker [holding answer 24 January 1992]: Yes. I have called for an early high-level meeting of donors, with the United Nations, to ensure that international humanitarian aid to the Gulf continues to be effectively co-ordinated.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Secondary Teachers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he received a copy of the Assistant Masters and Mistresses Association report, "The Workload of Secondary Teachers", a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend is grateful to the Assistant Masters and Mistresses Association for sending him a copy of this report. It points clearly to the need for schools to look carefully at the way they use their teachers' time, and at the optimum balance of teaching and non-teaching duties for individual members of staff.

School Transport

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 20 January to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East, Official Report, columns 36-37, what information is available to enable accurate comparisons of expenditure rates on school transport by local education authorities.

Mr. Fallon: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) on 13 December, Official Report, column 559. It set out each local education authority's expenditure on home to school transport in 1989-90 expressed as a percentage of its total net recurrent expenditure on education. No other information is available centrally.

Premature Babies

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what funds the Government presently make available for research into vitamin B12 deficiency among premature babies;

(2) if he will list those hospitals and research establishments presently carrying out research into vitamin B12 deficiency among premature babies.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The main government agency for supporting medical research in the United Kingdom is the Medical Research Council (MRC) which receives its grant-in-aid from this Department. That grant totals £202 million in the current financial year. The MRC is an independent body, and normally decides its research priorities on its own expert judgment. The MRC Dunn nutrition unit, one of the world's leading institutes of nutritional research, while not doing any specific work on vitamin B12 deficiency in premature babies, does have research projects on the early response to diet in premature infants and on the impact of early nutrition on long term outcome. The MRC is always ready to consider, in competition with other applications, soundly based research proposals in this field.

Information is not collected centrally on relevant publicly funded research which may be undertaken by university departments, the health authorities and the health departments, nor on research undertaken by the medical research charities whose role we of course welcome.

School Toilets

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to update the 1977 survey conducted by his Department and the Welsh Office giving information on the number of schools with outside toilets.

Mr. Fallon: We have no plans to do so and neither has my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Physical Education

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to publish a draft order setting out the requirements for physical education in the national curriculum.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have today, along with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, published the draft order for physical education in the national curriculum. Copies have been sent to a wide range of interested individuals and organisations for submission of comments by 4 March at the latest.

Football

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent contact he has had with the Football Association to discuss the financing and other matters affecting the future of football.

Mr. Atkins: I wrote to the chief executive of the Football Association on 12 December requesting clarification of the funds likely to be generated by FA driven initiatives following the establishment of the Premier League and its split between the Premier League and Football League clubs for the purposes of implementing the Taylor report. I also raised with the FA a number of other issues which have implications for the running of the Premier League.

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met representatives of the Football League, the Professional Footballers Association and the Premier League; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Atkins: I met the chief executive of the Football League on 5 December and the chief executive of the Professional Footballers Association on 31 October and at the Pools Promoters Association lunch on 3 December. So far as the Premier League is concerned, I met Mr. Rick Parry on 11 December and Sir John Quinton on 18 December. The Premier League and its implications for football were discussed. In the light of these meetings I wrote to the FA on 12 December to seek clarification of a number of issues.

Students

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what recent representations he has received concerning students' financial circumstances; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will obtain copies of the citizens advice bureaux report and the Edinburgh Students Association report, concerning the financial circumstances of students, for his departmental library.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations, including copies of the reports "Diminishing Options" and "Income Survey June '91" by the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and the Edinburgh University Students Association respectively.

We have substantially increased support for students through the mandatory grant and student loan, and we have introduced the access funds for institutions to use at their discretion to help students who may face particular difficulties. My Department has given written evidence to the inquiry currently being undertaken by the Education, Science and Arts Committee and I will give oral evidence on 29 January 1992.

Stratford School, Newham

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent interventions or involvement his Department has made or had at Stratford school in Newham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has been in correspondence with the school on a number of matters recently, including the purported suspension of the head teacher in early January. On 10 January, the governing body was informed that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State was exercising his power to appoint two additional governors to the school with effect from 27 January. He has now appointed Mrs. Daphne Gould and Mr. Eric Bolton.

ENERGY

Coal Industry

10. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next plans to meet the chairman of the British Coal Corporation to discuss the future of the coal industry.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Industrial Fuel Prices

14. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy by how much industrial fuel prices rose in real terms (a) between 1974 and 1979 and (b) since 1979.

Mr. Moynihan: Between 1974 and 1979 industrial fuel prices rose by 16 per cent. in real terms. Since 1979 they have fallen by 35 per cent.

Fuel and Lighting

15. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the level of household spending on fuel and light as a percentage of total spending.

Mr. Moynihan: In 1990 household spending on fuel, light and power was 4·5 per cent. of total spending. This was a lower proportion that at any time since records began in 1957.

Non-fossil Fuel

17. Mr. Thurham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had concerning non-fossil fuel generation in the north-west; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I discussed the non-fossil fuel obligation and renewables-based generation of electricity with the chairman of the North Western electricity board in July 1991.

In 1989, a report was published on a study of the prospects for renewable energy in the north-west. This study was jointly funded by NORWEB and my Department, and carried-out by staff from the company and from the energy technology support unit.

A further joint study is now in progress, on implementation and the refining of cost estimates.

British Coal Enterprise Scheme

18. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the number of jobs created by the British Coal Enterprise scheme in each of the past three years.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The number of job opportunities created by British Coal Enterprise in each of the past three years are: 1988-89, 14,593; 1989-90, 14,784; and, 1990-91, 9,268—nearly 40,000 in total.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

19. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the level of carbon dioxide emissions that are saved in the United Kingdom every year by the use of nuclear power.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) earlier today.

Coventry Colliery

20. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action his Department has taken as a result of the meeting between the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East and the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory), on the circumstances of the closure of Coventry colliery.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Following this meeting, I conveyed the concerns of the hon. Member for Conventry South-East, and his deputation, to British Coal Enterprise. I encouraged it to continue its excellent retraining and job shop projects for those affected by the rundown of operations at Coventry colliery.

Nuclear Electric

21. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the level of output achieved by Nuclear Electric in 1990-91.

Mr. Wakeham: In 1990-91 Nuclear Electric achieved a record output of just over 45 TWh from its portfolio of stations.

23. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what change there has been in the past year in the output of Nuclear Electric in its costs and in its operating profits.

Mr. Wakeham: The year 1990-91 saw record output of just over 45 TWh from Nuclear Electric's stations compared to 42·5 TWh the previous year. Operating profit before exceptional items rose from £227 million in 1989-90 to £326 million in 1990-91. Operating costs per unit sold in real terms fell from 4·7 in 1989-90 to 4 in 1990-91.

Energy-intensity Ratio

22. Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much the United Kingdom's energy-intensity ratio has changed since 1983; and what is the corresponding figure for the rest of the EC and with Japan.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) earlier today.

Energy Industry Employees

24. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the number of people directly employed in the United Kingdom in (a) the nuclear industry, (b) the opencast coal sector and (c) the offshore oil and gas industry.

Mr. Wakeham: Latest available estimates of numbers of people directly employed are: some 40,000 in the United Kingdom's nuclear energy industry as at 31 March 1991; some 8,500 in the United Kingdom's opencast coal sector in 1991; and some 36,500 in the offshore oil and gas industry in 1990.

Scottish Coal Industry

25. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet representatives of the Scottish NUM to discuss the future of the Scottish coal industry.

Mr. Wakeham: I have no immediate plans to meet representatives of the Scottish NUM to discus the future of the Scottish coal industry.

Sizewell B

26. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the level of investment to date in the sizewell B nuclear power station.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: By September 1991, when my Department received the most recent six-monthly progress report from Nuclear Electric, £1,614·2 million had been committed in respect of the Sizewell B project of which £1,224·3 million had been spent, in April 1987 prices. I am delighted to say that the project remains well ahead of time and within budget.

Offshore Industry

27. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with this ministerial colleagues representing the other member states of the European Community relating to matters of regulation of offshore extractive industries.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend meets his ministerial colleagues from other EC member states regularly to discuss a wide range of energy issues.

Mersey Barrage Company

28. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he plans to hold discussions with the Mersey Barrage Company about the future prospects for the development of renewable energy as a result of its proposals.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend and I expect to meet the Mersey Barrage Company during the curent studies.

Gas Prices

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the cost of gas to the average domestic household in the United Kingdom in 1987 at current prices; what it is now; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: In 1987 the annual cost of gas to an average household was £268. The cost now is £327, which represents a decrease in real terms of 8 per cent.

Opencast Mines

Mr. Jack Thompson To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list the opencast coal sites currently awaiting planning permission in the county of Northumberland;

(2) if he will list the opencast coal sites currently in operation in Northumberland; and if he will give their projected completion dates.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Such records are not held centrally. The local mineral planning authority should be able to provide this information.

Meter Reading

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy on how many occasions the gas and electricity distribution companies have used their statutory right of entry to premises to read meters in the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This is a matter for the companies concerned.

Miners' Redundancy Payments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many miners received redundancy payments under the restructuring fund in 1990-91; how many received redundancy payments of between £0 and £10,000, £10,000 and £15,000, £15,000 and £20,000, £20,000 and £25,000, £25,000 and £30,000, £30,000 and £35,000 and in excess of £35,000; and what are the equivalent figures for the first three quarters of 1991-92.

Mr. Wakeham: Detailed information concerning mineworkers accepting redundancy is a matter for the British Coal Corporation. In 1990-91 total restructuring grant paid by my Department to the corporation was £225·9 million. This included payments in respect of redundancies. The equivalent figure for the first three quarters of 1991-92 was £183·6 million.

Home Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all regions where funding under the home energy efficiency scheme for work carried out by (a) contractors and (b) network installers has become exhausted, giving for each region the date of exhaustion.

Mr. Wakeham: The home energy efficiency scheme is a national scheme and funding is not allocated on a regional basis.

Network installers are given indications of the funding available to them at the start of the financial year and quarterly allocations thereafter.

The phasing of work within a quarter is a matter for each network installer. On average, network installers are not fully utilising their allocations. To help those individual network installers who are doing so and appear resource constrained, the Energy Action Grants Agency will shortly be redistributing available money by means of a suppplementary allocation.

Funding for direct applications where work would be done by contractors or on a DIY basis was fully allocated in September. However, there is no question of funding for the scheme as a whole being exhausted.

Chapelcross

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the current level of Wigner energy in the four reactor vessels at Chapelcross; what is the maximum recommended level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 22 January 1992]: This is an operational matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc as licensed operators of the Chapelcross site. The situation there is of course routinely monitored and regularly reviewed by BNF, and also by the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether any area of the Chapelcross Magnox reactor's pressure vessels operate in an embrittled state during normal operation, start up or closing down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 22 January 1992]: I understand that the design of the steel reactor pressure vessels at British Nuclear Fuels plc's Magnox nuclear power station at Chapelcross is such that they have not been irradiated to the same extent as reactor pressure vessels at other Magnox stations. The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate (NII) approves the rules governing the operating conditions of all Magnox reactor pressure vessels, including those at Chapelcross, and ensures that there are adequate safety margins during all phases of operation. Nevertheless, the NII has asked BNFL to review their safety case for the continued operation of Chapelcross power station. This safety case is currently under consideration by the NII.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Coopers and Lybrand

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the projects, the purposes, and the cost of his Department's use of the Coopers and Lybrand group since 1989.

Mr. Maples: My department has made the following use of the Coopers and Lybrand group:

1989-90

Rental of a manual on synthetic Work Measurement data. There were also three secondments: one to CCTA Systems Consultancy Service Branch, to provide advice on computer systems to CCTA customers; another to give advice to departments on preparing policy evaluation plans; and a full time secondee to HM Treasury as part of the ongoing programme of inward and outward secondments.

1990-91
Rental of a manual on synthetic Work Measurement data.
Pursuit project: the preparation of a commodity and supplier coding strategy.
There were also 4 secondments: one to CCTA Systems Consultancy Service Branch to provide advice on computer systems to CCTA customers; another to give advice to departments on preparing policy evaluation plans; and two full time secondees to HM Treasury as part of the ongoing programme of inward and outward secondments.
1991-92
Preparation of Guidance on Contract Strategy and selection for Works Projects; and Project Evaluation and Audits.
There were also three secondments: one to CCTA Systems Consultancy Service Branch to provide advice on computer systems to CCTA customers; and two full time secondees to HM Treasury as part of the ongoing programme of inward and outward secondments.
The total value to date of the consultancies listed amount to £678,536. The cost of the individual contracts is subject to commercial confidentiality.

Share Ownership

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 127, what percentage of the adult population of Great Britain, who also own other shares, own shares in (a) privatisation issues, (b) Abbey National and (c) Trustee Savings Bank taking these three categories (i) singly and (ii) in combination.

Mr. Maude: The 1991 Treasury-stock exchange survey showed that, of the adult population in Great Britain who also owned other shares: 9 per cent. owned privatisation issues; 4 per cent. owned Abbey National shares; and 2 per cent. owned Trustee Savings Bank shares. Figures for combinations of holding in privatisation issues, Abbey National shares, and Trustee Savings Bank shares, by adults owning other shares are not available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fraud

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to require auditors of public limited companies to report material fraud discovered by them to his Department.

Mr. Redwood: All auditors should apply the guidance in the auditing guideline issued in February 1990 on the auditor's responsibility in relation to fraud, other irregularities and errors. If an auditor does not apply the guidance in any particular case, he must be prepared to explain why he has failed to do so. The guideline makes it clear that where the auditor is aware of matters of concern and does not have confidence that they will be properly dealt with by management, he should, if he considers that disclosure should be made in the public interest, disclose the matters to the appropriate authorities, which may include my Department.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the statutory provisions relating to duties on an auditor to detect and report material fraud.

Mr. Redwood: Case law has established that where auditors suspect significant fraud or other serious misconduct, the public interest in disclosing their suspicions to the appropriate authorities outweighs any obligation of confidence they owe unless they act maliciously. There is, however, no general legal duty to disclose. Legislation passed in 1986-87 applying to the regulated sectors—banks, building societies, insurance and investment businesses—has clearly removed any legal obstacle there was to auditors reporting relevant matters to the regulators. So far as insurance and investment businesses are concerned, the legislation gives the Secretary of State power, if it appears to him that auditors are not subject to satisfactory rules or guidance issued by a professional body specifying when they should notify him of relevant matters, to make rules imposing a duty on auditors to disclose in the circumstances he specifies. The Treasury has broadly similar powers in respect of auditors of banks and building societies as regards provision of information to the Bank of England and the Building Societies Commission. So far we have not thought it necessary to make rules in place of the professional bodies' guidance but we keep the matter under review. In some cases in the public sector the auditor has a statutory responsibility to report certain matters arising from the audit, including significant fraud or other irregularities, to a third party such as a sponsoring department.

Company Directors (Remuneration)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation under which shareholders would be specifically required to fix director remuneration.

Mr. Redwood: Directors' remuneration for executive services involves the negotiation of detailed contracts. The body of shareholders of most public companies cannot easily perform this function which is usually best undertaken by the company's board of directors. In carrying out this function the directors must have regard to their legal duties to the company, the requirements of the Companies Act 1985 and the fact that they will in any case be held to account by the shareholders. Shareholders have a right to inspect director's contracts and to dismiss directors if they do not approve of their action.

Small Companies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has to lighten the annual accounting and auditing burdens on small companies.

Mr. Redwood: I refer to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Faversham (Mr. Moate) on 21 January 1992, Official Report, column 131. The Government remain committed to minimising burdens on business. I shall soon announce a new programme of work under the Government's deregulation initiative.

Corporate Governance

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will launch an independent investigation into corporate governance in Britain.

Mr. Redwood: No. An independent investigation is being carried out by the Cadbury committee on the financial aspects of corporate governance. I welcome the interests of this committee and other bodies in various aspects of corporate governance as this ensures a well-informed and lively public debate.

Company Accounts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to propose legislation under which in their annual accounts companies would be required to show the turnover generated by products and services more than five years old and less than five years old.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Directors' Salaries

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will propose legislation under which employees would have the right to vet directors' salaries.

Mr. Redwood: I see no reason for employees to be given a right to vet directors' salaries.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a table showing the share of British manufactured exports and of British manufactured imports going to and coming from, and the balance of impact on trade with, (a) Germany, (b) the United States of America, and (c) France, for each year since 1970.

Mr. Sainsbury: Figures for before 1975 can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The available information is contained in the tables.

1. The available information, for the years since 1975, is given in the following table. Manufactures are defined as sections 5 to 8 of the Standard International Trade Classification.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will ask the Office of Fair Trading to investigate the tendering for audits in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: I have no plans to do so, but any information on this matter would be welcomed by the Office of Fair Trading.

Disability

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has plans to propose legislation under which in their annual report, public limited companies would be required to state the number of employees who are registered as disabled.

Mr. Redwood: No. However, schedule 7 to the Companies Act 1985 requires companies employing more than an average of 250 people in each week of the financial year to include in the directors' report a statement describing the policy they have applied during the financial year for the employment, training, career development and promotion of disabled persons.

Low Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has plans to propose legislation under which companies in their annual report would be required to publish the number of adult employees earning less than £9,000 per annum.

Mr. Redwood: No. The primary purpose of a company's annual report and accounts is to inform shareholders and creditors about its financial position. It would be unreasonably burdensome to require the inclusion of the information of the type suggested.

Bankers' Fees

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has plans to propose legislation under which fees paid to bankers for mergers and acquisition advice would be specifically disclosed in the notes to the annual accounts.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Company Accounts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has plans to propose legislation under which companies would be required to publish their plans and budgets in the accounts.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Motor Cars

Mr. Tebbit: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the non-tariff barriers which restrain the export within the European Community of motor cars built in the United Kingdom by Japanese-owned companies.

Mr. Leigh: The treaty of Rome guarantees the right of goods manufactured within the Community to circulate freely between member states. The agreement concluded last July between the Community and Japan on trade in cars confirmed that right in respect of cars manufactured by Japanese-owned plants in EC countries. It also committed the Community to agree by the end of 1992 a type-approval regime setting harmonised technical standards for whole vehicle construction, thus removing the potential threat of national standards being used as a non-tariff barrier.

Privatisations

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list for the five years prior to privatisation the loss or profit of Girobank; and if he will list any grants or loans made over the same period.

Mr. Redwood: Girobank was sold by the Post Office to the Alliance and Leicester building society on 2 July 1990. Profit, and loans made to it, in the five years before this were as follows:

£ million

Year to end March	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990
Operating profit	19·4	23·1	23·5	21·6	30·2
Subordinated loan capital from the PO	19·0	19·0	29·0	39·0	39·0

Source: Girobank PLC Report and Accounts 1989-90.

Operating profit is on an historical cost basis before tax and before interest payable on subordinated loan capital.

European Single Market

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what information he has concerning the number of single market measures yet to be implemented by each EC member country; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he has had with his EC counterparts about the possibility of deleting measures which have yet to be implemented from the EC single market programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The most recent European Commission report shows that of the 137 measures in the White Paper programme for completion of the single market which should have been implemented up to 10 December 1991, the following were, by member state, outstanding:

	Number
Denmark	9
France	15
United Kingdom	19
Portugal	23
Greece	25
Spain	28
Germany	31
Netherlands	35
Ireland	35
Belgium	38
Luxembourg	43
Italy	65

Implementation of the single market programme is discussed regularly at meetings of the Internal Market Council. We continue to encourage proper implementation by all member states of measures already agreed, and want agreement on the outstanding White Paper proposals provided that they are genuinely necessary to complete the single market.

Business Advice

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many inquiries his 24-hour notice for businesses advice on the single European market has received from businesses in Stoke-on-Trent, North since its inception.

Mr. Sainsbury: Calls to the single market hotline are not recorded on a geographic basis. I refer the hon. Lady to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 24 January 1992, Official Report, column 401.

Telephone Imports

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the penetration of the United Kingdom retail telephone industry of imports from the far east, and upon their effect on the telephone manufacturing industry in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 20 January 1992]: A full measure of penetration into the United Kingdom retail telephone market of imports from the far east cannot be obtained without disproportionate cost. The most recent figures available from the Central Statistical Office show that telephone handsets worth £74 million were imported from the far east in the first 10 months of 1991.

The United Kingdom has an open telecommunications equipment market. The consumer has benefited considerably from this and can now choose from more than 500 approved items of retail terminal equipment. United Kingdom equipment suppliers themselves take advantage of low costs of manufacture in the far east. Some major suppliers import the more basic handsets to complement their own manufacture of higher value, more sophisticated, telephones and systems while others design in the United Kingdom and source from manufacturing plants abroad.

Indonesia

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the turnover in trade between Britain and Indonesia for each year since 1975.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 24 January 1992]: The information is in the table.

United Kingdom trade with Indonesia

	Exports £ million	Imports £ million
1975	62·2	15·1
1976	80·8	22·5

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the numbers of people now registered as unemployed in the Greater London area who have been out of work for periods of up to three months, six months, nine months, one year, two years, three years or longer.

Mr. Jackson: The latest available information, relating to October 1991, is contained in the table and can also be obtained from the NOMIS database system in the Library.

Claimant unemployment by duration in Greater London October 1991[1]

Duration of unemployment	Number of unemployed
Up to 3 months	114,667
3 to 6 months	71,667
6 to 9 months	55,645
9 to 12 months	32,987
1 to 2 years	54,748
2 to 3 years	14,458
Over 3 years	22,764

[1] Unemployment figures by duration are produced quarterly and are on the unadjusted basis.

Employment Training

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of people who had completed an employment training scheme course during the year ended December 1991; and how many found employment at the end of the course.

Mr. Jackson: In Great Britain in the year to March 1991, the latest date for which information is available, 48 per cent. of leavers had completed their agreed training and 33 per cent. of all leavers were on full-time, part-time or self-employment three months after leaving employment training. Absolute numbers are not available because not all trainees respond to the follow-up questionnaire.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of those people who have completed an employment training scheme course have obtained a work qualification at the end of the course.

Mr. Jackson: In the year to March 1991, the latest period for which information is available, 42 per cent. of employment training trainees completing their agreed training in Great Britain successfully obtained a qualification or a credit towards one.

Environmental Training

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on progress made with the pilot programme established in 1990 by the Training Agency to develop centres of excellence for environmental training; what resources have been committed to this programme; and what plans he has to extend the national environmental training programme.

Mr. Jackson: The centres of excellence were piloted between January 1990 and March 1991 at a cost of £435,000. A review at the end of 1990 concluded that they had a useful potential role working with local training and enterprise councils to promote and develop environmental training and services.

Responsibility for the centres has now passed to TECs, although money is this year available to TECs to test new approaches to environmental training. The Welsh Centre of Excellence, along with a number of other projects, has received funding in this way.

National Training Federation

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many meetings have taken place between his officials and representatives of the National Training Federation since the meeting on 9 September 1991 between the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson), and representatives of the federation accompanied by the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East.

Mr. Jackson: Officials have met representatives of the National Training Federation on five occasions since the meeting on 9 September.

Part-time Workers

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the proportion of male employees in Great Britain who were part-time.

Mr. Jackson: In September 1991, the latest date for which information is available, 9 per cent. of male employees were working part time in Great Britain.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will estimate the percentage of all women part-time workers in Great Britain earning less than (a) £2·50 per hour, (b) £3 per hour, (c) £3·60 per hour, (d) £4 per hour, (e) £4·50 per hour and (f) £5 per hour;

(2) if he will estimate the percentage of part-time non-manual workers in Great Britain earning less than (a) £2·50 per hour, (b) £3 per hour, (c) £3·60 per hour, (d) £4 per hour, (e) £4·50 per hour and (f) £5 per hour;

(3) if he will estimate the percentage of women part-time manual workers in Great Britain earning less than (a) £2·50 per hour, (b) £3 per hour, (c) £3·60 per hour, (d) £4 per hour, (e) £4·50 per hour and (f) £5 per hour.

Mr. Forth: The information available from the 1991 new earnings survey closest to that requested is given in the table.

Training Organisations

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what contacts have been established between the G10 group of TEC chief executives and the National Training Federation.

Mr. Jackson: The group of 10 TEC chairmen and the network of TEC chief executives are establishing contacts with a number of organisations. The nature of these contacts is a matter for them.

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consultations he has had with the chief inspector of the nuclear installations inspectorate concerning the date of completion of consideration of the long-term safety reviews of Sizewell A and Dungeness A nuclear power stations.

Mr. Forth: None. The activities of Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy.

Women Workers

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for part-time women workers (a) average gross weekly earnings, (b) average weekly hours total and overtime and (c) average gross hourly earnings for (i) manual, (ii) non-manual and (iii) all part-time women workers in (1) Great Britain, (2) Scotland and (3) each region in Scotland.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 24 January 1992]: The information available from the 1991 new earnings survey is given in the tables.

WALES

A48, Castleton

Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, Official Report, column 406, on what dates and for how many days the unused carriageway between the two A48 (M) carriageways at Castleton has been used; what was the nature and cost of the larger contract of which the unused carriageway formed part; who decided that the unused carriageway should be provided; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The presently unused length of carriageway at Castleton was in use for 18 days between 26 July 1989 and 12 August 1989 inclusive. It was provided and used as a temporary diversion for the A48M Castleton-St. Mellons carriageway strengthening work which cost £1·8 million. Its construction was approved by the director of highways as an alternative to major traffic disruption.

Baltic States

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will discuss with the chairman of the Welsh development agency the ways in which that agency can help establish trade links between Wales and the three Baltic states.

Mr. David Hunt: Yes.

Farmworkers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the numbers of (a) farmers and (b) farmworkers employed in each county in Wales in June 1991.

Mr. David Hunt: The figures are shown in the table:

Bats

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue a development control policy note for the guidance of local planning authorities in relation to applications in which an issue arises from the presence of bats on an application site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I are in the process of preparing a planning policy guidance note on nature conservation in general. This note, which will be subject to public consultation, will advise local authorities of the provisions of various conservation laws including the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, which affords protection to certain species of bats and other scheduled wild animals.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the (a) chairmen or women, (b) vice-chairmen or women and (c) members of the boards of non-departmental public bodies in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answers of 12 December 1991 and 19 December 1991, which listed the full and part-time public appointments for which I am responsible. In addition, there are a number of bodies where members appoint their chairman and deputy chairman from amongst their own membership. The names of these chairmen and deputy chairmen are listed in the table. A new chairman has been appointed to the Welsh Industrial Development Advisory Board since my previous reply and his name is included in the table. Also it has been noticed that the membership of the Historic Buildings Council was omitted from the original answer, this information is given in the table.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost of the consultancy contract given to Mott, MacDonald of Cambridge in groundwater modelling in connection with the report by Mr. R. F. Stoner of Southampton university on the groundwater consultation exercise on the side-effects of the Cardiff bay barrage, published on 20 January.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department's contract was for Mr. Stoner's advice and report with the university of Southampton, and not Mott, MacDonald.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Coopers and Lybrand

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the projects, the purposes and the cost of his Department's use of the Coopers and Lybrand group since 1989.

Mr. Curry: Since 1989 Coopers and Lybrand has carried out projects to provide advice to the Ministry on the following matters:

Regional Structure Review administration of grant and subsidy schemes.
future organisation of regional administration and the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service (ADAS).

Information Technology
value of video conferencing to the Ministry.
technical assurance for the farm survey system study.

The cost of these projects is a matter of commercial confidentiality.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the total number of individual animals by species in which BSE has been confirmed in each of (a) 1988, (b) 1989, (c) 1990 and (d) 1991.

Mr. Maclean: Bovine spongiform encephalopathy is a disease of cattle. The total number of cases confirmed by date of clinical onset in the requested years is as follows: (a) 3,038 (b) 7,614 (c) 14,332 (d) 19,792 (provisional)

Multi-rig Trawls

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ban twin-prawn rigs.

Mr. Curry: Fisheries departments are at present consulting the United Kingdom fishing industry about a range of proposals to conserve nephrops stocks, including the possibility of banning twin or multi-rig trawls in this fishery.

Copies of the consultation document were placed in the Library on 6 December 1991.

Fish Withdrawals

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what quantities of fish have been withdrawn from sale under arrangements made by his Ministry in the last month.

Mr. Curry: Provisional figures gathered from the ports show that during the month of January, up to and including 23 January, 134 tonnes of fish had been withdrawn from the market under EC Council regulation 3687/91 at ports in England and Wales.

Privatisations

Mr. Page: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give in respect of each privatisation since 1979 (a) the loss or profit of each company in the five years prior to privatisation and (b) any grants or loans made over the same period.

Mr. Curry: The Department has carried out no privatisations over this period.

Labour Statistics

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the numbers of (a) farmers and (b) farm workers employed in each county of England in June 1991.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is given in the table. Data are taken from the June 1991 agricultural census and hence exclude minor holdings not covered by the annual census.

Fruit and Vegetables

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer on 16 December 1991, Official Report, column 77, and the subsequent response from the intervention board, whether the cauliflowers, apples and pears that were withdrawn and ploughed into the ground or used as animal feed were sold by the intervention board and at what price; who is eligible to use these fruit and vegetables; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: This is a matter for the chief executive of the intervention board executive agency who will write to the hon. Member.

Agricultural Land (Planning Applications)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to the answer to the hon. Member for South Shields on 20 January, Official Report, column 23, if he will give the figure for the number of planning applications that were objected to for each year since 1980.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is:

1981	489
1982	251
1983	157
1984	203

Sheep

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why there has been an increase in the length of the claim for sheep premium form SAP1B (Rev G1991) for 1992.

Mr. Curry: The 1992 sheep annual premium scheme claim form has been expanded in order to give effect to new European Community rules concerning the eligibility for premium of members of producer groups, shepherds and producers who lease all or part of their flocks.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the effect on the health of the ewe flock of requiring to replace fallen ewes within the period in order to retain premium payments.

Mr. Curry: It is not possible to access what, if any, effect the replacement rules would have on the health of the ewe flock. However, I would expect the prudent farmer to take all necessary precautions to ensure that only healthy animals are introduced into his flock, irrespective of whether this is during or outwith the sheep annual premium scheme retention periods.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many man hours he expects the average sheep farmer will require to comply with the recording and correspondence requirements of the new system for claiming ewe premium.

Mr. Curry: The time sheep farmers require to complete the recording and correspondence obligations of the sheep annual premium varies considerably, not least according to the number of sheep losses they incur. The obligations —which in a modified form already existed prior to 1992 —should be seen against the background of an expected average premium payment of about £4,500 per producer in 1992.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the benefits to United Kingdom agriculture of the additional requirements in the sheep premium application procedure.

Mr Curry: The new rules for sheep annual premium are designed to improve the effective administration of a scheme which is estimated to be worth some £400 million to United Kingdom producers in 1992.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the effect on the orderly marketing of barren, lambless and milkless ewes of the lapsing of premium unless ewes are held until the end of the period.

Mr. Curry: It has been a requirement of the sheep annual premium scheme since 1984 that eligible animals must be kept throughout one of the two 100-day retention periods in order to benefit from premium. In the United Kingdom these periods have been set so as to minimise any adverse effect on the orderly marketing of sheep.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what control the EC has over the enforcement of the ewe premium arrangements in France, Italy, Greece and Spain; and what steps he intends to take to ensure that they will be enforced.

Mr. Curry: European Community rules on enforcement of the sheep annual premium scheme are administered by the national authorities in each member state. Audit inspections are carried out by European Community auditors in all member states to ensure that they operate the scheme in accordance with the rules and member states face financial penalties should they fail to do so. The United Kingdom takes the lead in the Community in pressing for the effective enforcement of EC schemes and will continue so to do.

SCOTLAND

Ports Policing

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements are made in Scotland for funding police forces for special branch ports policing.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government pay police grant of 51 per cent. on all approved net expenditure for the police including provision for ports policing. Exceptionally 100 per cent. funding is provided to Dumfries and Galloway constabulary for the costs of those officers who are engaged entirely on prevention of terrorism duties at the ports of Stranraer and Cairnryan. This arrangement is in recognition of the exceptional demands which policing of these ports makes on the resources of this small force.

Farm Workers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the numbers of (a) farmers and (b) farm workers employed in each region of Scotland in June 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of farmers, spouses doing farm work and farm workers employed on main agricultural holdings in June 1991, by local authority region, is shown in the table.

Region	Number at June 1991
	Farmers	Spouses doing farm work	Farmworkers
Borders	1,321	561	2,427
Central	783	371	978
Dumfries and Galloway	2,372	1,157	3,784
Fife	759	328	1,687
Grampian	4,737	1,947	4,911
Highland	3,246	1,343	1,957
Lothian	747	301	1,809
Strathclyde	4,232	2,201	5,170
Tayside	2,081	833	3,421
Islands	3,120	1,351	1,169
Scotland	23,398	10,393	27,313

Note: These figures are not comparable with those for previous years due to a change in the basis of the figures in 1991 which had the effect of adding a net 3,400 holdings to the main holdings list. This resulted in an increase in 1991 of some 2,300 occupiers, 800 spouses and 800 farmworkers compared with figures on the previous basis.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the proposals from health boards for local hospital closures which he has confirmed, since 1979, where the application has been accompanied by a generally favourable assessment of the hospital by the Scottish Hospital Advisory Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards are responsible for assessing need, for purchasing services to meet the needs they identify and to set and monitor standards. It is for each board to decide how best to discharge those responsibilities and what factors to take into account in doing so.

Scottish Hospital Advisory Service

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the composition of the Scottish Hospital Advisory Service, indicating in the case of each member their specific medical specialty.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Dr. A. W. Drummond, director, consultant psychiatrist; Mr. Ross Mitchell, administrator; Dr. Desmond Cormack, nurse; and Mr. J. Wood, social work, part time.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those occasions since 1979 when, in advance of seeking approval for the closure of a local hospital, the health board has preceded the application by entering into a commercial contract with the private sector aimed at substituting the NHS care so provided; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally. Arrangements made by health boards prior to submitting an application for closure of an NHS facility are for the boards themselves to determine. But decisions on hospital closures are for Ministers; health boards should not, therefore, enter into permanent arrangements which would pre-empt ministerial decisions.

Relocation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the policy of Scottish Enterprise and local development agencies towards providing assistance to companies which have plants located in England and which they wish to relocate in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 24 January 1992]: Scottish Enterprise and the local enterprise companies would assess very carefully any proposals from companies wishing to relocate to Scotland before considering whether it would be appropriate to offer assistance. Any assistance provided would be within the terms of arrangements agreed by the Government and would take account of factors such as employment displacement.

Hay Premium

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for a hay premium, as outlined in the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds Conservation Review 1991, a copy of which has been sent to him, to conserve the corncrake in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 January 1992]: My right hon. Friend has no plans to propose a hay premium but measures to protect ground nesting birds such as the corncrake are already in place in the Machair of the Uists and Benbecula, Barra and Vatersay environmentally sensitive area. Consideration will be given to the need for similar measures in other relevant areas selected for further designations.

Dogs

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to publish the report of the Scottish working party on dogs; and what action he intends to take on the recommendations made in that report.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 24 Janaury 1992]: My right hon. Friend does not plan to publish the report of the Scottish working group on dogs.

The Government have already tackled a number of the issues raised by the group in the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 and the Breeding of Dogs Act 1991. On 1 April 1992 we intend to introduce regulations under sections 149-151 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to deal with the problems associated with stray dogs and the enforcement of the existing collar and tag requirements. Changes recommended by the group to the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the introduction of dog byelaws are currently under consideration.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Farm Workers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the numbers of (a) farmers and (b) farm workers employed in each county in Northern Ireland in June 1981 and June 1991.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is given in the table. The figures are from the June agricultural censuses for 1981 and 1991 and exclude minor holdings not covered by the census:

	Farmers		Spouses of farmers		All other farmworkers
County	1981	1991	1981	1991	1981	1991
Antrim	7,090	6,463	1,269	1,044	3,731	3,792
Armagh	4,806	4,357	608	531	2,086	2,315
Down	7,428	6,741	1,102	953	4,251	4,091
Fermanagh	4,368	4,052	646	545	1,839	1,549
Londonderry	4,847	4,595	724	563	2,758	2,796
Tyrone	8,340	8,083	1,110	926	3,660	3,816
Northern Ireland	36,879	34,291	5,459	4,562	18,325	18,359

Extradition

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Royal Ulster Constabulary have sought the extradition of Kevin McKenna from the Irish Republic in relation to IRA activity.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is not our practice either to confirm or to deny the existence of particular extradition requests in advance of an arrest and the bringing of the person concerned before a court.

Angelo Fusco

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the representations he has made to the Government of the Republic of Ireland following the release on bail of Angelo Fusco.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are seeking the return of Angelo Fusco to Northern Ireland, from the Republic of Ireland, to serve a life sentence for murder, two life sentences for attempted murder and two determinate sentences for possession of firearms with intent.

We do not comment on Irish judicial decisions; but I can confirm that we have expressed concern to the Irish Government about the implications of bail in the case.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will state, in list form, the length of time each prisoner presently held on remand in Northern Ireland has been in prison.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 23 January 1992]: It would be inappropriate to list individual prisoners on remand in Northern Ireland, however, the following table gives a summary of the numbers of prisoners—male and female—held on remand.

Time on remand	Number of prisoners
Less than 12 months	334
More than 12 months but less than 18 months	35
More than 18 months but less than 2 years	12
2 years and over	11
Total	392

Note: The above figures relate to prisoners serving continuous and uninterrupted periods in custody as at 30 November 1991.

DEFENCE

Services Sports

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the official sports and games given financial support by (i) the Army, (ii) the Royal Navy and (iii) the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following sports are financially supported by one or more of the services:

Association Football
Badminton
Basketball
Boxing
Canoeing
Cricket
Cycling
Equestrian sport/equitation
Fencing
Gliding
Golf
Hockey
Judo
Lawn Tennis
(Modern) Pentathlon
Rowing
Rugby Union Football
Sailing
Squash/Rackets
Table Tennis
(Sports) Parachuting
Athletics/Cross Country/Tug of War
Ski-ing/Bobsleighing
Swimming/Diving/Water Polo
Target Shooting/Rifle Shooting/Small Arms
Gymnastics/Trampoline
Angling
Motor Sports
Mountaineering
Orienteering
Volleyball
Sub acqua
Model Aircraft
Netball
Rounders

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been allocated to individual sports in 1990-91.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Rugby League

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial support has been given to the playing of rugby league with the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. Only officially recognised sports qualify for financial assistance from public funds towards the cost of travel and purchase of sports equipment. There is, at present, insufficient support within the services for the playing of rugby league to warrant its recognition as an official sport.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what supplies to the Mount Pleasant base in the Falkland islands are purchased from south America; and what encouragement has been given to local companies to provide produce and supplies;

(2) what is the total annual value of contracts undertaken at the Mount Pleasant base by civilian contractors; what proportion of these contracts has been offered to local companies for tender; and what is the total annual value of contracts undertaken by local companies;

(3) what is the value of non-recreational spending by the military garrison in the Falkland islands; and what percentage this represents of the Falklands' gross national product;

(4) what is the annual value of supplies to the Mount Pleasant base (a) of Falkland origin and (b) of non-Falkland origin purchased from local companies.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We encourage the use of local suppliers in meeting our requirements where this is cost effective. Local companies are encouraged to tender for contracts.

Excluding the major contracts with PSA International/Turners for works and maintenance, and with Bristows for the provision of support helicopters, the total annual value of civilian contracts for goods and services at the Mount Pleasant complex is currently some £2·4 million. Over three quarters of these contracts are let to local companies, representing some £777,000 of non-recreational spending by the garrison in the Falklands. The Falkland Islands Government do not publish a figure for gross national product, nor are records available showing the origin of the goods supplied by local companies.

No supplies are currently purchased directly by the garrison from south America, although a trial has been conducted to establish whether such arrangements would be feasible and cost effective. The results of the trial are being considered.

Incendiary Devices

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a detailed list on an annual basis since 1962 of the number of incendiary devices that have been detonated by the Royal Navy on the marshes of North Gower; and if he will indicate the likely date when all such devices will have been removed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Records of items cleared from the North Gower marshes are available only for the past two years. In 1990, 99 and in 1991, 130 devices were disposed of. It is not possible to forecast when all such devices will have been removed as the exposure of unexploded ordnance is dependant upon tidal movements.

RAF Greenham Common

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future use of RAF Greenham Common.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Newbury (Sir M. McNair-Wilson) on 21 January, Official Report, column 190.

Disability Compensation

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer on 21 January, Official Report, column 190, if he will list the claims now outstanding under the Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987, showing names and date of accident.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: To list the information requested would breach confidentiality and be in contravention of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Injury Claims

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by amount the interim payments paid, over the last five years, to those injured members of the armed forces whose claims are awaiting precise assessment and agreement as to their final level of disability.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently some 30 cases outstanding on which interim payments have been made. The payments vary between £2,000 and £150,000.

Tactical Air-to-surface Missiles

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when his Department was informed of President Bush's decision to cancel the United States Government's procurement of the SRAM-T missile; and for how long his Department continued to consider the SRAM-T as a possible option for the United Kingdom's tactical air-to-surface missile following President Bush's decision;

(2) pursuant to his answer, 19 December, Official Report, column 284, if he will list the systems that are currently being developed in the United States which are being considered by his Department as a possible replacement for the WE177 bomb.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have nothing to add to the answers I gave the hon. Member on 19 December 1991, Official Report, column 284.

Equipment

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment of how many (a) combat aircraft (b) armoured combat vehicles, (c) artillery pieces and (d) attack helicopters, as presently defined under the conventional forces in Europe treaty counting rules, the United Kingdom will deploy by 1995.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 3 December 1991, Official Report, column 88.

Trident

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much the United Kingdom is paying the United States Government towards the research and development costs of the Trident D5 missile; how much has already been paid; and how much is outstanding.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom has undertaken to pay a fixed, but index-linked, contribution towards the research and development of the Trident II D5 strategic weapon system, including the missile. At current prices, the total contribution will be some $157 million, of which $58 million has been paid.

Woolwich Garrison

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce a decision about the future of the Royal Artillery garrison at Woolwich.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A number of initiatives are being pursued to achieve economies in the support area, including training and logistic units.

As no final decisions have been taken it would be inappropriate to comment on individual locations.

Directorate General of Defence Quality Assurance

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to reach a decision about the future of the Directorate General of Defence Quality Assurance; and how many of the staff currently employed at Woolwich will be offered posts after the reorganisation.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Options for the reorganisation of the Directorate General of Defence Quality Assurance are currently being considered and a decision will be made as soon as possible. The retention of the Royal Arsenal site is not among the options under consideration. The future deployment of staff will depend on the decision.

Queen Elizabeth Hospital, Woolwich

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce a decision about the future of the Queen Elizabeth military hospital, Woolwich, in the light of the reduced demands from service personnel and their dependants.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The review I referred to on 21 November, Official Report, column 301, is not yet complete.

Suicides

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many suicides there have been in the armed forces in the last five years; and if he will list them according to date, the barracks where they took place and the regiment of the person committing suicide.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The number and dates of the suicides which have taken place within the Armed Forces during the five years 1987-1991, and the available information on the ships, regiments, corps or locations where the suicides occurred, are as listed.

British Forces Overseas

Mr. Mates: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation status of forces agreement as it affects British forces in NATO countries are currently under consideration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No changes to the NATO status of forces agreement itself are currently under consideration. The supplementary agreement to the NATO status of forces agreement—which regulates the status of foreign forces stationed in Germany—is currently under review.

Mr. Mates: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in discussions with the Federal Republic of Germany over the future status of British forces in Germany; what amendments to existing agreements have been proposed as a result of these discussions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The German Government and representatives of the six members of the North Atlantic alliance with forces stationed in Germany—United Kingdom, United States of America, Netherlands, France, Belgium and Canada—began in September 1991 a detailed and wide-ranging review of the supplementary agreement to the NATO status of forces agreement, to which they are the signatories. The supplementary agreement regulates the status of foreign forces stationed in Germany. The review of the agreement, which has taken place in a constructive and co-operative spirit, is continuing. It is detailed and covers a wide range of subjects, including manoeuvres and training, accommodation and construction, transport, and criminal, civil, labour and procedural law.

HEALTH

NHS Reforms

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to meet representatives of the national health service support federation to discuss the impact of national health service reforms.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no such plans at present.

Orthopaedic Staff

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff of consultant status were available at Oldchurch hospital, Romford, for the treatment of adult orthopaedic patients in (a) 1979, (b) 1989, and (c) the latest date for which figures are available; what are the respective ratios of orthopaedic consultants to the population in the Barking, Havering and Brentwood health district; what is the currently recommended national standard for such appointments; and what is the target set for 2005.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally. It is for individual health authorities to decide on the relevant number of consultant posts in each specialty in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Arachnoiditis

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he proposes to extend free prescriptions to sufferers from arachnoiditis.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to extend the range of conditions which currently attract free prescriptions on medical grounds. There are already wide-ranging exemption arrangements, underpinned by the separate scheme for remission on the ground of low income, which ensure that no one need be deterred from obtaining any necessary medication on financial grounds. Nearly 80 per cent of NHS prescription items are currently dispensed free of charge.

Incontinence

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given to general practitioners on the quantities of incontinence pads to be issued on prescription.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Incontinence pads are provided by the hospital and community health services free of charge to NHS patients. They may not be prescribed by general practitioners.

Patients (Confidential Information)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department takes in conjunction with health authorities and regions and others to guard against the unauthorised release to the press and media of confidential information about day or in-patients attending mental hospitals or treatment centres.

Mr. Dorrell: Guidance was issued to the NHS in 1956 which still applies, commending a routine procedure for answering press inquiries about the condition of individual patients. All persons within the NHS involved in the handling of personal health information owe a legal duty of confidence and fidelity both to patients and to the NHS. In the event of unauthorised disclosure it will be open to the relevant NHS authority to take appropriate disciplinary action against the employee concerned.

Myodil

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reasons prompted the ban on Myodil prior to 1987.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Myodil was withdrawn from the United Kingdom market in 1987 by the manufacturers for commercial reasons.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice has been issued to health authorities and the medical profession on side effects caused by the use of Myodil;

(2) under what conditions and circumstances the use of Mydol was approved for spinal X-ray procedures.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 13 December 1990, Official Report, at columns 466-69.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the level of use of Myodil in the health service in (a) England and (b) the Mersey region.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally. Myodil has not been available commercially since 1987.

General Practitioners (Computers)

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to make provision for a carry-forward of claims made by general practitioners' reimbursement for the cost of computers which the Government have not covered in the current financial year.

Mr. Dorrell: Such a provision already exists within paragraph 58.3 of the general medical services statement of fees and allowances (SFA). A copy of the SFA is available in the Library.

Vitamin B12

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of the research unit into vitamin B12 at Westminster children's hospital, London.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The head of the vitamin B12 research unit at Westminster children's hospital has been invited to meet officials to discuss the research unit's current situation.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those hospitals presently able to carry out diagnostic tests on premature babies for vitamin B12 deficiency.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 143, to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, if he will list the non-executive directors appointed to the national health service trusts in the west midlands.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are 47 non-executive directors appointed to the national health service trusts in the west midlands, in the first and second wave of trusts. Their names are

First Community Health NHS Trust
- David Sandy
- Susan Massey
- Michael Heenan
- Kenneth Jackson

Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he received a copy of the Counsel and Care report on the use of restraint in care homes; and what response he has made.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A copy of the Counsel and Care's discussion document was received in the Department on 15 January.

Children's Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he estimates that all officials in charge of children's homes will be qualified.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The target date for all officers in charge of local authority maintained and controlled residential homes for children to be qualified to CQSW/CSS/DipSW standard is 1995-96. The special training initiative being introduced from 1992-93 as part of the Department's training support programme will provide significant help to local authorities in achieving this aim. It will also be necessary for local authorities to have regard to appropriate management and personnel policies, paying particular attention to recruitment and retention issues.

Hospitals (Disclosure of Information)

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons employees of the Special Hospital Service are asked to sign a form on disclosure of information, promising they will not divulge any information about the business of the hospital.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is a matter for the Special Hospitals Service Authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Dr. David Edmond, the chairman of the authority, for details.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what written undertakings concerning the Official Secrets Act 1989 are required from employees of the Special Hospital Service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which hospitals, other than those in the Special Hospital Service, nurses are required to sign a form headed "disclosure of information".

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Any such requirement would be a matter for the appropriate health authority.

Senile Dementia

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the degree to which the City and Hackney health authority's practices for discharging patients suffering from senile dementia to private care homes is consistent with his Department's guidelines on such procedures.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have asked the NHS management executive to investigate this matter urgently. In the light of its inquiries an assessment will be made of the extent to which current arrangements are satisfactory. We have asked the chief executive to ensure that, any necessary, and appropriate remedial action is taken.

Child Health

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each district health authority and for each of the last five years, the number of health visitors per 1,000 children.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 20 January 1992]: The table gives the information requested for 1986 and 1990 only. Figures for all the years requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

District health authorities have regard to skill mix, recruitment and training when planning their manpower levels. This is kept under review.

Notes:
1. Ratios calculated using:
   (a) Midyear population estimates
   (b) Health Visitor statistics at 30 September each year
2. Source of figures:
   (a) Population figures from SM14D (obtained from OPCS)
   (b) Health Visitors from annual non-medical manpower census (SM13B)
3. Health Visitors figures relate to whole-time equivalents
4. Certain Districts within N W Thames have been reorganised and figures for these Districts are not available on a comparable basis
5. Health Visitors are defined by Occupation Code, not by Payscale, and the former is known to be less accurate than the latter. Apparent changes in the ratio can be due to changes in coding accuracy by Health Authorities rather than actual changes in numbers of Health Visitors. This factor is believed to explain apparent changes within South East Thames.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities have appointed consultant community paediatricians; and if he will list those that have and those which have not.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 20 January 1992]: This information is not collected centrally. The British Paediatric Association undertook a census of medical staff in child health in 1990 which showed that, among the districts which responded, 100 had by then appointed one or more consultant paediatricians community child health (CPCCH).

Paediatrics

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to require those district health authorities which have not appointed consultant community paediatricians to do so.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 20 January 1992]: There has been steady growth in the number of consultant paediatricians community child health (CPCCHs) since the establishment of these posts was recommended in the Court report in 1976. The census undertaken by the British Paediatric Association in 1990 showed there were 139 CPCCHs in post in England.

Individual consultant appointments are a matter for health authorities and NHS trusts to decide in the light of local needs consistent with policies agreed between health departments and the profession for the general development of the medical staff career structure.

A joint working party comprising representatives of the British Medical Association, the Conference of Royal Colleges and health departments is considering the unification of the career structures for medical staff in hospital and community child health. In an interim report about to be published, the joint working party will be defining the medical staffing needs of an integrated child health service and endorsing the key role that the CPCCH has in the leadership of the community element of this service.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Tax and National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons in Wales and what proportion of the population would be affected, and to what extent, if the combined burden of tax and national insurance contributions were to be increased by 19 per cent.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I regret the information requested is not available separately for Wales.

Sick and Disabled People

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been spent on benefits for sick and disabled people for the last three years (a) in total and (b) by benefit; and what is the intended expenditure for the next two years (i) in total and (ii) by benefit.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table.

[2] Figure relates to outstanding payments of Mobility Allowance, due prior to April 1992.
[3] From April 1992 Disability Living Allowance will replace Mobility Allowance, and for those disabled before 65, Attendance Allowance.
[4] Includes rates rebates for 1988-89 and 1989-90, community charge rebate for 1989-90 and community charge benefit for the years 1990-91 onwards.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the figures (a) by region and (b) nationally for each year from 1987 onwards of the number of people applying for (i) mobility allowances and (ii) attendance allowances; and the actual numbers granted in each case.

Mr. Scott: Regional figures are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Available national figures are given in the table:

1991	408	348	231	109

[1] Claims received in any year are not necessarily processed in that same year. Figures for renewals are not included.

Social Fund

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications to the social fund from applicants in London SE1 and London SE16 were (a) made and (b) successful between 1 July 1991 and 31 December 1991.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Pensions

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will reconsider the rules governing the distribution of pension surpluses in order to protect the rights of employees; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Measures to protect the members of occupational pension schemes were included in the Social Security Act 1990. One of these came into effect from 17 August 1990 and prevents payments being made from a pension scheme to the employer unless members are guaranteed annual increases in their pensions in line with prices, up to 5 per cent. A further measure will, when implemented, require final salary pension schemes to pay indexed pension increases up to a maximum of 5 per cent. a year. This limited price indexation provision will apply to all such schemes in respect of future service, and in respect of past service to schemes with a surplus.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the total amount of pension surpluses held by companies with pension funds.

Miss Widdecombe: It is not possible to assess the total amount of surpluses on a common basis at any given date as schemes produce valuations at different times and on different methods and assumptions.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much was spent on statutory sick pay in each of the last three years; and how much is forecast to be spent for the current year, and for 1992-93, in real terms.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is

[1]£ million at 1991-92 prices

Year	[2]Statutory Sick Pay
1988-89	1,110
1989-90	1,102
1990-91	993
1991-92	728
1992-93	725

[1]Revalued by the GDP deflator.
[2]Figures represent reimbursements to employers, which reduced from 100 per cent. to 80 per cent. from April 1991.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the policy of the Child Support Agency on demanding maintenance payments from former husbands regardless of whether a former wife has asked for such payments or whether a court has imposed a maintenance order, in cases where the former wife is claiming income support.

Mr. Jack: From April 1993 the Child Support Agency will take over from the courts the main responsibility for obtaining maintenance for children. It will provide a service for use by all families for whom child maintenance is an issue whether they are on benefit or not. Where the parent with care of a child claims income support, family credit or disability living allowance, provisions in the Child Support Act 1991 mean that she will be expected to authorise the Child Support Agency to take maintenance action for her child. The agency will not act without such authorisation. Experience shows that most parents wish to co-operate in arranging financial support for the benefit of their children. It is very much in the child's interest that both parents should do what they can to support their child.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in respect of cold weather payments (a) on how many occasions payments have been made in advance of predicted cold weather, (b) how much has been paid, (c) in which areas payments have been made and (d) what information he has received on the likely rate of error in predictions of cold weather sufficient to trigger payments.

Mr. Scott: Cold weather periods have been forecast at 23 weather stations so far this winter. To date, a total of £8,548,026 has been paid out on cold weather payments, for all types of trigger, and further payments will be sent out this week. For details of stations which triggered up to 14 December I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 20 December at columns 373-4. The use of forecasts is one of several improvements made in 1991 to the cold weather payments scheme. Forecasting can never be 100 per cent. accurate, but the retrospective trigger mechanism remains in place to pick up any cold spells which actually occur but were not forecast. The new elements of the scheme are being kept under review in order to ensure the best possible advice is provided by the Meteorological Office. The weather stations and postcode districts affected by the forecast triggers which have occurred since 14 December are:

Eskdalemuir

Water Rates

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what element of the income support calculation relates to water rates; and how this is determined.

Miss Widdecombe: There is no separate element for water rates in income support payments. Water is one of many items of expenditure which vary. The general movement of prices is reflected in the uprating index applied to income support, and the other income-related benefits.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recently announced that the uprating index used for the income-related benefits has been modified to include water rates, certain miscellaneous housing costs and, 1992-93 benefit only, 20 per cent. of the community charge to which claimants will be liable, until the end of March 1993.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 28 January 1992.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

County Courts

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the efficiency of the county court system.

The Attorney-General: Most areas of county court work are subject to targets which are regularly monitored. The Government are seeking to continue to streamline the work of the county courts through a programme of procedural improvements and the introduction of computer technology.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General how much has been spent on legal aid fees in cases before the county court since 1980.

The Attorney-General: Between April 1980 and March 1991, £1·038 billion of gross payments were made in respect of legal aid work carried out in county court cases. Information of expenditure in each financial year is contained in the legal aid annual reports which are laid before Parliament each year and are available in the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Community Charge

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes in the law he proposes to introduce to facilitate the consideration by magistrates courts of applications for liability orders in community charge proceedings.

Mr. Heseltine: I have been asked to reply.

We intend to bring forward at the earliest opportunity amendments to the Local Government Finance Bill, currently in another place, making provisions which will put beyond any doubt that authorities may present computer evidence in support of applications for liability orders in magistrates courts. These will cover enforcement of the community charge, the non-domestic rate and, in future, the council tax. We are determined that authorities should be given every assistance in recovering tax and charges from those who fail to pay their dues.

Fire Regulations

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had about the inhibition of social functions in village halls by the administration of fire regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: None. No fire regulations apply specifically to village halls, but public music and dancing and similar entertainments cannot be provided except in accordance with the terms of a licence granted by the district council under the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982 or in Greater London by the London borough council under the London Government Act 1963. The purpose of this licensing system is to ensure, among other things, that places used for entertainment—and this includes village halls—have adequate safety standards.

The fire authority's role is to advise the licensing authority on the requirements that it considers necessary for the premises, in relation to the event in question.

Guidance on fire safety matters in smaller premises, including village halls, is included within the Home Department's publication "Guide to Fire Precautions in Existing Places of Entertainment and Like Premises". Chapter 12, which includes a section on village halls, was drawn up in consultation with the Village Halls Forum, a group formed from representatives from village hall committees and organisations concerned with village halls.

Visitors' Permits

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria used to determine the lengths of stay permitted to temporary visitors from the Indian sub-continent.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The criteria are the same as for any other visitor and are set out in paragraphs 22 to 25 and 104 to 106 of the "Statement of Changes in Immigration Rules"—HC 251, as amended by HC 670—a copy of which is in the Library.

Genetic Fingerprinting

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in the use of genetic fingerprinting for crime detection; what facilities are at present available; and when this technique will be available for the use of all police forces.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This has been passed to the Director General of the Forensic Science Service who will be replying shortly. A copy of her reply will be placed in the Library.

Control and Restraint

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each prison establishment, on how many occasions three-officer teams have been deployed under control and restraint 1 in the most recent period for which figures are available.

Mrs. Rumbold: Control and restraint 1 techniques enable prison officers to deal effectively with limited incidents of violence, which require the restraint of individual prisoners either by individual officers or by three-officer teams with the minimum risk of injury to prisoners or staff.

Information is not collected in the form requested.

George Blake

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek the return of escaped convict George Blake to this country; and if he will make a statement on his policy relating to escaped convicts who could be repatriated to continue their sentence.

Mr. John Patten: It is our policy to seek the extradition of fugitives from countries with which we have extradition arrangements. However, as there is no extradition treaty between the United Kingdom and the Russian federation, we are not in a position to set extradition proceedings in motion. Were there to be an extradition treaty, it would be for the authorities in the other state to determine whether any particular case would fall within the scope of the treaty.

Pornographic Disks

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what measures his Department intends to take against retailers and libraries to require them to treat pornographic disks as adult publications only;

(2) what measures his Department intends to take to draw parents', publishers', retailers', and librarians' attention to the problem of access to pornographic disks for children;

(3) what measures his Department is to take against the existing open access of children to pornographic computer disks;

(4) if he will introduce legislation to make it illegal for people knowingly (a) to publish an advertisement for computer disks which contain illegal pornography and (b) sell magazines which contain advertisements for illegal pornography on computer disks.

Mr. John Patten: The Government entirely share my hon. Friend's concern about the use of computer technology to store and transmit pornographic material. The criminal law relating to obscenity already applies to such material and there are also legal safeguards against offensive material being sent over public telecommunications systems.

I am advised that the practical issue is therefore not primarily one of inadequate legislation, but of enforcement and obtaining evidence sufficient to bring proceedings. Both the Metropolitan police obscene publications branch and other police forces are very aware of this problem and are monitoring the situation closely.

The Government also recognise the well-founded concern about the exposure of children to objectionable material, whatever its form. However this is also a question of parental responsibility and we encourage suppliers and parents to be particularly conscientious in satisfying themselves that children are not obtaining material which is obviously unsuitable.

As far as those who offer to supply obscene material in magazines or elsewhere are concerned, their actions are already prohibited under the Obscene Publications Act. Although I cannot give an authoritative interpretation on a point of law, it is possible that a publisher who knowingly assisted in this by accepting an advertisement could be held to be guilty of aiding and abetting the offence.

Television (Violence)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the steps currently undertaken by his Department to monitor the level of incidence of violent conduct shown on television.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the Broadcasting Act 1990, it is for the broadcasting regulatory authorities—the BBC board of governors, the Independent Television Commission and S4C—to monitor the compliance of television programmes with the statutory requirements and codes of guidance which have been issued to broadcasters about violence on television. In addition the Broadcasting Standards Council has been established to reinforce and monitor programme standards in relation to violence, among other things.

Leicestershire Police

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about police manpower in Leicestershire.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Leicestershire constabulary had 1,823 police officers and 683 civilian staff at the end of October 1991, which is an increase in actual strength of 443—122 police officers and 321 civilians—since May 1979. The authorised establishment of the force is 1,827, an increase of 121 posts since 1979. My right hon. Friend announced on 28 November a futher increase of 26 police posts with effect from 1 April 1992.

Immigration and Nationality Registry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current backlog at the registry in the immigration and nationality department; and what are the current numbers of outstanding applications in each division.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At the beginning of January the backlog in the immigration and nationality department registry was 29,842 and the number of outstanding applications in the caseworking divisions was as follows:

	Number
General immigration casework	21,208
Asylum and related casework	68,500
Nationality	51,723

Mr. Younus Patel

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of the detention of Mr. Younus Patel of 55 Park Vale road, Leicester, in Welford Road prison, Leicester.

Mrs. Rumbold: Individual costs of detention are not kept separately. The daily average cost of keeping a prisoner in Leicester prison in 1990-91, the latest period for which figures are available, was £65·14. On this basis the cost of Mr. Patel's detention would be £13,810.

Extradition

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if Parliament will be required to approve the terms of any extradition treaty concluded between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of India;

(2) under the extradition treaty now being negotiated by Her Majesty's Government and India, what safeguards will be included to provide proper and effective safeguards for individuals to appeal against extradition applications by India;

(3) if he will stop negotiations with the Government of India on an extradition treaty in view of widespread concern, about the extent of human rights violations in India; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Extradition arrangements already apply to India under the Commonwealth extradition scheme. When I was in India earlier this month, I agreed with the Indian Government that our respective officials should meet to discuss the possibility of concluding a formal treaty. Indian officials will be visiting the United Kingdom in February. Any extradition arrangements, whether by treaty or under the Commonwealth scheme, have to comply with the safeguards including rights of appeal provided in the Extradition Act 1989, and with provisions in that Act as regards bringing new arrangements into force.

Extradition

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information the British authorities require from foreign countries seeking extradition of a British national.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 27 January 1992]: For extradition under the terms of the European convention on extradition, the request must satisfy the provisions of section 7(2) of the Extradition Act 1989.

Requests from other foreign countries with which we have bilateral treaties are subject to the requirements of paragraphs 7(1) and (2) of schedule 1 to the Act. In all cases the nationality of the fugitive is irrelevant.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the occasions during the last 10 years when a British national has been extradited from the United Kingdom to a foreign country with which Britain has no extradition treaty.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 27 January 1992]: No person of any nationality has been so extradited.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on requests for the extradition of British nationals from the United Kingdom to countries with which Britain has no extradition agreement, where international law grants the British authorities jurisdiction.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 27 January 1992]: If such a request were received, the question whether the interests of justice would best be served by extradition or domestic prosecution would be decided in the light of all relevant circumstances.

Firearms

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total number of recorded crimes involving the use of firearms in each of the past 10 years in (a) the Greater Manchester police authority area, and (b) England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: Statistics of the number of notifiable offences recorded by the police in which firearms were reported to have been used are published by police force area in table S3.1(A) of "Criminal Statistics England and Wales, Supplementary tables". The most recent issue, for 1989, gives figures for each year between 1979 and 1989. A copy of this publication is held in the Library.

Police Batons

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers to discuss the use of the American side-handled baton; and if he will evaluate the effectiveness of this baton.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. The procurement of equipment is the responsibility of chief officers. We have offered to arrange for a scientific evaluation of the side-handled baton if chief officers request it.

Immigration

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Filipino and Thai women who have married British citizens are at present waiting for the necessary visas to join their husbands; and what is the average length of time they have to wait before receiving the visa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply.

A total of 27 Filipino and 98 Thai women married to British citizens are waiting for the necessary visas to join their husbands. The current waiting time for interview is nine weeks in Manila and eight weeks in Bangkok. Successful applicants normally receive their visas on the day of interview.

ENVIRONMENT

Polluters (Prosecutions)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions have been brought by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on polluting companies since the passage of the Environmental Protection Act 1990; and what individual fines were levied in each year.

Mr. Trippier: The Environmental Protection Act 1990 received Royal Assent on 1 November 1990. Since then, six prosecutions have been concluded by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, all successfully. The fines were as follows:

£300 with	£700 costs
£300 with	£2,100 costs
£500 with	£4,061 costs
£800 with	£6,502 costs
£3,000 with	£1,395 costs
£7,500 with	£6,140 costs

Coopers and Lybrand

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the projects, the purposes, and the cost of his Department's use of the Coopers and Lybrand group since 1989.

Mr. Heseltine: Coopers and Lybrand has been used for the following projects since 1989:

Area Economic Study: Basingstoke
Buying Agency: Employment agreement clauses
Crown Suppliers: Assignment of vehicle hire contracts
Crown Suppliers: Privatisation
Crown Suppliers: Senior appointments remuneration for the Buying Agency

Estate Action Schemes evaluation
Housing Corporation: Audit
Litter Baseline survey
National Monument Record marketing strategy
Property Holdings: Government Car Service
Property Holdings: Interdepartmental Despatch Service
Property Holdings: Security equipment and furniture stores
PSA Services: Accounts Receivable system
PSA Services: Consultants database
PSA Services: Personnel consultancy
PSA Services: Plus Plan consolidation
PSA Services: Proposed privatisation
PSA Services: Repayment invoicing system
PSA Services: Report writing system
PSA Services: Strategic accounting system
Tyne and Wear Development Corporation: Audit
Uniface: Consultancy

It is not our policy to reveal the cost of individual contracts.

Appeals Tribunals

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost to the Exchequer so far of valuation and community charge tribunals; what is the number of outstanding appeals; what is the estimated cost to the Exchequer of hearing the outstanding non-domestic rating appeals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Valuation and community charge tribunals came into being on 1 May 1989, replacing local valuation panels. The cost of the 56 VCCTs in England and their predecessors since 1989-90 is as follows:

	£ million
1989-90	9·8
1990-91	7·6
1991-92	[1]9·2

[1]estimated.

The relatively high 1989-90 figure includes capital expenditure—in particular on computer hardware—in preparation for handling appeals against the 1990 rating list and the community charge.

At the end of 1991, VCCTs in England had outstanding nearly 600,000 appeals, including non-domestic rating and community charge cases. The following amounts have been provided for English VCCTs in the Government's spending plans:

	£ million
1992-93	15·9
1993-94	9·5
1994-95	9·8

These amounts relate to the full costs of VCCTs including all appeal work, and it is not possible to provide separate figures in respect of rating appeals only. In particular, VCCTs will have jurisdiction over certain classes of appeal concerning the council tax to be introduced from 1993. In preparation for this, the figures for 1991-92 and 1992-93 include £0·5 million and £6·8 million respectively for new computer hardware and applications to enable the efficient processing of council tax appeals.

Wheal Jane Mine

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action his Department is taking to terminate the flow of contaminated water from the abandoned Wheal Jane mine, Cornwall; if he will send a Minister to the area without delay; if he will receive a deputation from Cornwall county council; and if he will make a statement as to how the incident was enabled to arise.

Mr. Baldry: I met representatives from Carrick district council on 21 January, and I visited Cornwall on 23 January to see the work which is currently being carried out to treat the discharge from Wheal Jane. I was impressed by the effort which the National Rivers Authority has put into monitoring since the middle of last year, into remedial treatment in recent months, and into the development of medium and long-term arrangements for treating the discharge. Efforts to prevent the discharge of untreated water failed as a result of an unexpected collapse in the area of the Nangiles adit. I met Councillor David Roberts, chairman of Cornwall county council, on 23 January.

Parliamentary Works Office Staff

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the grades of staff employed by the Parliamentary Works Office who are required to clock in and clock out at the start and finish of their day's work.

Mr. Yeo: Only non-industrial staff participating in the flexitime arrangements are required to clock in and out. Industrial grades enter manually the time of their arrival and depature on the work dockets.

Noise Insulation

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that local authorities test the standards of noise insulation in new residential buildings.

Mr. Yeo: On 10 December last year revised building regulations were laid before Parliament which from 1 June 1992 will improve the existing requirements for sound insulation in new dwellings and extend these to flat conversions. Practical problems for the local authority and the builder would not in my view justify sound testing of all new and converted residential properties. The requirements of the building regulations are met by the builder undertaking forms of construction which have been shown to perform satisfactorily under test conditions.

Ley Holdings Ltd.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the application of Ley Rubber Ltd., Liverpool, to change the use of its property at 62 Bridgewater street, was submitted to the Merseyside development corporation; and when a decision will be reached.

Mr. Yeo: The application of Ley Holdings Ltd., Liverpool to change the use of property at 62 Bridgewater street was submitted to the Merseyside development corporation on 9 January 1992. The development corporation expects to decide the application at its board meeting on 13 February 1992.

West Yorkshire Fire Authority

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to announce the standard spending assessment for the West Yorkshire fire authority; and what account, in reaching his decision, has been taken of special factors applying to fire visits in West Yorkshire explained to him by the delegation he met on 16 January.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State laid the Revenue Support Grant Report (England) 1992-93 and associated reports before the House last Friday 24 January. Copies of the reports, together with a table showing the standard spending assessments—SSAs—and grant entitlement of each authority were sent to all authorities on the same day, and have been placed in the Library and Vote Office.

Before taking his decisions on the settlement, my right hon. Friend carefully considered all the representations and comments which had been made to him, including those made by members of a delegation from West Yorkshire fire authority when they came to see me on 16 January. Having considered all the representations and comments made to him, he decided to adopt his proposed methodology for the fire component of SSAs. The SSA for the West Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority for 1992-93 is £48·749 million, an increase of 8·2 per cent. on 1991-92, and as a result of changes in underlying data £12,000 greater than the provisional SSA proposed on 26 November.

Devonport Secondary School

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce his decision on the application by Devon county council for consent under section 123 of the Local Government Act 1972 to transfer the site and buildings of Devonport secondary school to the diocesan education committee.

Sir George Young: Within the next few days. I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state for each year since 1978-79 the Government's settlement for local authority personal social services and the actual expenditure by local authorities on personal social services for each year.

Mr. Key: The available information is as follows:

Personal Social Services

£ million

	Grant related expenditure[1] control total	Expenditure[2]
1982-83	1,943	n.a.
1983-84	2,085	n.a.
1984-85	2,205	n.a.
1985-86	2,366	n.a.
1986-87	2,553	n.a.
1987-88	2,756	n.a.
1988-89	2,913	n.a.
1989-90	3,269	n.a.
	SSA Control Total	Expenditure[3]
1990-91	3,592	4,119
1991-92	4,418	4,521

[1] Information on grant related expenditure control totals is not available for years prior to 1982-83.

[2] It is not possible to construct comparable figures for outturn on the basis of available returns from local authorities.

[3] Net Revenue Expenditure to compare with SSA.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reasons he decided to exclude homelessness of children and adults, the number of elderly and disabled persons from ethnic minority groups, information about the prevalence of disability in the population from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys disability survey, and information about the prevalence of mental illness, from the calculation of standard spending assessment for local authority personal social services.

Mr. Key: The selection of indicators included in the social services standard spending assessments is based on the careful consideration of research evidence, much of it from independent sources, and extensive discussion with local authority representatives. The information referred to has formed part of these considerations, but in most cases is not available on a reliable and consistent basis for all local authorities.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average annual rate of growth allowed to the local authority personal social services between 1978-79 and 1988-89.

Mr. Key: The average annual rate of growth in the total allowance for revenue spending on personal social services within the rate support grant settlements between 1982-83 and 1988-89 was 7 per cent. Information is not available for years prior to 1982-83. It is for local authorities to decide their own priorities between spending on various services.

Funding

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which organisations currently receive Government funding under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985; how much money each organisation receives; and for what nature of the services the money is provided.

Mr. Yeo: I will arrange for this information to be placed in the Library.

Planning

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average length of time which companies applying for planning permission to the Merseyside development corporation have to wait; and whether minor non-contentious planning decisions are delegated to development corporation officials.

Mr. Yeo: The measure "average length of time" is not generally used for assessing development control decisions on planning applications. The Department of the Environment measures the proportion of applications determined within eight weeks of submission. In 1990, 59 per cent. of the applications determined by the Merseyside development corporation were within eight weeks. This increased to 60 per cent. for the first three quarters of 1991, the most up-to-date information available.

Legal counsel's advice to the corporation is that it does not have the power to delegate minor, non-contentious planning decisions to officials.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to sell Property Services Agency Projects by single tender.

Mr. Yeo: There is no truth in the rumours that PSA Projects is about to be sold by single tender. A prospective purchaser has indicated that an unsolicited bid may be made for Projects shortly. If that happens careful consideration will be given to the merits of launching a sale competition in the near future. In considering the sale timetable I will want to take into account the need to ensure adequate staff consultation and competition.

Landfill Sites

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the terms of reference of the study commissioned by his Department into the blighting effects on home owners of landfill gas sites; when this study will be completed; and whether it will be published.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 24 January 1992]: The terms of reference are to examine examples of blight and public concern which have already occurred in relation to specific contaminated sites, including gassing landfills; and to identify the nature and form of information and guidance that will be required.

A draft report has just been received by the Department. The findings of the study will be used in preparing a programme of information and publicity for the general public, and in guidance for local authorities.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total expenditure of local authorities, in England and Wales, in each year since 1979, expressed in (a) current prices and (b) 1991 prices.

Mr. Key [holding answer 24 January 1992]: The available information is as follows:

Local Authority Revenue Expenditure England
Total Expenditure

£ million

	Cash	1991-92 Prices
1981-82	18,171	32,558
1982-83	19,737	33,014
1983-84	20,809	33,266
1984-85	21,312	32,447
1985-86	21,661	31,252
1986-87	23,760	33,190
1987-88	25,686	34,029
1988-89	27,667	34,200
1989-90	29,404	34,133
	Net Revenue Expenditure
1990-91	33,142	35,462
1991-92	36,256	36,256

Notes:
1. Total Expenditure 1981-82 to 1989-90 and Net Revenue Expenditure 1990-91 to 1991-92 are not directly comparable as they derive from two different financial systems.
2. Information relating to Welsh Authorities is a matter for the Secretary of State for Wales.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount raised in 1990-91 through the uniform business rate in Greater London and the expected amount in 1991-92; and what amounts in global and percentage terms were made available to London boroughs, expressed (a) overall and (b) by borough.

Mr. Key: The available information is as follows:

[1] These are local authorities' own calculations of the final contribution to the non-domestic rates pool. The Secretary of State is still considering the auditors reports for some of these authorities.

In addition to the receipts from the pool, the City of London budgeted to receive £25 million in 1990-91 and £30 million in 1991-92 from the locally determined rate.

The total amount raised from non-domestic rates includes payments by properties on the central and Crown lists direct to the pool. These amounts are not available broken down by area. The total amount available for distribution from the pool in 1990-91 was £10·4 billion and in 1991-92 £12·4 billion. This includes £1·6 billion in respect of properties on central and Crown lists in each year.

Contributions to the pool and payments out of the pool may not balance within the year concerned. Any excess amounts in the pool at the end of the year are carried forward and made available for distribution in the following year.

Revenue support grant is paid to compensate authorities for the difference between (a) the amount received from the non-domestic rates pool plus the amount that could be received by the authority from community charges if it charged the community charge for standard spending and (b) the standard spending assessment for the area as a whole.

PA Consulting

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will formally publish the report by PA Consulting group.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 24 January 1992]: No.

Sprinkler Systems

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures will be required to ensure that sprinkler systems will be effective during the lifetime of a building following the introduction of new building regulations on 10 December 1991.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

Section 15 of the Fire Safety and Safety of Places of Sport Act 1987 will be implemented to enable sprinklers to be cited on fire certificates as a means of fighting fire. I also plan to make regulations under section 12 of the Fire Precautions Act 1971 to provide for the maintenance of such systems installed for the purpose of building regulations in non-certified premises. These measures will take effect from 1 June 1992.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Balance of Trade

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state for each year since 1962 (a) the visible trade balance and as a percentage of gross national product, and (b) the balance of payments and as a percentage of gross national product.

Mr. Mellor: Following is the information:

Departmental Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the source of the statistics published by his Department relating to company profitability, liquidity and investment.

Mr. Maples: Gross profitability is calculated using national accounts estimates, all the sources of which are described in "National Accounts: Sources and Methods". The main sources are tax assessments and statistical inquiries.

More information on the calculation of the profitability of industrial and commercial companies, on the sources of data on liquidity and on the sources of data on gross trading profits are contained in Central Statistical Office bulletins 71/91, 89/91 and 86/91, respectively.

Copies of all the publications referred to are in the Library of the House.

Global Growth Strategy

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 12, what response he gave to the United States Treasury Under-Secretary's request for co-operation in the development of a global growth strategy among G7 countries.

Mr. Maples: The Chancellor attended the meeting of G7 finance Ministers in New York on 25 January. The Ministers and governors had a full discussion of prospects for their economies, under the chairmanship of United States Treasury Secretary Brady. They agreed there was a need to intensify their co-operative efforts to improve the conditions for non-inflationary growth in their economies, thereby strengthening the world economy. A copy of the statement issued after the meeting is in the Library of the House.

Corporation Tax

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the figure of corporation tax paid in 1989-90 and 1990-91 for each of the three groups industrial and provident societies, building societies, and co-operative societies, which are aggregated on page 77 of the Inland Revenue Statistics 1991.

Mr. Maude: Building societies paid £614 million of mainstream corporation tax in 1989-90 and £556 million in 1990-91. Industrial and provident societies and co-operative societies paid £33 million in 1989-90 and £43 million in 1990-91. Further disaggregation of these figures could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Board of Inland Revenue

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his proposals relating to the review of management and grading and the review of the organisation and structure of the Board of Inland Revenue.

Mr. Maude: An announcement will be made as soon as decisions have been arrived at.

Bingham Inquiry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether his evidence to the Lord Justice Bingham was oral or in written form; if he will publish his evidence; and whether the evidence was given at his own request.

Mr. Maples: Lord Justice Bingham is taking evidence in private, for reasons which are well understood. It would not therefore be appropriate for me to publish the evidence I have given to Lord Justice Bingham or to disclose any details about it. The Prime Minister assured the House on 22 July 1991, at column 759, that all Ministers and officials would co-operate fully with Lord Justice Bingham's inquiries, and we are doing so.

Inspectors of Taxes

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the rewards, financial or non-financial, for Her Majesty's inspectors of taxes arising as a result of interest, penalties and back duty investigations in which they were engaged; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Inspectors of taxes, like other civil servants, are eligible to be considered for performance pay based on an appraisal of their overall performance over a period. But they do not receive any financial or non-financial rewards based on the results of back duty investigations in which they have been engaged.

Tax Allowances and Reliefs

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the effect on Treasury revenues in a full year in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93 of introducing an upper limit on all income tax allowances and reliefs of (i) £10,000, (ii) £15,000 and (iii) £20,000 a year, limiting all personal tax allowances except the single person's allowance and relief on contributions to personal pensions to the basic rate, with a 50 per cent. income tax band on taxable incomes of (1) £31,705 and above, (2) £33,705 and above, (3) £36,705 and above, (4) £38,705 and above, (5) £41,705 and above, (6) £43,705 and above, (7) £66,705 and above and (8) £76,705 and above, giving the total revenue in each case and the numbers of people affected;

(2) if he will estimate the effect on Treasury revenues in a full year in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93 of introducing an upper limit on all income tax allowances and reliefs of (i) £10,000, (ii) £15,000 and (iii) £20,000 a year, and limiting all personal tax allowances except the single person's allowance to the basic rate, with relief on contributions limited to personal pensions to the basic rate, and relief on employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes limited to the basic rate, with a 50 per cent. income tax band on taxable incomes of (1) £31,705 and above, (2) £33,705 and above, (3) £36,705 and above, (4) £38,705 and above, (5) £41,705 and above, (6) £43,705 and above, (7) £66,705 and above and (8) £76,705 and above, giving the total revenue in each case and the numbers of people affected;

(3) if he will estimate the effect on Treasury revenues in a full year in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93 of introducing an upper limit on all income tax allowances and reliefs of (i) £10,000, (ii) £15,000 and (iii) £20,000 a year, and limiting relief on contributions to personal pensions and occupational pension schemes to the basic rate, and limiting of all personal tax allowances except the single person's allowance to the basic rate, and with a 50 per cent. income tax band on taxable incomes of (1) £31,705 and above, (2) £33,705 and above, (3) £36,705 and above, (4) £38,705 and above, (5) £41,705 and above, (6) £43,705 and above, (7) £66,705 and above and (8) £76,705 and above, giving the total revenue in each case and the numbers of people affected.

Mr. Maude [holding answer on 21 January 1992]: It is estimated that at 1991-92 levels of income the introduction of the upper limits specified would yield the following.

Yield following restriction of specified allowances and relief on contributions to personal pensions to the basic rate (£ million)

50 per cent. taxable income threshold	Upper Limit for total allowances and reliefs
	£10,000	£15,000	£20,000
£31,705	470	200	120
£33,705	470	200	120
£36,705	470	200	120
£38,705	470	200	120
£41,705	470	200	120
£43,705	470	200	120
£66,705	470	200	120
£76,705	460	200	120

Yield following restriction of specified allowances and relief on contributions to occupational pension schemes limited to the basic rate (£ million)

50 per cent. taxable income threshold	Upper limit for total allowances and reliefs
	£10,000	£15,000	£20,000
£31,705	540	240	150
£33,705	540	240	150
£36,705	530	240	150
£38,705	530	240	150
£41,705	530	240	150
£43,705	530	240	150
£66,705	520	230	140
£76,705	520	230	140

Yield following restriction of specified allowances and relief on contributions to personal pensions and occupational pensions to the basic rate (£ million)

50 per cent. taxable income threshold	Upper limit for total allowances and reliefs
	£10,000	£15,000	£20,000
£31,705	450	190	120
£33,705	450	190	120
£36,705	450	190	120
£38,705	450	190	120
£41,705	450	190	120
£43,705	450	190	110
£66,705	440	190	110
£76,705	440	180	110

The number of people with total allowances and reliefs in excess of £10,000 is about 635,000. The corresponding figures for £15,000 and £20,000 are about 75,000 and 35,000 respectively.

The estimates of revenue yield do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of such a limit.

It is not possible to provide corresponding detailed estimates for 1992-93.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on Treasury revenues in a full year in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93 of introducing an upper limit on all income tax allowances and reliefs of (i) £10,000, (ii) £15,000 and (iii) £20,000 a year, with a 50 per cent. income tax band on taxable incomes of (1) £31,705 and above, (2) £33,705 and above, (3) £36,705 and above, (4) £38,705 and above, (5) £41,705 and above, (6) £43,705 and above, (7) £66,705 and above and (8) £76,705 and above, giving the total revenue in each case and the numbers of people affected.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 21 January 1992]: After the introduction of a 50 per cent. tax band the estimated further yield from imposing the specified limits would be as follows:

Full year yield at 1991-92 income levels

Threshold for 50 per cent. tax	Limit for total allowances and reliefs
	£10,000	£15,000	£20,000
£31,705	710	290	170
£33,705	700	290	170
£36,705	700	290	170
£38,705	700	290	170
£41,705	690	290	170
£43,705	690	290	170
£66,705	660	280	170
£76,705	650	280	170

The number of people with total allowances and reliefs in excess of £10,000 is about 635,000. The corresponding figures for £15,000 and £20,000 are about 75,000 and 35,000 respectively.

It is not possible to provide corresponding detailed estimates for 1992-93.

Tax and National Insurance

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the net average gain or loss of those on gross incomes of between £20,280 and £27,000, £27,000 and £33,000, £33,000 and £50,000 and over £50,000, of an increase in the national insurance contributions upper earnings limit to £33,000, a 42 per cent. tax band between £33,000 and £50,000 and a 50 per cent. tax band on incomes over £50,000; and how many taxpayers are in each of the four income groups.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 22 January 1992]: Information for 1992-93 is as follows for those with gross incomes in the ranges specified. The tax regime has been applied in terms of taxable income ranges—income after deduction of allowances and reliefs—with the thresholds specified.

Gross income	Number of taxpayers Thousands	Average increase in tax and NIC[1] £ per year
Less than £20,280	20,210	0
£20,280—£27,000	2,500	90
£27,000—£33,000	930	380
£33,000—£50,000	870	640
Over £50,000	490	3,840
Total	25,000	120

[1] Compared with statutory indexation.

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the net revenue implications in a full year of (a) an increase in the national insurance contributions upper earnings limit to £33,000, (b) a tax band of 42 per cent. on gross income between £33,000 and £50,000 and (c) a tax band of 50 per cent. on gross income over £50,000.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 22 January 1992]: At 1992-93 levels of income an increase in the upper earnings limit for employees to £33,000 would yield about £1·4 billion in a full year. The imposition of a 42 per cent. tax rate on taxable incomes between £33,000 and £50,000 and 50 per cent. on taxable incomes over £50,000 would yield an additional £1·7 billion in a full year compared with statutory indexation. Taxable income is after deduction of reliefs and allowances. It is not possible to provide a cost of applying these rates to ranges defined in terms of gross incomes, because tax liability depends on the allowances and reliefs available to those concerned.

Income Tax

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the revenue which would be raised by a tax rate of 50 per cent. on taxable incomes of £70,000, and at decreasing £5,000 levels from this level.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 27 January 1991]: The information is in the table.

Estimated yields in 1992-93 from a 50 per cent. tax rate

Threshold of taxable income at which 50 per cent. rate is charged (£)	Yield at 1992-93 levels of income (£ million)
25,000	3,360
30,000	2,700
35,000	2,250
40,000	1,920
45,000	1,670
50,000	1,470
55,000	1,320
60,000	1,190
65,000	1,090
70,000	1,000

These estimates do not allow for any behavioural effect that might result from such changes to the tax system and do not include capital gains tax.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

India

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about his recent visit to India; and what response the Indian Government has made to Her Majesty's Government raising of alleged human rights abuses, particularly in the Punjab.

Mr. Hurd: I visited India on 15 to 18 January. I had useful meetings with the President, the Prime Minister, and the Ministers for External Affairs, Home Affairs, Finance, Defence and Commerce. Our relations with India have improved and are in an excellent state, which enables both sides to speak frankly as between friends even about sensitive matters.

I expresssed strong support for the Indian Government's decision to hold elections in Punjab, and my hope that a similar political process could start in Kashmir. At the same time I criticised interventions from outside which promote violence in both places. On human rights, I emphasised the importance of greater openness in dealing with allegations of abuses and urged that Amnesty International be allowed access to report on the situation. The Indian Government gave assurances that alleged abuses of human rights were all investigated, and noted my points about the need for more transparency.

Israel

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has recently made to the Israeli Government concerning the continued closure of Bir Zeit university.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On 6 January our ambassador in Tel Aviv, together with his EC colleagues, made strong representations to the Israeli Foreign Minister about the decision to extend the closure order on Bir Zeit university. We shall continue to do all we can to persuade the Israelis to allow all academic institutions in the occupied territories to function freely.

Kuwait

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has recently made to the Kuwait Government concerning the abuse of human rights to non-Kuwaiti citizens.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since the liberation of Kuwait we have made repeated representations to the Kuwaitis about the need to respect the human rights of non-Kuwaiti citizens. I am happy to say that there has been a considerable improvement in this regard.

Cambodia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain a copy of the report, "Land Mines in Cambodia: the Cowards' War", by Rae McGrath, for his departmental library.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The publication has been ordered.

Nicaragua

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people are employed in Her Majesty's embassy in Nicaragua; and whether he has any plans to increase the establishment.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: An ambassador supported by one other United Kingdom-based and six locally engaged staff. Levels of staffing are, however, kept under constant review.

Iraq

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements are being made for the destruction and removal of Iraqi weapons of mass destruction as identified by the United Nations team.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The special commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency have already destroyed, removed or rendered harmless munitions, components, equipment and materials from Iraq's weapons of mass destruction programme. Details are outlined in UN Security Council documents S/23295, 17 December 1991, S/23165, 25 October 1991, and S/23268, 4 December 1991, copies of which are in the House of Commons Library. These reports also describe future destruction and removal plans currently in the planning phase, or under negotiation with contractors.

Gulf States

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has recently made to the Gulf states Governments concerning a democratisation of their political systems.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have explained to Governments of the Gulf countries our policy for promoting good government, democracy and human rights. Every state in the region needs to find its own way to provide for popular participation in government. We welcome the commitment of Kuwait to hold elections to the national assembly in October, as we welcome both the establishment of Oman's consultative council in December 1991, and plans to establish a similar council in Saudi Arabia.

Felesmina Dos Santos Consecao

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Indonesian Government over the case of Felesmina Dos Santos Consecao, jailed in connection with the Santa Cruz massacre.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are aware of the charges against Miss Dos Santos Consecao and as her case is presently sub-judice it would be wrong to make representations to the Indonesian Government.

Correspondence

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Worsley dated 30 November concerning Mr. Kadir, of 21 Standfield drive, Boothstown, Worsley.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office replied in accordance with standard practice on 21 January.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Research Institutes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list by standard region (a) the research institutes operated for, or on behalf of, his Department and the total employment thereat, (b) the total number of such institutes and the total employment therein and (c) if he will express the regional totals as a percentage of the national totals.

Mr. Leigh: The Department has four research establishments as follows: the Laboratory of the Government Chemist—LGC—and the National Physical Laboratory—NPL—both based at Teddington; Warren Spring Laboratory—WSL—at Stevenage; and the National Engineering Laboratory—NEL—at East Kilbride. Each of the establishments has been established as an executive agency.

The details requested are as follows:

Establishment and Region	Staff in post	Percentage in region
LGC
South East	337·5	79·1
NPL
South East	833
WSL
South East	313·5
NEL
Scotland	391·5	20·9
TOTAL	1,875·5	100

Trade Fairs (Support)

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the support available from his Department to assist United Kingdom companies participating in overseas trade fairs.

Mr. Sainsbury: The report of a Rayner efficiency scrutiny review of the status of the Department's fairs and promotions branch was presented to me in June 1991. A copy was placed in the Library of the House. I have accepted the key recommendations of the report, which are:

"the separation of the operations of Fairs and Promotions Branch into two units, one concerned with the administration of grant support and the other with the delivery of exhibition project management services. The services unit will operate on a full economic cost basis from 1 April 1992. The feasibility of its becoming a "Next Steps" agency will be reviewed in the Autumn of 1993; greater freedom of choice for sponsoring organisations, such as trade associations and chambers of commerce, to negotiate directly with exhibition organisers and contractors for space and/or stand construction so as to obtain maximum benefits on behalf of their exhibitors; simplification of the administration of the grant support scheme. This will involve the introduction of fixed grants towards the costs of space and stand construction to replace the present system of assistance of half the estimated direct costs of providing these facilities."

We will be introducing administration grants to offset the cost of sponsoring organisations of making their own arrangements for the provision of exhibition services and increasing the level of travel grants available to eligible exhibitors taking part in exhibitions outside western Europe.

Offers of support under these new terms, which are designed to maintain the level of subsidy to eligible exhibitors at broadly 50 per cent. of the costs of space and stand provision, will be introduced after 1 April 1992. There will be no cut in the budget available to the fairs and promotions branch. Rather, the introduction of a streamlined system of fixed grants will enable the branch's budget to support a greater number of British groups attending overseas trade fairs.

These new arrangements will achieve substantial savings in administrative costs, and better value for money for British exporters. They will lead to even more effective United Kingdom representation at overseas trade fairs.

Cotton

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has concerning the number of cotton mill closures which have occurred in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what estimate he has made of the cost to the United Kingdom economy in each of those years.

Mr. Leigh: This information is not available.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the value and volume of output of the United Kingdom cotton spinning industry in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what corresponding figures he has for the average of the rest of Europe in each of those years.

Mr. Leigh: The value of output of spinning and doubling on the cotton system—SIC activity 4321—is shown on pages 250-251 of "Business Monitor PA 1002", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Comparable information for Europe is not available, nor is information available on the volume of output.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has concerning the profitability of (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the European cotton spinning industries.

Mr. Leigh: This information is not available.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent action he has taken to prevent the dumping of spun cotton products by (a) Turkey, (b) Brazil and (c) Egypt.

Mr. Sainsbury: The European Commission opened an anti-dumping investigation into imports of cotton yarn on 22 March 1990. Provisional anti-dumping duties were imposed by the Commission on 28 September 1991 on imports from Brazil, Egypt and Turkey. The provisional duties are due to expire on 28 March 1992 and we are awaiting the Commission's proposals for terminating the investigation definitively.

Arms Exports Exhibition

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether temporary export licences are required by United Kingdom manufacturers for equipment that they intend to display at the Eurosatory arms export exhibition to be held in Paris from 22 to 27 June.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 21 January 1992]: Any item which falls under the control of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1991 requires an export licence before it can be exported, whatever the purpose of export. Whether that licence is for a temporary or permanent period of export depends upon the circumstances of each case.

Instruments of Torture

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will make a statement on his policy on the export of strobe lights and white noise generators;

(2) what investigations he is undertaking into exports to the United Arab Emirates of equipment capable of use for the purposes of torture.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 27 January 1992]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave on 23 January 1992, at columns 292-94.

TRANSPORT

Bus Demonstration Projects

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which bus demonstration projects he will be supporting.

Mr. Freeman: Supplementary credit approvals totalling £3 million are to be allocated to local authorities in England outside London for capital expenditure on measures to promote bus use in 1992-93. Table 1 sets out the detailed allocations. The Department will be writing to each of the authorities notifying them of the purpose for which approvals have been given. Up to a further £1 million is being held for schemes in London. Consideration is being given to projects in London in the light of the red route proposals and a further announcement will be made as soon as possible.

These allocations are in addition to acceptance of the Chester park and ride scheme for transport supplementary grant at a total estimated cost of £1·245 million which was announced on 19 December as part of the main transport supplementary grant and credit approval settlement for 1992-93.

I am pleased that local authorities are giving serious consideration to the role of the bus in helping to alleviate the problems of our urban environment. The allocations we have made will enable authorities to introduce a number of measures to promote bus use, including a range of bus priority schemes. We shall be monitoring some of the projects for demonstration purposes. I would like this to be the start of an ongoing programme and more resources are planned for this purpose in 1993-94.

I am also keen to encourage the use of low floor buses and to evaluate the possible part that clean fuel vehicles might play in meeting our future transport needs. We shall be writing to local authorities inviting them to put forward proposals for projects of this nature for which further supplementary credit approvals could be allocated.

Privatisation

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give in respect of each privatisation since 1979 (a) the loss or profit of each company in the five years prior to privatisation and (b) any grants or loans made over the same period.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available information is as follows.

Motorway Accidents

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, columns 656-57, on discussions with other Governments on research into accidents caused by motorists falling asleep, if he will give details of the most recent occasion on which his regular contacts included discussion of this aspect of road safety.

Mr. Chope: Driver fatigue was most recently discussed with officials of the United States National Highway Traffic Safety Administration at a meeting in Washington on 16 January.

London Travel Statistics

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he possesses concerning the passenger hours spent in movement in central London on a normal weekday by (a) foot, (b) bus, (c) underground railways, (d) black taxi cab and (e) private motor car.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information he has concerning the passenger miles carried in central London during a usual week by (a) private motor cars, (b) black taxi cabs, (c) buses and (d) public or chartered coaches;

(2) what information he possesses concerning the approximate proportion or percentage of passenger miles travelled per day on roads in central London by (a) private motor cars, (b) black taxi cabs, (c) buses and (d) public and chartered coaches during (i) weekday peak hours, (ii) weekday non-peak hours, (iii) weekends and (iv) any other period.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available estimates are given in the table and relate to travel on trunk and principal roads in central London in 1990. These estimates have been derived from a number of sources and are very approximate.

	Million passenger kilometres travelled per:			Percentage passenger kilometres by mode
	Week	Weekday	Weekend Day	Week	Weekday	Weekend Day
Cars	22·0	3·0	3·0	52	46	60
Taxis	2·5	0·5	0·5	6	8	10
London Buses	15·0	2·5	1·5	35	38	30
Other Buses	3·0	0·5	—	7	8	—

Note: Estimates of passenger kilometres are rounded to the nearest half million. The figures for weekdays and weekends are therefore not necessarily consistent with those for the weekly totals.

M3

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the portion of the new M3 south and east of Compton and Stanford village is to be completed and the present 50 mph speed limit discontinued.

Mr. Chope: The Compton-Bassett section of the M3 is expected to be open to traffic and the current speed limits lifted as soon as the signalling system has been completed.

A19

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for transport if he will list the road works which are to be carried out on that stretch of the A19 running through the Easington constituency in the financial year 1992-93, indicating the cost of such works.

Mr. Chope: The information requested has not yet been finalised but as soon as it is I shall write to the hon. Member.

Stranraer to Larne Ferries

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make public the report his Department has undertaken on hours worked by ratings on Sealink Stena Stranraer to Larne service ferries.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department is unable to make public its findings on the hours worked by ratings on Sealink Stena Stranraer to Larne service ferries because of undertakings given to respect the confidentiality of the seafarers concerned. However, I can confirm that an investigation has been undertaken and that steps have been put in hand by the company at the Department's request to ensure that working hours are properly recorded.

Concessionary Fares

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) district councils and (b) metropolitan district councils have introduced a concessionary fares scheme for elderly or disabled people in their area under discretionary powers granted by the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. Rifkind: According to a survey by my Department in 1986, there were concessionary fare schemes for pensioners or disabled people in over 90 per cent. of districts in England and Wales, some operated by district councils and some by county councils. In metropolitan areas the passenger transport executives can provide these schemes, and I understand that they all do so. In London a scheme is funded by the boroughs.

Tees and Hartlepool Port Authority

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is now in a position to announce his decision on the recommendation put to him by the board of the Tees and Hartlepool port authority concerning the sale of its undertaking.

Mr. Rifkind: Yes. In my answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) on 18 December I said that I had written to the chairman of THPA to say that I was minded to give my formal consent to the sale of the authority's successor company —Tees and Hartlepool Port Authority Ltd.—to Teesside Holdings Ltd. as soon as I was able to do so; and that this would be possible only after the scheme of transfer submitted by the authority under section 9(1) of the Ports Act 1991 and the order providing for a levy on disposals of land to be made under section 17 of the Act had come into effect. The former took effect on 30 December 1991 and the latter on 16 January.

Since I gave my answer to my hon. Friend's question on 18 December, a number of representations have been put to me concerning the sale, notably by Mr. John Hackney, the chief executive of THPA and chairman of the THPA Consortium plc, and by the hon. Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell), who have sought to persuade me that I should withhold my consent to the THPA board's recommendation concerning the sale of the port. I have considered the matters which have been put before me very carefully, including taking counsel's advice. I have concluded that there is nothing in them which would justify my taking a different decision from the one I was minded to take in December. I am satisfied that the THPA board conducted the sale of its undertaking properly, and fully in accordance with the procedure agreed with my Department. In so far as it has been represented to me that the advice of THPA's professional advisers was misleading to the THPA consortium, I am satisfied that it was proper advice and should not have given rise to any misapprehension on the part of the consortium. I am further satisfied that the board evaluated the final bids which it received in accordance with the objectives of sale agreed between THPA and myself and that it did not apply any additional or different objectives of sale. These objectives were:

"In assessing the merits of competing offers, the Board of the Authority will have particular regard to the desirability of encouraging the disposal to managers and staff of the whole or a substantial part of the equity share capital of its privatised undertaking. The Board will seek the best open market price for its undertaking having regard to its desire to ensure that after privatisation the undertaking should continue to operate in ways which are beneficial to the local economy. To that end the Board will look closely at the background and business plans of prospective purchasers to satisfy itself that they are directed to the maintenance of a viable, competitive port operation; to the maintenance of the port as a separate entity with day-to-day management and control located in Teesside; and to the need for proposals for the use of THPA's assets to be for the development of the port business or for the promotion of developments which are locally beneficial."

Among the matters drawn to my attention was the statement in the Teesside Holdings' bid that an existing member of the THPA board and a leading local solicitor, neither of whom was named, would be appointed to the Teesside Holdings' board. It was suggested that this created a potential conflict of interest on the THPA board in the consideration of the bids. Each of the non-executive members of the THPA board and their legal adviser have confirmed that they received no approach on this matter from 3i, whose nominees on the Teesside Holdings' board the directors would be; and Teesside Holdings has similarly confirmed that it made no such approach. I am satisfied that no conflict of interest arose in the THPA board's consideration of the bids.

I have also considered representations concerning Humberside Holdings and other companies associated with the Holloway family. Humberside Holdings, which is itself owned in part by Powell Duffryn and in part by the Holloway family, holds an equal share with Powell Duffryn and 3i in the equity share capital of Teesside Holdings Ltd. Mr. John Holloway is the intended chief executive of Tees and Hartlepool Port Authority Ltd. I have found nothing in the evidence put before me concerning either Mr. John Holloway or Humberside Holdings which would make it proper for me to withhold my consent to the proposed sale to Teesside Holdings Ltd.

I am now writing to the chairman of THPA giving my consent to the sale of the authority's undertaking to Teesside Holdings Ltd. I should like to place on record my appreciation of the patience which the chairman and members of the THPA Board have shown during the delay in my reaching a final decision caused by the need for me to consider these representations.

Leicester Eastern Bypass

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the consultation process will begin on the Leicester eastern bypass; and what are the expected start and completion dates.

Mr. Chope: In the event of a viable scheme being identified, it is likely that public consultation could take place in autumn 1993. Subject to the satisfactory completion of all the statutory procedures and the availability of funds, work could start around the end of the century with a construction period of about two years.

Tyre Treads

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence was used to justify the increase in tyre tread depth requirement from 1 mm to 1·6 mm; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The increased tyre tread depth regulation was introduced in response to a mandatory requirement of EC directive 89/459. In its explanation of the expected impact on business costs and jobs, the EC Commission justified the measure on the basis that, among other things, it would result in an increase in road safety and a reduction in, and diminution in the costs of, accidents. The opinion of the Government was set out in explanatory memorandum 8714/87.

Dock Labour Scheme

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from third parties directly affected by the abolition of the national dock labour scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: In early 1990, hon. Members wrote to me about three cases. One was on behalf of two constituents who worked in the office of a stevedoring company which went into liquidation when the dock labour scheme was abolished, and who complained that they received a lower scale of redundancy compensation than ex-registered dockworkers. The other two were on behalf of unsecured creditors of another firm, whose dividend from the liquidator was likely to be greatly diminished on account of this Department's claim for refund in respect of the employer's 50 per cent. contribution to compensation payments. I was unable to help in any of these cases.

A1 (Bypasses)

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the names of the towns which have been bypassed along the route of the A1 since 1962.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 21 November 1991, at column 244. The towns bypassed are as listed:

Aberford
Alnwick
Belford
Berwick upon Tweed
Biggleswade
Boroughbridge
Catterick
Doncaster

Glasgow to London Rail Service

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's support for improved rail services from Glasgow to London.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail is continuing to develop plans for the west coast main line. An investment submission has not yet been put to the Department, but we will consider carefully any such submission.

Stockport Bypass

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on which date he expects the A6M Stockport bypass to be open to the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 27 January 1992]: In 1995. There are a number of statutory procedures still to be completed. The scheme remains a high priority and these will be progressed as speedily as possible.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he is making to receive financial advice on the channel tunnel rail link and to consult local authorities and other local interests about the project.

Mr. Rifkind: I am appointing Samuel Montagu and Company Ltd. to act as financial advisers on the rail link project.

Samuel Montagu will advise on private sector interests whilst the line is refined and on the best way in which to hand over the project to the private sector in due course.

It will also be the Department's point of contact for developers and other private sector concerns with a potential interest in funding and developing the rail link.

A new high-level forum, chaired by my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Transport, is also to be set up to allow discussions about the rail link project prior to the full public consultations which will be necessary as part of the environmental impact assessment. Local authorities directly affected by the project are being invited to be represented on the forum together with British Rail, my Department, Samuel Montagu, the Department of the Environment and Llewelyn-Davies Planning, the DOE's consultants for the east Thames corridor study. The London Planning Advisory Committee, SERPLAN and Eurotunnel are being invited to attend as observers. The forum is expected to meet for the first time on 17 February. The statutory environmental advisory bodies will also be involved in working-level discussions about the rail link.

PRIME MINISTER

Sellafield

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he is taking to ensure co-ordination of consideration by the Secretaries of State for Energy, for Environment and for Northern Ireland of the environmental impact of the Sellafield plant on Northern Ireland and the Irish sea.

The Prime Minister: I am satisfied that suitable mechanisms already exist to achieve the required co-ordination.

Bingham Inquiry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister on what date he gave his evidence to the Bingham inquiry; and if he will place a copy of his evidence in the Library.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the letter I sent the hon. Member on 22 January, a copy of which has been placed in the House Library.

Hong Kong

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the visits made to Hong Kong by Government Ministers since June 1987 giving the date and purpose of the visit in each case.

The Prime Minister: The following Government Ministers visited Hong Kong since June 1987 on Government business:

Ministerial Visits to Hong Kong

1987 (from June):

Lord Glenarthur, Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, in September.

1988:

Sir Geoffrey Howe, Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in May; Lord Glenarthur, Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in February and June; Mr. Chris Patten, Minister for Overseas Development, in September; Lord Young, Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, in June; Mr. Cecil Parkinson, Secretary of State for Energy, in June; Mr. George Younger, Secretary of State for Defence, in March; Mr. Archie Hamilton, Minister of State for the Armed Forces, in March; Mr. Ian Stewart, Minister of State for the Armed Forces, in January; Mr. Peter Morrison, Minister of State for Energy, in September; Mr. Wyn Roberts, Minister of State, Welsh Office, in September; Mr. John Macgregor, Minister for Agriculture, in September; Mr. Paul Channon, Secretary of State for Transport, in November; Mr. Nicholas Ridley, Secretary of State for the Environment, in December; Mr. Francis Maude, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, in September.

1989:

Lord Mackay, Lord Chancellor, in December; Sir Geoffrey Howe, Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, in July; Lord Young, Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, in April; Lord Glenarthur, Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, in January; and his successor, Mr. Francis Maude, in September; Mr. Peter Viggers, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Industry, in November; and Mr. Richard Needham, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, in December.

1990:

Mr. Douglas Hurd, Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, in January; Mr. Michael Howard, Secretary of State for Employment, in September; Mr. Francis Maude, Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, in April and July; and his successor, Lord Caithness, in September; Mr. Tim Sainsbury, Minister for Trade and Mr. David Mellor, Minister for the Arts, in September; Mr. Peter Lloyd, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State in the Home Office, in March and Mr. John Maples, Economic Secretary to the Treasury, in November.

1991:

I visited in September; Mr. Douglas Hurd, Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, in April and September; Mr. Michael Heseltine, Secretary of State for the Environment, in September; Mr. Tom King, Secretary of State for Defence, in September; Mr. John Wakeham, Secretary of State for Energy, in November; Mr. John Gummer, Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, in October; and Lord Caithness, Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, in January, July and December.

Departmental Information Systems

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the current state of implementation of FAMIS—financial and management information systems—or its equivalent in each of Her Majesty's Government's Departments; and what proposals he has to develop the system.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 January 1992]: Following the financial management initiative, most Departments have been developing financial and management information systems, although there is no single model. Executive agencies set up under the "next steps" initiative are now doing the same. Such systems require continuing development to clarify managerial responsibility, to give better information on how to improve value for money and quality of service from the resources consumed, and to meet changing business needs. The Government will continue to encourage the effort being devoted to developing such systems.

ENERGY

Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will specify the marketing and public relations functions of Dewe Rogerson on electricity privatisation since the flotation of the generating companies in 1990-91.

Mr. Wakeham: Dewe Rogerson's functions in this period relate to the collection of the further instalments due on the shares in the privatised electricity companies.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) on what criteria Schroder Wagg was selected as underwriters on electricity privatisation in September 1990;

(2) on what criteria Schroder Wagg was selected to advise on a trade sale in the course of electricity privatisation from June to August 1990.

Mr. Wakeham: The firm was selected on the usual principal of their experience and expertise in the areas in question.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what advice he has received on electricity privatisation during 1991-92.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 23 January 1992, at columns 282-84.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the fees to be paid in 1991-92 for advice on coal privatisation; and what estimate has been made for 1992-93.

Mr. Wakeham: The provision for preliminary expenses in 1991-92 in connection with the privatisation of British Coal is £5 million. Provision for 1992-93 is under consideration.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy further to his answer of 23 January, which of the advisers on electricity privatisation were appointed by competitive tender.

Mr. Wakeham: As a general rule the advisers listed in that answer were appointed through a process of competitive tendering. New tenders were not sought for certain of the reporting accountant and property valuer appointments where the firms were already retained by the electricity companies and were judged to have given satisfactory service. Competitions were not held for five contracts, either because they were very small, or on other specific grounds including that of limited alternative sources of expertise.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what were the total fees paid out to underwriters in the course of the privatisation of the regional electricity companies and the generating companies, respectively.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 25 June 1991, at column 437.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether any foreign individuals or organisations have been considered for appointment as consultants on mining safety and coal privatisation.

Mr. Wakeham: No foreign individuals or organisations were considered for appointment as consultant on coal mining safety matters.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all those companies that acted as underwriters to the sale of the regional electricity companies, and of the generating companies, respectively, giving the date of their appointments in each case.

Mr. Wakeham: J. Henry Schroder Wagg and Co. Limited was appointed in September 1990, as the Government's lead underwriters to the regional electricity companies sale, to assemble the underwriting group listed below as shown in the prospectus. The underwriting was secured by competitive tender, not by appointment.

Underwriters to the regional electricity companies sale

J. Henry Schroder Wagg and Co. Ltd.
Barclays de Zoete Wedd Ltd.
Baring Brothers and Co. Ltd.
The British Linen Bank Ltd.
Chartered WestLB Ltd.
Charterhouse Bank Ltd.
County NatWest Ltd.
Robert Fleming and Co. Ltd.
Guinness Mahon and Co. Ltd.
Hill Samuel Bank Ltd.
N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd.
Laing and Cruickshank
Lloyds Merchant Bank Ltd.
Samuel Montagu and Co. Ltd.
Morgan Grenfell and Co. Ltd.
Paribas Ltd.
Swiss Bank Corporation
UBS Phillips and Drew Securities Ltd.
S. G. Warburg and Co. Ltd.

There was no primary underwriting for the generating companies sale.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy which of the organisations that have advised or are advising on electricity and coal privatisation respectively, have been criticised in public reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. Wakeham: Of the advisers listed in my answers to the hon. Member on 23 January 1992, at columns 282-84, such references have been made to the following firms engaged on electricity privatisation:

Coopers & Lybrand Deloitte; Ernst & Young; James Capel; Kleinwort Benson; Peat Marwick McLintock; Price Waterhouse; Smith New Court; and Spicer & Oppenheim.

The extent of criticism varies in scale, and reference should be made to the relevant reports.

No such references have been made to any of the advisers listed as engaged on coal privatisation.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are his current duties in relation to the co-ordination of Government publicity.

Mr. Wakeham: My responsibilities for co-ordinating the development of the presentation of Government policy are unchanged.

Coal Imports

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's estimate of the likely total coal imports in the current financial year in both volume and value.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department does not make such estimates. Provisional figures suggest that the volume of coal imports in calendar year 1991 was 19·5 million tonnes and the value was £702 million.

British Coal (Chairman)

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has set objectives for the chairman of the British Coal Corporation.

Mr. Wakeham: I have agreed objectives with Neil Clarke, chairman of the British Coal Corporation, as follows:

1. The overall objective of the Corporation must be to develop a coal mining business that achieves sustainable profitability. British Coal must of course operate within the financial framework set by Government, and notably the Corporation's external financing limit and the required rate of return of at least 8 per cent. in real terms on the Corporation's investment programme. Specific objectives should be:
   (i) to achieve a profit (after interest and tax) on a group basis over the period 1991-92 to 1993-94;
   (ii) to achieve in the deep mine sector over that period an overall operating profit while at least breaking even on operational cash flow, including operational capital expenditure;
   (iii) to withdraw from all presently loss making business where practicable except in cases where there is the realistic prospect of achieving sustained profitability in the foreseeable future;
2. The Corporation should further review its policies on licensing both deep mines and opencast operations so as to enable the expansion of competitive private sector coal production.
3. The Corporation should continue to develop policies to mitigate adverse environmental effects arising from its activities.
4. The safety of all persons at British Coal workplaces must remain the Corporation's overriding concern. The safety objectives should be to aim for zero fatalities and progressively to reduce the reportable accident rate from that experienced in 1990-91.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools (Selection)

14. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the effects of the Greenwich judgment on the selection of schools.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Greenwich judgment widened the choice of school available to some parents by requiring applications from those living outside a local authority's area to be considered in the same way as those living within it. At our request, the London Boroughs Association and individual local authorities have submitted evidence about the effects of the Greenwich judgment on school admissions in 1991. I am considering the evidence and will give my conclusions soon.

Education Administration (Lancashire)

16. Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the annual cost per pupil of administration on education of Lancashire county council in the latest year available.

Mr. Fallon: The information from Lancashire's section 42 budget statement for 1991-92 shows that the annual cost of administration per pupil is £60.

Teacher Supply

17. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his current assessment of teacher supply.

Mr. Fallon: Teacher supply has improved significantly —vacancies in 1991 fell by 20 per cent. and recruitment to teacher training rose by 21 per cent. These improvements are particularly marked in those subjects and locations to which it is traditionally difficult to recruit. Government efforts to make teaching more attractive are working and will be maintained to meet rising demand through the 1990s.

Grant-maintained Schools

18. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress he can report on applications for, and agreement of, grant-maintained status.

Mr. Eggar: There are currently 168 schools approved for grant-maintained status, of which 143 are operating. Another 76 schools have published proposals, 43 schools are committed to publish proposals following a yes vote. A further 49 schools are committed to holding a ballot of parents on grant-maintained status.

22. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many school applications for grant-maintained status are now in the pipeline; how many other school reorganisation applications are currently before him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: A total of 168 schools are now in the process of applying for grant-maintained status, with published proposals, yes votes or ballots pending. There are currently some 118 proposals for school reorganisation under section 12 or 13 of the Education Act 1980 before the Secretary of State for decision. This figure excludes proposals which are expected to be determined by local education authorities. Where there are conflicting proposals, my right hon. and learned Friend is obliged to consider one set of proposals against the other and then decide on the grant-maintained proposals first, followed by the proposals from the local education authority and the governors of the voluntary-aided schools.

Primary Schools

20. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the implementation of the national curriculum in primary schools.

Mr. Eggar: The implementation of the national curriculum in primary schools is proceeding well, thanks in large part to the dedication and hard work of teachers, and is already achieving our objective of improving the quality of education offered to children.

Student Grants

21. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the efficacy of the distribution of mandatory student grants by local education authorities in the current academic year.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Most local education authorities have managed to administer the record numbers of student awards this year on a satisfactory timescale. It is a matter for regret that a number of authorities, however, allowed significant backlogs to occur last autumn. My Department has investigated the complaints we have received, and has reminded the authorities in question of their obligations.

Grammar Schools

23. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards grammar schools.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government do not intend to impose any particular organisational pattern for schools. I believe in a diversity of provision of schools and I am ready to consider any application for change of character of school put forward by a local education authority for a maintained school or the governing body of a voluntary-aided or grant-maintained school. I will consider each application for a change of character from comprehensive to selective entry on its individual merits.

25. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many grammar schools have been closed since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: In January 1991 there were 106 fewer maintained grammar schools in England than there had been in January 1979. However it does not follow that this represents the number of actual closures in that period, since some of these may, for example, have merged with other schools, or transferred to the independent sector, or changed status within the maintained sector.

Teacher Training

24. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on his proposals for the reform of teacher training.

26. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the future of teacher training.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In my recent speech to the north of England education conference I announced that I would shortly be issuing a consultation document about my proposals for the reform of initial teacher training.

The consultation document has been issued today. It sets out proposed arrangements for partnerships between higher education institutions and schools, draft criteria for the approval of school-based secondary postgraduate courses and new procedures for the approval of courses. Copies have been placed in the Libraries.

Secondary schools, higher education institutions, teacher associations, teacher training organisations, Church bodies and others interested in teacher education are being invited to comment. The consultation period will last until the end of March.

School Repairs

27. Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how far his recent announcement of capital allocation meets the backlog in repairs and maintenance of schools.

Mr. Fallon: Between 1986-87 and 1989-90, local education authorities spent over £2 billion on school buildings. We have provided a further £1·8 billion worth of annual capital guidelines and grant to local education authorities and governors of voluntary-aided schools since 1990-91. This will have done much to remedy the deficiencies noted in the 1986 survey of school buildings.

National Curriculum

28. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what expenditure was incurred by his Department in providing and issuing printed material including binders concerned with the national curriculum and the assessment of children in 1990 and 1991; and what is his estimate of the amount which this involved per teacher in the state school system.

Mr. Eggar: Expenditure by the Department on printed material concerned with the national curriculum and assessment amounted to some £2·5 million in the financial year 1990-91 and some £1·3 million in the period April to December 1991, total of £3·8 million.

There are about 400,000 teachers in maintained primary and secondary schools in England. The cost of these documents works out at roughly £9 per teacher on average.

138. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to ensure that local education authorities remain able to monitor the delivery of the national curriculum within the schools throughout their area.

Mr. Eggar: Under our proposals, local authorities will be sent full inspection reports every four years on every school they maintain. They will have annual information about assessment results across the national curriculum at four key ages. For the first time authorities will have reports and tables of information which apply national standards to their schools and show clearly what they are achieving.

School Building

29. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when they will be publishing their conclusions on the review of school building programmes.

Mr. Fallon: The results of the review of the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981, which the Department is currently undertaking with the Welsh Office, are expected to be available towards the end of this year.

Northumberland Schools

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what visits he has made to schools in Northumberland.

Mr. Fallon: None.

Non-vocational Education

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that adult non-vocational education will continue at the present level in 1992-93.

Mr. Eggar: The level of provision for the further education of adults is a matter for individual local education authorities. The 1992-93 revenue support grant settlement allows for spending on education by local authorities to rise by 7 per cent.—substantially above inflation.

GCSE Passes

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the national average in schools for (a) the number of GCSE passes at A to C level for each child in the fifth form, (b) the percentage of children in the fifth form acquiring five or more GCSE passes at A to C level and (c) the percentage of grade A passes at A-level of the total subject entries.

Mr. Eggar: The average number of GCSE passes at grades A to C for 16-year-old pupils in schools in England in 1989-90 was 3·2. The proportion of 16-year-olds gaining five or more grades A to C at GCSE in the same year was 34·5 per cent. The proportion of attempts at A-level by school leavers in 1989-90, which resulted in grade A passes, was 14 per cent.

Further Education Funding Councils

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether, under the Further and Higher Education Bill [Lords], the further education funding councils will be required to provide any educational provisions or facilities without charge to the student; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: There is no such requirement in the Further and Higher Education Bill but the Government have no intention of changing present practice whereby young people aged 16 to 18 attending full-time further education are not charged for the tuition they receive.

Adult Education (Liverpool)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funding is available for adult education in Liverpool; how much is currently spent on adult education classes; how many courses and classes (a) are currently available and (b) were available in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1985, in Liverpool.

Mr. Eggar: In addition to grants for education support and training, spending on the further education of adults is covered by the education element of Liverpool's standard spending assessment, which is £202·941 million for the financial year 1991-92. It is not possible to identify within this figure a sum specifically for the education of adults.

In 1989-90, the latest year for which actual spending information is available, Liverpool LEA's net recurrent expenditure on the education of adults provided in separate adult institutions was £1·484 million. The cost of education for adults provided within further education colleges is not separately collected.

Information is not collected on numbers of courses and classes. The number of enrolments of those aged 19 and over in LEA maintained further education in Liverpool were (i) 23,700 in 1980-81—figures for 1979-80 are not available centrally—(ii) 29,900 in 1985-86 and (iii) 36,800 in 1990-91.

Sixth-Form Education

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of sixth form education is provided in single-sex schools.

Mr. Eggar: In January 1991, 15 per cent. of sixth form pupils in maintained schools in England were taught in single-sex schools.

Outside Toilets

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to update the 1977 survey conducted by his Department and the Welsh Office concerning information on the number of schools with outside toilets.

Mr. Fallon: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. O'Hara) on 27 January 1992, at column 422.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Coopers and Lybrand

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the projects, the purposes, and the cost of his Department's use of the Coopers and Lybrand group since 1989.

Mr. Jack: The projects, and their purposes, which involved the use of Coopers and Lybrand—Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte since 1989-90 are as follows. We have not supplied information on the cost of this work as to do so could be a breach of commercial confidentiality.

Project title	Purpose
Agency Systems Planning—Various	Assistance given to the Department's Agency Systems Planning branch in connection with agency planning and implementation.
Agency Systems Planning, Training Seminars for Leaders	The provision of seminars on project management awareness for leaders of the DSS Agency Implementation Team.
Senior Management Structure—Organisational Analysis and Design	Provision of advice and the analysis of organisational issues pertinent to Social Security benefit delivery.
Procurement Management Information System (PROMIS Project)	To introduce a common purchasing system to cover all expenditure on goods and services.
Creation of the Purchasing and Supply Manual	The creation of a manual to act as a comprehensive guide to purchasing responsibilities and procedures.
Property Consultancy for Headquarters Relocation	Feasibility study into various aspects of staff accommodation costs during the period of relocation of DSS headquarters to Leeds.

Project title	Purpose
Development of Project Timetable, Critical Path and Monitoring for Benefit Agency Implementation Team	Identification of tasks needed to ensure the effective implementation of the Benefits Agency including their relationships, dependencies and timing.
Single Terminal Access Project (STAP) —Logo Design	To design a logo which may be affixed by the STAP suppliers to equipment prior to delivery.
Single Terminal Access (STAP) —Consortium Project	The provision of project management, financial and accounting and quality assurance advice as part of the Siemens Nixdorf consortium.
Customer Satisfaction Survey	To determine the level of customer satisfaction with ITSA and its products and services to enable ITSA to focus more sharply on customer needs.

Disability Working Allowance

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, when calculating housing benefit, it will be assumed that a claimant eligible for disability working allowance has claimed and is receiving it; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The determination of a claim for housing benefit is a matter for the local authority concerned. Regulations provide that in making that determination, a claimant shall be treated as possessing certain income which would become available if he applied for it. However, the qualifying conditions for disability working allowance are such that the local authority would not normally be able to anticipate the outcome of a claim for that benefit. We would not therefore expect disability working allowance to be taken into account as income until entitlement has been established and benefit awarded.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what alternatives he is considering to the disability working allowance scheme before it is introduced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: None.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what monitoring of the levels of employer provision for occupational pension funds takes place by Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement on the current trends in provision.

Miss Widdecombe: The monitoring of pension funds is a function of the Occupational Pensions Board—OPB—an independent statutory body, and the Inland Revenue. The OPB monitoring is focused on the ability of a fund which is used for contracting out of state earnings-related pensions to meet its liability for guaranteed minimum pensions, and not on the level of the employer's provision. The Inland Revenue monitors occupational pension funds which are tax approved and have 12 or more members by requiring an actuarial valuation every 3·5 years.

Earnings-related Supplement

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the estimated current cash value would be of the earnings-related supplement awarded to unemployed people at the time of its abolition in 1981, using the growth in earnings since 1981 as the uprating factor.

Mr. Jack: Using the latest average weekly rate of earnings-related supplement—November 1980—and uprating by the growth in earnings between April 1981 and April 1991, the value would be £9·80 a week.

Source:
The earnings index used is the New Series Index (Whole Economy) Seasonally Adjusted.

Asbestos-related Diseases

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the numbers of disablement benefit claims for asbestos-related diseases referred to special medical boards, and the number in which the disease were diagnosed, for all available years commencing with 1988 in the same format as the tables given in reply to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) 30 June 1988, Official Report, columns 343-48.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the tables.

MINIS

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what developments have taken place in his Department's use of the management information system for Ministers during his tenure as Secretary of State; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: MINIS is not a part of the Department's planning system.

Pensioners' Incomes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of pensioners are in the top half of income distribution; and what was the comparable figure for 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: In 1987, 28 per cent. of pensioners were in the top half of the total income distribution, compared with only 24 per cent. in 1979.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements are currently undertaken by his Department to monitor the time taken to reply to a Member's letter passed on by his Department for attention of the Benefits Agency.

Miss Widdecombe: A computer record is maintained of all such letters, and any overdue replies pursued. Ministers receive a copy of all replies. It is the agency's aim to reply to all letters as quickly as possible once the facts of the case have been established. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind perhaps he would write to me.

Special Medical Boards

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the names of all the medical practitioners appointed to serve on special medical boards at each medical boarding centre, respiratory diseases; and whether they are full time or part time.

Mr. Scott: The doctors appointed to serve on special medical boards at medical boarding centres (respiratory diseases), are either full-time employees of the Benefits Agency, or work for the agency on a part-time sessional basis. Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Financial Management Initiative

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what use he makes of the Department's financial management initiative programme.

Miss Widdecombe: The main objectives of the financial management initiative—FMI—which was launched in May 1982, were to promote organisations and systems which enabled managers at all levels to have a clear view of their objectives, measure performance in relation to those objectives and make best use of resources including securing value for money. The FMI has since largely become an all-embracing term for improvement in management in the civil service. The "next steps" initiative has been a logical development of the FMI.

The organisation and management systems which now exist and continue to be developed enable Ministers to give clear strategic direction, firmly related to government policy objectives, which informs the setting of planning objectives; determine the financial resources to be made available; select suitably robust and meaningful targets covering quality of service, financial performance and efficiency; and call chief executives to account.

Expenditure Statistics

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was spending on (a) the disabled and (b) the retired in real terms in (i) 1979, (ii) 1983, (iii) 1987 and (iv) 1990-91.

Mr. Scott: Social Security spending on long-term sick and disabled people and elderly people is given in the table. All figures are at 1990-91 prices.

	Disabled people £ million	Elderly people £ million
1978-79	4,469	22,097
1982-83	5,468	25,123
1986-87	8,014	28,454
1990-91	10,118	28,590

Note:
1990-91 figures are estimated outturn.

Arachnoiditis

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what benefits are available to sufferers from arachnoiditis; and whether such sufferers can claim mobility allowance.

Mr. Scott: A wide range of benefits, including mobility allowance, is available to sufferers of arachnoiditis, provided they meet the conditions of entitlement.

Invalidity Benefit

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether an employment training participant who was previously receiving invalidity benefit continues to be eligible for the therapeutic allowance of £39 per week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Anyone receiving invalidity benefit who is also doing therapeutic work may continue with this work after transferring to employment training, provided that he fulfills the conditions of his employment training plan.

Earnings Disregard

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether an employment training participant who was previously receiving the income support disability premium continues to be eligible for the earnings disregard of £15 a week; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Eligibility to the £15 a week earnings disregard will continue as long as the disability premium remains in payment. People who have been receiving the disability premium will normally retain entitlement to it while undertaking employment training. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind, perhaps she would like to write to me.

Disability Living Allowance Forms

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make available a stock of disability living allowance forms to recognised advice agencies such as welfare rights units and citizens advice bureaux.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 13 January, at column 516.

Housing Benefits

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide for each district and islands council in Scotland for each available year starting from 1985-86 (a) a breakdown of the numbers of housing benefit claimants split into rent rebate and rent allowance categories and the total amounts paid under each heading, (b) the numbers and amounts of housing benefit backdated payments—regulation 72(15)—and the amount paid as a percentage of each local authority's housing benefit expenditure, (c) the numbers, amounts and percentage of amount in relation to total housing benefit expenditure in relation to discretionary payments—regulations 69(8)—and (d) a breakdown of the categories of housing benefit over-payments and details of the numbers in each category, giving the amounts in each category and the amount as a percentage of housing benefit expenditure.

Miss Widdecombe: Such information as is available has been placed in the Library.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the performance of local authorities in relation to the incentive areas in housing benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: The incentive arrangements are designed to encourage prudent behaviour by local authorities in the administration of housing benefit and community charge benefit. A lower subsidy is paid to local authorities if they incur benefit expenditure in circumstances in which they have most scope to control costs.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the rule under which housing benefit to single people is reduced because of the housing benefit downrating rule after they have been in hospital for six weeks.

Miss Widdecombe: The majority of people are discharged from hospital within six weeks, and consequently housing benefit is not affected. For single people remaining in hospital beyond six weeks, housing benefit is calculated on the basis of a lower personal allowance. However, where someone continues to receive income support their housing benefit entitlement is unchanged and, overall, the system helps to ensure that claimants have sufficient income over and above the amount of their personal allowance to meet their eligible rent. These rules recognise the principle that the national health service provides free maintenance as well as free treatment for hospital in-patients, and that public funds should not make double provision for the same needs.

Family Credit

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families employed in farming were receiving family credit on 30 April 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. The number of families receiving family credit on 30 April 1991 in farming, fishing, and related occupations was 9,000.
Source: 5 per cent. sample of the Family Credit caseload.

Social Fund

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of state for Social Security (1) how many applications for review by a social fund inspector were outstanding for more than one month on 30 November;

(2) how many social fund inspectors were employed on 30 November.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by the Social Fund Commissioner that on 30 November 1991, there were 66 social fund inspectors employed, and 3,167 review applications were outstanding for more than one month.

Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the projected amount to be transferred in April 1993 in the care element of the social security budget for residential and nursing home care; and at what stage the balance between the housing and care elements will be determined.

Miss Widdecombe: The amount of the transfer has yet to be determined. We expect to be able to make an announcement shortly about the housing element for people entering residential care and nursing homes from April 1993.

Benefit Deductions

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost to public funds of employing staff in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 respectively, in the posts allocated to making poll tax deductions from benefits.

Miss Widdecombe: The resourcing of Benefits Agency offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Income-related Benefits

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will itemise the elements used to calculate the entitlements for income-related benefits such as income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: The applicable amounts used to calculate income-related benefits are intended to cover all normal day-to-day living expenses and do not include separate amounts for specific items.

Attendance Allowance

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to distribute claim forms for attendance allowance for terminally ill people (DS 1500) to social workers employed by local authorities.

Mr. Scott: Claim forms for attendance allowance are available to social workers. The DS1500 is not a claim form; it is a medical report form.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evidence he has on the efficiency of general practitioners in administering the DS 1500 claim form for attendance allowance for terminally ill people.

Mr. Scott: The DS1500 is not a claim form; it is a medical report which supports an attendance allowance claim made on the grounds of terminal illness. There is no evidence to suggest that general practitioners are failing to provide these reports.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Industrial Development

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Industrial Development Board and the Local Enterprise Development Unit has to implement the Government's new economic strategy of growing competitive industries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Industrial Development Board's plans are set out in its forward strategy published in December 1990 and in the document "Competitiveness and Growth" published in June 1991. The Local Enterprise Development Unit's plans are detailed in "Forward Thinking" published in May 1991. Copies of these documents are available in the Library.

Tobacco Industry

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of people employed in the tobacco industry in Northern Ireland (a) at the last date and (b) five years ago.

Mr. Needham: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Exports

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the level of exports from Northern Ireland in 1991.

Mr. Needham: The information is not available. Figures for the export of goods from the United Kingdom are available only by point of exit, not by point of origin.

Northern Ireland Tourist Board

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when Mr. Eddie Friel ceased to be chief executive of the Northern Ireland tourist board; what financial provision has been made him arising from this cessation of his employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: I understand from the chairman of the Northern Ireland tourist board that Mr. E. J. Friel resigned as chief executive on 11 December 1991 and that, following his resignation, financial provision was made in accordance with the terms of Mr. Friel's appointment to the staff of the board.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the basis of payment to the chairman of the Northern Ireland tourist board; how many hours per week he works for the board; if he is involved in its day-to-day management; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Payment to the chairman of the board is on the basis that he devotes 2·5 days per week to its business. The board is responsible for the discharge of its statutory functions and it is for the board to decide what authority to delegate to its employees and how this is to be discharged.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the hon. Hugh O'Neill was appointed as chairman of the Northern Ireland tourist board; how many persons have served as chief executive since that date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Mr. O'Neill was first appointed chairman of the Northern Ireland tourist board on 1 July 1988 for a term of three years and reappointed on 1 July 1991 for a further three-year term. Following the Government's review of tourism in 1989, the then chief executive decided to take early retirement and was, at the invitation of the board succeeded by a Northern Ireland civil servant seconded to the board as executive director to help implement the new tourism strategy. Early last year, the civil servant indicated that, on completing 40 years' service in the Northern Ireland civil service, he would wish to retire in the late summer. The board decided therefore to recruit a chief executive and Mr. E. J. Friel was appointed with effect from 1 September 1991. Mr. Friel resigned, for personal and family reasons, on 11 December 1991 and the board appointed the deputy chief executive to temporarily act as the chief executive.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Northern Ireland tourist board will advertise the position of chief executive; if there will be any change in the terms of reference for this post from those previously applicable and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: I understand from the chairman of the Northern Ireland tourist board that the chief executive post will be advertised very shortly and that there will be no significant change in the chief executive's responsibilities from those previously advertised.

Belfast International Airport

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern ireland what facilities at Belfast international airport are made available for party political meetings; whether these facilities have been made available for members of the Conservative party; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Belfast international airport is a commercial enterprise which includes, in its facilities, a business centre available for private hire at the discretion of the airport company.

Rathlin Island (Electricity)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when mains electricity will be available on Rathlin Island; what number and proportion of householders will be connected; and how and where the electricity will be generated.

Mr. Needham: Mains electricity is expected to be available in September 1992. Forty-one householders—79 per cent.—have applied to be connected. Electricity will be generated on the island by wind turbines backed up by diesel generators.

House Building

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new houses have been built by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in each of the last five years; and what are the projected new start figures for the next three years.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive whose chief executive has advised me that it has started the following numbers of new dwellings in the last five years.

Year	Number
1986-87	1,675
1987-88	1,632
1988-89	1,554
1989-90	1,404
1990-91	1,007

The executive expects to start building 800 new dwellings in the current year but it has not yet proposed how its resources should be allocated for the next three years. Consequently, it is not possible to provide projected figures.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new starts have been made by housing associations in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years; and what are the projected figures for each of the next three years.

Mr. Needham: The position for registered housing associations is as follows:

New Starts Year	Dwellings (Self-contained)	Hostel Bedspaces (Shared)
1987-88	692	285
1988-89	378	236
1989-90	623	41
1990-91	733	259
[1]1991-92	610	290
1992-93	600	250
1993-94	660	280
1994-95	720	300

[1]Figures for 1991-92 are estimated.

Social Security Allowances

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many people in Northern Ireland have been in receipt of mobility allowance; and what has been the cost of this provision in each of the last five years;

(2) how many people in Northern Ireland have been in receipt of attendance allowance; and what has been the cost of the provision in each of the last five years;

(3) how many applications for mobility allowance in Northern Ireland have been (a) turned down and (b) granted upon appeal after initially being refused, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Hanley: Social Security operational matters are the responsibility of Mr. Alec Wylie, chief executive of the Social Security Agency. He will write to the hon. Gentleman and copies of his reply will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Repair and Improvement Grants

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) repair grants and (b) improvement grants have been made available by the Housing Executive in the last five years; and what has been the cost of the provision of these grants.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive whose chief executive has advised me that the information is as follows:

Year	Improvement Grants Number	Cost £ million	Repair Grants Number	Cost £ million
1990-91	2,699	21·3	3,894	9·4
1989-90	2,906	22·6	4,439	10·7
1988-89	3,539	23·6	6,267	12·2
1987-88	3,973	29·4	5,001	15·3
1986-87	4,868	34·8	10,622	21·1

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Housing Executive dwellings have been improved in each of the last five years; and what are the projected figures for the next three years.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive whose chief executive has advised me that the number of its dwellings improved in each of the last five years was as follows:

	Number
1986-87	19,560
1987-88	37,036
1988-89	29,545
1989-90	13,095
1990-91	10,895

The executive expects to improve 9,450 dwellings in the current year but it has not yet proposed how its resources should be allocated for the next three years.

The high figures for 1987-88 and 1988-89 were due to the combined effect of a major insulation programme and the installation of new heating systems as a result of gas supplies being withdrawn.

House Improvements

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many houses in Northern Ireland have been improved by housing associations in each of the last five years; and how many are projected to be started in each of the next three years.

Mr. Needham: The position for registered housing associations is as follows:

Rehabilitation Starts	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92[1]	1992-93	1993-94	1994-95
Dwellings (Self-Contained)	75	118	279	101	130	100	110	120
Hostel Bedspaces (Shared)	106	272	103	83	70	50	50	60

[1] Figures for 1991-92 are estimated.

Bus Exhaust Emissions

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland further to his answer to the hon. Member for Antrim, South on 13 January, Official Report, column 482, if he will list the specific measures being taken by Ulsterbus and Citybus to reduce exhaust emissions during their maintenance of buses.

Mr. Needham: I am advised by the managing director of Ulsterbus and Citybus Ltd. that as a routine part of the vehicle maintenance programme oil samples are taken from engines and subjected to spectographic analysis. This identifies at an early stage engines not functioning properly and enables remedial action to be taken.

DEFENCE

Military Training

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now cease the practice of offering military training by United Kingdom service men, or individuals privately contracted within his Department, to security personnel from (a) China, (b) indonesia, (c) Iraq and (d) Sri Lanka.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No military training is currently provided for China or Iraq. Personnel from Indonesia and Sri Lanka receive some military training in the United Kingdom. There are no plans to cease this practice.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the extent, content and scope of human rights instruction offered as part of military training of nationals other than United Kingdom nationals, by United Kingdom service men or individuals privately contracted within his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West, (Mr. Flynn) on 21 January 1992, Official Report, at column 188.

Privatisations

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give in respect of each privatisation since 1979 (a) the loss or profit for the five years prior to privatisation and (b) any grants or loans made over the same period.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The only privatisation that my Department has undertaken since 1979 was the sale of Royal Ordnance plc, following an open competition, to British Acrospace plc in April 1987. The trading results of the ROF's trading fund, which operated from 1 July 1974 to 1 January 1985, and of the successor company, after 2 January 1985, are given in the relevant published accounts. These were summarised in figure 1 of the Comptroller and Auditor General's report, "Ministry of Defence: Sale of Royal Ordnance plc", HC 162.

Detailed records of my Department's financial transactions with the ROFs are no longer readily available. Precise information concerning any grants or loans in the period in question could therefore be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

REME Building, Woolwich Common

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about possible soil contamination at the REME building at Woolwich Common; and if he will publish the results of his Department's inquiries on the matter.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Representations have been received from a local resident; the health, environment and public protection committee of the London borough of Greenwich; the Ministry of Defence's Council of Civil Service Unions; and from some members of the garrison work force. The small amount of contamination poses no danger to members of the public and we are formulating plans for its removal. Results of the Department's monitoring survey have been made available to the local authority and to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Byelaws (Breaches)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who gave instructions to Ministry of Defence police to arrest for breaches of the Forest Moor and Menwith Hill byelaws on 31 July 1991; and what is the current procedure for dealing with people who breach the byelaws.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answers I gave the hon. Member on 23 January at columns 338-39.

Diversification

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to assist diversification by companies in the light of changing requirements.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leith (Mr. Brown) on 17 December 1991, Official Report, column 147.

Mr. Bill Weir

Mr. Flynn: to ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the grades and duties of the posts held in his Department by Mr. Bill Weir since 1989.

Mr. Alan Clark: Mr. Weir is a grade 7 scientist who, during the period in question, has served as a metallurgist on the central staff of the Ministry of Defence.

Submarine Berthing Tugs

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his plans for placing an order for submarine berthing tugs.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I am pleased to announce that an order has been placed with Richard Dunston (Hessle) Ltd. of north Humberside to build two new submarine berthing tugs. The tugs will operate at the Clyde submarine base. The approximate value of the order is £10 million and delivery of the tugs is planned for spring 1993.

The tugs will be a valuable addition to the fleet of Royal Maritime Auxiliary Service support craft that carry out a range of tasks and which, while largely unsung, make a significant contribution to the efficient and effective operation of the Royal Navy.

International Arms Sales Register

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are in hand for British participation in the register of international arms sales, effected on 1 January.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply.

Information on 1992 weapons deliveries for the purposes of the register will be required by the UN by 30 April 1993. The disclosure by Britain of such information will require additional powers. The Government intend to bring the necessary legislation before the House early in the next Parliament. In the meantime, the Department of Trade and Industry has written to exporters of equipment in the register's categories to advise them of the need to provide information early next year.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Imported Meat Products

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to ensure that imported meat products from eastern Europe (a) do not undermine domestic producers and (b) are not imported into the EC without satisfactory health checks and proof of origin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Community beef and pigmeat markets are protected by a system of minimum import prices and import levies. Some imports are permitted at reductions in the levy under concessionary schemes reflecting obligations entered into by the Euroepan Community and its trading partners in the context of multilateral trade negotiations. The concessions are limited to quantities which represent around 5 per cent. of total Community production of beef are less than 1 per cent. for pigmeat. They are broadly based on existing trade patterns and are therefore unlikely to cause disruption to domestic markets. In the case of sheepmeat, imports are governed by voluntary restraint agreements which in 1991, limited the quantity imported from eastern Europe to 26,000 tonnes. This represents less than 2·5 per cent of Community production.

Imports of meat and meat products into the Community from third countries, including eastern European countries, are required, under the terms of Community directives, to have been produced to public health standards at least as stringent as those governing intra-Community trade. As a guarantee that these standards have been met, consignments must be health marked with an approved form of label or stamp identifying the establishment of origin and accompanied by certificates issued by an official veterinarian of the exporting country. In Great Britain checks on consignments and their documentation are undertaken by port health authorities. As yet, Community law on these matters is not fully harmonized. However, as part of the single market arrangements, all imports of animal products from outside the Community will be subject to a specified regime of checks on imports of meat and meat products from outside the Community. Entry will be restricted to specific frontier posts having adequate staff and facilities to carry out the checks. Commission inspection teams will be responsible for ensuring that these rules are implemented fully by all member states.

I believe that these arrangements, essential to the single market, will be sufficient to ensure that imports do not present a health risk to consumers in the Community.

Sugar Beet

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total acreage permitted for the growing of sugar beet in north Yorkshire; and what variations have occurred in the last three years.

Mr. Curry: The areas of sugar beet grown under quota in the county of north Yorkshire for 1989 and 1990 were as follows:

	1989	1990
Hectares	12,794	12,469
Acres (approx.)	31,600	30,800

Source: June Census.

Reorganisation of British Sugar plc's processing arrangements will have resulted in an increase in acreage for 1991, but county figures are not yet available.

British Sugar plc is responsible for contracting with growers with a view to fulfilment of the United Kingdom white sugar quota. This is done in terms of tonnage of beet delivered to processing factories and not of area cultivated.

Canada Geese

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has undertaken regarding the humane control of Canada geese; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Research into Canada geese undertaken at the Ministry's central science laboratory is concentrated on techniques for control during the close season, when licences are required for the killing or taking of the geese and their eggs. Recent research, now almost completed, has focused on a simple method of making Canada goose eggs unviable without causing undue suffering to the adult birds. Research is also being undertaken on the population dynamics and movements of Canada geese to provide background for future studies on the effects that various control methods have on population size and movement.

Irradiation

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy that any irradiated ingredients of compound ingredients in foodstuffs should be listed as irradiated ingredients.

Mr. Maclean: Rules for the labelling of all foods and listed food ingredients which have been irradiated have already been agreed by the EC and implemented by the Government. Further proposals on food irradiation currently before the Council of Ministers include more detailed rules on the labelling of irradiated ingredients. I am seeking to ensure that the further requirements on ingredient declarations are as comprehensive as practicable.

Ghana

Mr. Alton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulations United Kingdom food exporters specialising in the export of meat have to observe when exporting to Ghana; and what procedures enable intervention beef to be exported to Ghana by British export companies.

Mr. Maclean: There are no specific regulations governing the export of meat from the United Kingdom to Ghana. Exporters must comply with the relevant Ghanaian import requirements. To enable British exporters to satify these requirements the Agriculture Departments can provide veterinary certificates confirming the health status of the meat, based on our current understanding of the Ghanaian import conditions.

EC export refunds are available for open market and intervention beef sent to Ghana, subject to compliance with normal Community rules.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the refrigerated lorries used to store BSE carcases while awaiting incineration are dedicated completely to this purpose alone; what regulations cover the storage of BSE carcases in refrigerated lorries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The refrigerated containers used for BSE carcases are dedicated to this purpose. Their use is controlled and monitored by the State Veterinary Service.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food further to his answer of 23 January, how many cows with bovine spongiform encephalopathy have been identified (a) on the farm, (b) at the livestock market, (c) at the slaughterhouse and (d) at other locations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The information for Great Britain requested by year is as follows:

	1988	1989	1990	[1]1991
Number of BSE cases confirmed:
(a) on farm	2,142	7,008	13,936	21,404
(b) at markets	16	55	106	140
(c) at abattoirs	27	73	137	111

[1]Provisional.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many carcasses of cattle with bovine spongiform encephalopathy were (a) buried or (b) incinerated in the United Kingdom during 1991.

Mr. Gummer: Between 1 January 1991 and 31 October 1991 a total of 353 carcasses were buried and 23,968 were incinerated.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food further to his answer of 23 January, if he will list the location of storage centres where bovine spongiform encephalopathy carcasses can be stored which are not dedicated for this purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: There are none.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration has been given to the animal welfare implications of EC directive 91/497 in respect of the additional distances animals may have to travel before slaughter.

Mr. Maclean: Animals can be transported satisfactorily with proper safeguards. The Transit of Animals (Road and Rail) Order 1975 requires food and water to be offered at intervals not exceeding 12 hours. There will continue to be opportunities for all sizes of business under the single market rules.

Agricultural Land (Planning Applications)

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the effect of the planning policy guidance note on the countryside and rural economy on his Department's policy on planning applications affecting the development of agricultural land.

Mr. Gummer: Planning policy guidance note 7 reaffirms my Department's policy of protecting the best and most versatile agricultural land.

Sheep Dip Products

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the review of sheep dip products has been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The independent Veterinary Products Committee—VPC—has completed the initial phase of its review. It has concluded that at present there is no clear evidence that sheep dips cause an unacceptable level of health risk to humans when used in accordance with the label instructions. Nevertheless the VPC has noted that certain aspects of the products and conditions of use need further evaluation, in particular; the level of purity of the active ingredient; the toxicity of other ingredients and solvents in the product formulations; studies of farm operators, including blood tests and details of protective clothing worn; studies to show which areas of the bodies of operators are most exposed; the persistence of residues in the fleece.

The companies concerned are being asked to provide additional data by the end of 1992. These, together with any further reports of suspected adverse reactions, will then be considered by the VPC. On the basis of its advice, decisions will then be taken by the licensing authority on the future authorisation of sheep dip products.

Meanwhile, it is essential that all those who use sheep dips should read the product labels and follow the manufacturers' instructions for preparing the dip solution and carrying out the dipping. All operators must ensure that they wear the necessary protective clothing when preparing the dip, dipping and handling freshly dipped sheep. The use of sheep dips is subject to the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations. Health and Safety Executive leaflet AS 29 "Sheep Dipping—Protect your Health" sets out the minimum items of personal protective equipment normally identified on the product label and that need to be worn when sheep dipping.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Bolivia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the World bank's forestry and environmental guidelines have been fully applied to the World bank lowlands programme in Bolivia.

Mrs. Chalker: It conforms to the guidelines in force at the time of project approval in 1990.

Mixed Credits

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) which projects funded under the aid-trade provision—ATP—in 1991 would be ineligible for aid funding under the recent OECD agreement on the use of aid in mixed credits; and what is the value of aid and trade provision funds involved;

(2) what effect the recent OECD agreement on the use of aid in mixed credits will have on the British aid programme and the size of the aid trade provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The detailed implementation of this agreement on export and tied aid credits is still under discussion among OECD donors. Its effect on all such donors, including the United Kingdom, will be to reduce aid and trade distortions, and to focus international aid support in areas that need it most. The ATP is presently the subject of a review which will take account of this agreement. Decisions on the future level of the ATP budget will be taken in the light of the review and in the context of the annual planning and budgeting exercise for the aid programme as a whole.

WALES

Waiting Lists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many patients had been waiting for more than (a) four months and (b) one year on a consultant's in-patient waiting list for major joint replacement surgery, as at 1 January in each district health authority in Wales;

(2) how many patients had been waiting for more than (a) four months and (b) one year on a consultant's in-patient waiting list for cataract surgery, on 1 January in each district health authority in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information is collected centrally on a speciality basis but not for specific operations.

A48

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding his proposals to introduce a crawler lane for the A48 at Hardwick Hill, Chepstow; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A climbing lane—crawler lane—formed part of both the red and blue routes included in the public consultation exercise held in the summer of 1988 for the Hardwick hill improvement.

I announced on 9 July 1991 that following a careful assessment of all the options and representations, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State proposed an improvement along the line of the existing A48 as his preferred option.

A summary of all representations made at that time are included in the statement "Results of Public Consultation". Many additional representations have been received since then. These restate the same views by the same interests. Gwent county council as agent is currently preparing possible options for the improvement of Hardwick hill. A climbing lane forms part of one of these options, but it is too early to say whether such a solution would be adopted.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines are currently produced by his Department to local authorities concerning the use of co-disposal, incineration or chemical treatment to deal with waste products.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The following guidelines have been produced:

(a) Co-disposal—Waste Management Paper No. 26 on Landfilling Wastes.

(b) Incineration—Process guidance notes on the incineration of clinical waste, animal carcasses, general waste and sewage sludge.

(c) Chemical treatment—Processes are to be controlled by HMIP, not local authorities. Guidance notes are in the course of preparation.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many grant applications have been made by each local authority in Wales for the assessment of disused waste disposal sites for potential landfill gas generation and leachate problems.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: None. No grant is available specifically for the purposes indicated.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to introduce guidelines to local authorities concerning the reduction of waste at source and the removal of recyclable material from the waste stream.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Guidance to local authorities on devising and implementing recycling strategies and on the preparation of waste disposal plans was issued in the form of waste management paper No. 28 in July 1991. A draft Welsh Office circular on the recycling credit provisions of section 52 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 together with appropriate draft regulations was sent to local authorities on 21 January in advance of the regulations coming into force on 1 April.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are currently undertaken by his Department to ensure that all waste disposal sites in Wales are properly restored.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: It is for local planning authorities to impose restoration conditions on planning permissions for waste disposal sites. Waste management paper No. 26 advised on the assessment, design, preparation, operation and restoration of such sites.

A465

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he can now give a firm date for construction work to begin on the A465 missing link.

Sir Wyn Roberts: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales explained in his letter of 17 December, the scheme is to start in 1992-93. The precise date is contingent on the management of the trunk road programme as a whole.

Mine Workings (Ferruginous Discharges)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sites in each local authority area in Wales are currently affected by ferruginous discharges from long-abandoned mine workings.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

	Affected sites	Total sites
Clwyd		5
Delyn	1
Glyndwr	1
Wrexham Maelor	3

	Affected sites	Total sites
Gwynedd		3

Tertiary Colleges

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to encourage and promote the development of tertiary colleges.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is for local education authorities to determine the pattern of educational provision for those aged 16 to 19 in their area.

Company Directors (Disqualification)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on granting financial or other assistance to companies whose directors have been disqualified under section 216 of the Insolvency Act 1986.

Mr. David Hunt: Applications for assistance from such companies would be accepted for appraisal in the normal manner, with particular care being paid to the quality of management and the future viability of the company concerned.

Redundancies, Bangor

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what analysis he has made of the impact of recent redundancies in Bangor on (a) the local economy, (b) local families and communities and (c) the individuals directly affected;

(2) what steps he has taken to provide training, job opportunities and other help to those recently made redundant in the Bangor area and others who are already unemployed in the area;

(3) what analysis he made of the job opportunities available to the people recently made redundant in the Bangor area.

Mr. David Hunt: The Employment Service and the local training and enterprise council—Targed—will continue to offer advice to employees faced with redundancy on the range of support services available including retraining, job search and short courses to help those affected reassess their careers. The first tranche of redundant workers from Ferranti have all received counselling interviews and the results are being analysed by Targed. A comprehensive range of services to help longer-term unemployed back to work is also in place and Targed is targeting the employment training and enterprise action programmes on areas of high unemployment including the Bangor area.

In addition my Department, the Welsh Development Agency and other Government agencies operate a wide range of other measures aimed at combating unemployment. The Welsh Office and all the other bodies will continue to look for, and respond swiftly to, development opportunities that arise which have the potential to reduce unemployment.

Denis Ferranti Meters

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what steps have been taken by his Department to help Denis Ferranti Meters to diversify its activities in the light of the direct effects of market changes;

(2) what steps he has taken to assist Denis Ferranti Meters.

Mr. David Hunt: My officials have had many meetings with the company to discuss possible assistance to enable it to diversify; these discussions continue. The Welsh Development Agency also remains in close contact and continues to provide advice on a range of matters, including potential business partners.

Land Drainage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, further to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, columns 77-79, on what basis of previous experience of providing supplementary land drainage in built-up residential areas he has approved the remedial drainage measures envisaged by the development corporation.

Mr. David Hunt: My acceptance in principle of the concept of remedial drainage measures was based on the professional advice of Mr. Roy Stoner, director of the Institute of Irrigation Studies at Southampton university, Hydrotechnica Ltd. and Cardiff Bay development corporation.

Takeovers

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, further to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell) of 20 January, Official Report, column 3, on inward investment, whether the project and job figures include (a) the sale of British Airways aero-engine maintenance base to General Electric, (b) the sale of the Amerlite Division of Amersham International to Kodak and (c) the sale of the Camford engineering subsidiary of Markheath plc to Hoesch.

Mr. David Hunt: The Amersham and Camford Engineering cases were included in the 1991 statistics. The acquisition of British Airways aero-engine plant at Nantgarw will be included in this year's figures.

Inward Investment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, further to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell) of 20 January, Official Report, column 3, on inward investment, what share each county, or other convenient sub-division, received of the projects and promised jobs.

Mr. David Hunt: The projects recorded for each county are as follows:

County	Projects	Total jobs
Clwyd	48	3,052
Dyfed	8	1,290
Gwent	45	3,948
Gwynedd	15	1,579
Powys	3	120
Mid Glamorgan	31	4,705
South Glamorgan	21	1,310
West Glamorgan	12	1,056
TOTAL	183	17,060

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales further to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell) of 20 January, Official Report, column 3, on inward investment, whether the figures for projects and jobs arising from inward investment in 1991 includes any netting off of the effects of disinvestments or closures by previous flows of inward investment.

Mr. David Hunt: No.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales further to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell) of 20 January, Official Report, column 3, on inward investment, what proportion of the projects and jobs promised is related to (a) acquisition of businesses or business premises already in existence in Wales and (b) construction and development of new business premises.

Mr. David Hunt: The 1991 figures include 12 acquisitions—6·5 per cent.—involving 3,839 jobs—22·5 per cent. Records are not kept of the proportion of projects that involve new building.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales further to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell) of 20 January, Official Report, column 3, on inward investment, which of the projects recorded were from (a) firms from overseas new to Wales, (b) firms from overseas already established in Wales, (c) from the rest of the United Kingdom new to Wales and (d) firms from the rest of the United Kingdom already established in Wales; and how many jobs are promised in each case, distinguishing between those to be (i) created and (ii) safeguarded.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is as follows:

	Projects	New Jobs	Safeguarded Jobs
(a)	36	2,659	26
(b)	40	3,708	2,385
(c)	55	1,456	12
(d)	33	1,996	352

The remainder of the 183 projects recorded during 1991 were acquisitions—12 projects, 64 new jobs, 3,775 safeguarded jobs—and joint ventures—seven projects, 255 new jobs, 372 safeguarded jobs.

Electronics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new contracts and business opportunities in (a) the electronics sector, and (b) other sectors have arisen to date from the Minister of State's visit to the middle east in 1991.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the supplementary answer given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, North-West (Sir A. Meyer) on 20 January 1992, at column 5. Direct commercial contacts were the responsibility of the companies which took part in the trade mission, or exhibited at the trade fair. None of the 12 companies taking part in the mission was from the electronics sector; although two of the Welsh companies represented at the Rebuild Kuwait trade fair were. Welsh Office stand at that fair made more than 230 contacts for the 26 companies which it represented; of those, 14 contacts were for companies in electronics sector. Details of these contacts have since been passed to the companies concerned.

Middle East (Visit)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the north Wales companies that were involved in the Minister of State's visit to the middle east last year.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend led 12 companies on a trade mission to Kuwait, none were from north Wales. A further 10 Welsh companies exhibited at the Rebuild Kuwait 1991 trade fair, two of whom were from north Wales. The Welsh Office itself took a stand at the fair in order to represent Welsh companies who were unable to attend themselves. Three of the 26 companies so represented were from north Wales.

Training Resources

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about resources for training in Wales in 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: I am pleased to announce today the resources which will accompany the transfer of responsibility for training to my department in April. I have maintained the overall level of expenditure on training at around this year's level. Subject to parliamentary approval, more than £156 million will be available for training in Wales in 1992-93.

This expenditure will support a range of measures to raise the skill level of people in Wales, and to help those who are unemployed back to work. Most of this will be spent on programmes delivered through training and enterprise councils. Further details will be laid before Parliament in the 1992-93 supply estimate in due course.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will publish a table showing the latest available results from the employment training leavers' survey for each training and enterprise council area in England and Wales and each local enterprise company area in Scotland broken down to show the number and proportion of ET leavers who had (a) been entered for a vocational qualification, (b) obtained a vocational qualification, (c) had failed to obtain a vocational qualification and (d) were awaiting their results; and how many of the ET leavers in the relevant period had completed the training agreed in their initial action plan;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the latest available results from the employment training leavers' survey for each training and enterprise council area in England and Wales and each local enterprise company area in Scotland broken down to show the number and proportion of ET leavers who were (a) in a full-time job with their work experience employer, (b) in a full-time job with another employer, (c) employed in their own business, (d) in a part-time job, (e) in voluntary work, (f) on another Government training programme, (g) on a full-time education or training course, (h) unemployed and claiming benefit, (i) unemployed and not claiming benefit, (j) in a job club and (k) doing something else.

Mr. Jackson: As the information requested is contained in a number of separate tables, I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of (a) men and (b) women living in the Greater London area who are at present taking employment training scheme courses.

Mr. Jackson: The information is not available in the form requested. Training and enterprise councils are required to ensure the promotion of equality of opportunity between all individuals in access to, treatment on, and outcome from the training and enterprise programme covered by the agreement between the Secretary of State and the TECs.

Cotton Spinning

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of employees (whole time equivalent) in (a) the United Kingdom cotton spinning industry and (b) the European cotton spinning industry in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Jackson: Estimates of the number of full and part-time employees in employment are available for the United Kingdom from the periodic censuses of employment and are given in the table. The information collected in the census is not sufficiently detailed to support the accurate calculation of full-time equivalents. Comparable estimates for the European cotton spinning industry are not readily available.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the number of successful prosecutions of employers who have refused to comply with the quota conditions of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 since 1961.

Mr. Jackson: Five employers have been prosecuted and found guilty of offences under provisions of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944, since 1961. One case was in 1964. The employer was convicted of terminating the employment of a registered disabled person without reasonable cause, whilst not employing the 3 per cent. quota of registered disabled people. There was a similar conviction in 1973. In 1975, three employers were convicted, each on two counts, of engaging people who were not registered as disabled, without a permit, while below quota. In all five cases, the employers were fined.

Apex Trust Leicester

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will provide additional resources for Apex Trust Leicester Ltd.

Mr. Jackson: I am not aware of any involvement between the Department and Apex Trust Leicester Ltd. However the Employment Service has a contract with Apex Leicester Project Ltd. for provision of a job club in Leicester. There are no plans to change that contract.

HEALTH

Expenditure, North West Thames Region

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for the North West Thames region and for each of its districts, for each year from 1978-79 onwards, current expenditure on the hospital and community health services (a) in cash terms and (b) adjusted using the appropriate national health service pay and prices index.

Mr. Dorrell: Tables I and II show the information requested for, respectively, North West Thames region and its individual districts for each year since 1982-83. Information on a comparable basis is not available for earlier years because:

(i) North West Thames covered a wider area before 1 April 1982.
(ii) District health authorities did not exist before 1 April 1982.

Table III, however, shows figures for spending in the years 1978-79 to 1981-82 by the North West Thames region as it was then constituted.

All tables show expenditure in cash and in input volume terms. Changes in input volumes are however an inadequate guide to the level of service the National Health Service can be expected to achieve, since they do not reflect the continuing success of the National Health Service in increasing the efficiency with which it uses resources. The third column of each table therefore shows the relevant expenditure figures in real terms, ie adjusted by the gross domestic product deflator.

1980-81	580	1,153	1,065
1981-82	650	1,194	1,088

Notes to the tables:

1. Expenditure on the HCHS covers services directly managed and/or accounted for by the health authorities (at the relevant time) including hospital, community health, patient transport (i.e. ambulance), blood transfusions and other services.

2. The figures are derived from the annual accounts of the health authorities in the region. 1990-91 figures are subject to audit.

3. The figures for the period 1982-83 to 1986-87 shown in Table I have been adjusted, by excluding as far as practicable revenue expenditure relevant to services for which the health authorities ceased to hold management and/or accounting responsibility, in order to make them comparable with figures for more recent years. (The exclusions consist primarily of a proportion of the total costs of the London Ambulance Service which since 1987-88 have been wholly accounted for by the South West Thames Regional Health Authority).

4. DHA figures are derived directly from the annual accounts. They have not been adjusted to exclude the effect of changes in the pattern of service management and accounting arrangements at both regional and district levels during the period (for example, the transfer of management responsibility for Leavesden Hospital from South West Hertfordshire to North West Hertfordshire in 1987-88).

5. The volume input terms column of each table shows the cash figure for the relevant year expressed at 1990-91 prices after adjustment by the HCHS pay and prices index.

6. The real terms column of each table shows the cash figures for the relevant year expressed in 1990-91 prices after adjustment by the GDP deflator.

Computers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) the capital expenditure and (b) revenue expenditure incurred on computer hardware and software by each individual health authority in England and Wales in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: A table showing the information requested and derived from the annual accounts of health authorities in England has been placed in the Library.

The table covers all relevant expenditure incurred by the health authorities in their management and direct provision of all hospital and community health services.

Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Cryptosporidium

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department holds on the incidence of morbidity in children resulting from the ingestion of cryptosporidium oocysts.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally. A study carried out by the Public Health Laboratory Service in 1985-87 covering over 60,000 patients, identified cryptosporidium infection in 2 per cent. of cases. Cryptosporidium infection was found in 4·9 per cent. of one to four-year-olds.

Bathing Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he gives to bathers about swimming in heavily polluted waters.

Mr. Dorrell: Certain bathing beaches identified as posing a risk by the EC directive, are regularly tested and the results of sampling publicly posted. In addition, the local environmental health officer may post warning notices where abnormal results are detected.

Ambulance Service

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has of the population to which, because of relative remoteness from ambulance stations, the time standard for an ambulance to arrive after call out, set out in the patients charter, cannot at present apply; whether he has any proposals to provide funds or a requirement for ambulance services in such areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The location of ambulance stations is not necessarily a critical factor in meeting time standards in rural areas as vehicles may respond from predetermined critical location points.

Decisions on resources for the ambulance service and the standards required are made by the health authority or NHS trust purchasing the service, against the background of the national charter standard.

Children (Dental Care)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to abolish the capitation payments to general dental practitioners in relation to the provision of dental care for children.

Mr. Dorrell: We have no such plans. The capitation arrangements for the dental care of children are an important part of the preventive approach.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he is now able to announce future plans for the relocation of the national development team for mentally handicapped people; and if he will make a statement on its role.

Mr. Dorrell: Plans for the future location of the national development team are under discussion with its director. We expect to make an announcement soon.

Appointments

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who is empowered to make appointments to senior posts with district health authorities; and what conditions are placed on the appointment procedure, in particular the extent of advertising such posts inside and outside the NHS and the drawing up of a sufficient shortlist of appropriately qualified candidates.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The relevant employing authority is the body empowered to make appointments to senior posts with district health authorities. Guidelines have been issued by the Department to the chairmen of the health authorities advising on advertising, short-listing, interviewing, final selection, and appointment procedures.

Unless there were exceptional circumstances, we would expect all NHS posts, including those at senior management level, to be advertised both inside and outside the NHS, and to be openly competitive.

Mental Handicap

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people were prescribed neuroleptic drugs in each year since 1986; how many of these were people suffering from a mental handicap; and how many of these were people under the age of 16 years;

(2) how many people were diagnosed as suffering from tardive dyskenesia in each year since 1986; how many of these were people suffering from a mental handicap; and how many of these were people under the age of 16 years.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally.

Dental Contracts

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will seek to base the new dental contract on the principle of capitation for children.

Mr. Dorrell: The new dental contract already reflects the capitation principle. Dentists receive a monthly capitation fee for each child registered with them. Monthly continuing care payments are made for each adult registered.

NHS Regulations

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to make the National Health Service (General Medical Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1992.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We anticipate making both the General Medical Services and General Pharmaceutical Services Regulations 1992 in March 1992.

Rugby NHS Trust

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are now being seen each quarter by the Rugby NHS trust; and what were the comparable figures in a similar period in 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: Quarterly data about the number of patients seen by the Rugby NHS trust are available for the 1991-92 year, but are not available on this basis for the previous year. Six-monthly statistics are available and indicate that in the first six months of the current year —April to September 1991—the Rugby NHS trust treated 4,879 ordinary in-patient admissions and 954 day cases. This compares to figures of 4,767 ordinary in-patient admissions and 359 day cases for the previous year. This represents an increase of 13·8 per cent. in the number of in-patients—ordinary admissions plus day cases—treated in the first six months of operation as an NHS trust.

A total of 24,184 out-patients were seen by the trust in the period April to September 1991, this compares with a total of 25,373 seen in the corresponding period in the previous year.

Employment Provisions

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether basic employment provisions, such as sick pay and employer-supported pension schemes, are required for nursing and administration staff by his Department of general practices contracted in to the national health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: General practitioners are independent contractors who normally employ their own practice staff. They are subject to the same statutory requirements regarding sick pay, maternity pay and state retirement pension as are other employers.

Pain Management

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been offered to health authorities on the holding of pain clinics and the provision of pain management programmes.

Mr. Dorrell: The provision of services for diagnosis and relief of pain is a matter for individual health authorities to determine, taking account of local needs, priorities and resources and the views of the medical profession locally.

Prescriptions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to amend the present rules to equalise the ages at which men and women may receive free prescriptions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Exemption from prescription charges on grounds of age is currently linked to the state retirement pension age—65 for men and 60 for women. Whilst we have no plans to change this arrangement, the Government will examine closely the outcome of the forthcoming deliberations on EC directive 79/7.

Current arrangements for exemption on grounds of health or status, underpinned by the separate scheme for remission on grounds of low income and the prescription prepayment certificate scheme, ensure that no one need forgo any necessary medication on financial grounds. As a result, less than one item in five dispensed in the NHS currently attracts a charge.

Cancer Treatments

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by directly managed unit and by trust unit the waiting list for cancer treatment as at December 1991 in (a) the South West regional health authority and (b) Wessex regional health authority.

Mr. Waldegrave: Waiting list information is collected centrally by specialty, not by diagnosis of patient. At 31 March 1991, the latest date for which specialty information is available, there were 38 patients waiting for radiotherapy in the South Western regional health authority and one patient waiting in the Wessex regional health authority.

I understand that there are no patients waiting for radiotherapy treatment at the Royal United hospital, Bath.

Pets (Cancer Treatment)

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the revenue generated by the Bath Royal United hospital from the treatment of domestic pets in its cancer treatment unit in 1991-92.

Mr. Waldegrave: This is a matter for Bath Royal United hospital.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he gave his consent to the Bath Royal United hospital to treat domestic pets in its cancer treatment unit.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Royal United hospital is not required to seek my permission to treat domestic pets in its cancer treatment unit. The scheme was considered by the hospital's medical committee, and discussed with the community health council, which gave approval provided that patient care was unaffected and there were no costs to the NHS.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what conditions he imposed on the Bath Royal United hospital when he agreed to its treatment of domestic pets in the hospital's cancer treatment unit.

Mr. Waldegrave: This matter was decided by the authorities in the hospital after discussion with the local community health council.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he consulted with the Bath community health council on the request from Bath Royal United hospital to treat domestic pets in the hospital's cancer treatment unit.

Mr. Waldegrave: I understand that the Royal United hospital discussed the scheme with Bath community health council who stated that, provided patient care was unaffacted and there were no costs to the NHS, it would raise no objection.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he consulted with the purchasing authority in Bath on the request from Bath Royal United hospital to treat domestic pets in the hospital's cancer treatment unit.

Mr. Waldegrave: This is not a proper matter for central decision, but for the hospital authorities after discussion with the community health council.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to his written reply to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) Official Report, 20 January, column 85, he will make it his policy to publish the requested information upon the receipt of the returns from electoral registration officers on 16 February.

Mr. Dorrell: The OPCS intends to publish a monitor containing all district electorate figures before the local government elections in May; a second monitor will be published before the forthcoming general election containing as many parliamentary electorate figures as have been collected and verified.

Bradford Action on Health

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to allocate additional funding to Bradford Action on Health.

Mr. Dorrell: Bradford Action on Health is jointly funded by the Health Education Authority and Bradford health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Donald Maitland, the chairman of the Health Education Authority, and Mr. Nerurkar, the chairman of Bradford health authority.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions he has had with agencies concerned with the personal social services with regard to proposals for a general social services council to set standards and regulate those working in this sector.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: An independent action group convened by the National Institute for Social Work is currently considering all aspects of the proposals for a general social services council. That action group will be consulting widely with interested organisations before reaching its conclusions and presenting recommendations. We await the report with interest.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the implications for statutory provisions of the cutting or freezing of local authority personal social service budgets during the next financial year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The standard spending figure for personal social services for 1992-93 is £4,850 million, about 6 per cent. higher than local authorities' social services budgets for the current year. Personal social services standard spending has increased by 33 per cent. over two years.

Child Abuse

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given to local authorities with regard to the allocations of complex child abuse cases to newly qualified social workers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Social service departments should ensure that staff undertaking this work are trained, competent and supervised. The Department has reissued "Working Together", a guide to arrangements for inter-agency co-operation for the protection of children, to coincide with the implementation of the Children Act 1989 on 14 October 1991. The training guidelines "Working with child sexual abuse" circulated on 6 January give a framework for training in this area. Copies of the publications are available in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has received from the social services inspectorate with regard to the possible introduction of approved or accredited social workers for child protection cases; what response he has made to these proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

Tobacco

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will seek to revise the voluntary agreements with tobacco companies on promotion of tobacco products to include a prohibition on the distribution of free cigarettes to young people in nightclubs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Committee for Monitoring the Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship—COMATAS—has considered complaints relating to such activities, and is satisfied that the conduct of those promotions it has examined complied with the terms of the voluntary agreement. The promotional team may only offer cigarettes to smokers over 18 years old, and the venues are licensed premises where under-18s are excluded by management. If the hon. Member has any evidence to the contrary, the committee would be pleased to examine it.

Psychiatric Patients

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given to regional health authorities and trusts with regard to charging (a) psychiatric in-patients detained under the Mental Health Act 1983 or (b) other psychiatric patients for damage caused by them to hospital property during periods of illness.

Mr. Dorrell: No central guidance has been issued.

Westwood Hospital

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information about the proposed closure of Westwood hospital was given to the local community as part of the consultation process about the establishment of the Bradford community health trust.

Mr. Dorrell: No reference was made to the closure of Westwood hospital in the application for the establishment of Bradford community health trust.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who owns the land on which Westwood hospital is located; who are the freeholders; and if any part of the land is leased.

Mr. Dorrell: Ownership of Westwood hospital and the land on which it is sited is vested in my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, for health services purposes. It is occupied and managed by Bradford health authority. Part of the land is leased for minor grazing and sports purposes.

Means Testing

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to monitor the legality and fairness of the methods of means testing used by local authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for local authority social services departments to act within the relevant legislation and take into account any guidance issued. Since April 1991 they have been required to establish procedures for dealing with complaints. New guidance about charges for personal social services is being prepared.

Policy Forum Report

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response he has made to the first report of the policy forum entitled "Great Expectations and Spending on Social Services", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This report rightly points out the increase in public expectations of social services as a result of important recent legislation: the Children Act 1989 and community care. Local authorities have a challenging job to provide services which are flexible, comprehensive and sensitive to the needs of users and carers.

As the burden has increased, so have the resources available. Over the last two years alone, the standard spending for social services has increased by 33 per cent. Since 1979, spending in real terms has increased by 60 per cent. An extra 3,500 social workers have been recruited in the last six years alone.

The centre produces guidance, legislation and resources. Local authorities rather than central Government have the direct responsibility for providing social services for their population. It is for local authorities in carrying out their responsibilities to judge priorities in the context of local circumstances.

Accident and Emergency Services

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the provision of accident and emergency services in the North Western and Merseyside regional health authority areas; what guidance he gives to regional health authorities on this subject; and what steps he takes to monitor this service.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 27 January 1992]: Health authorities are responsible for assessing the need for accident and emergency services in their local area and for securing the necessary services through health service contracts.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Drug Smuggling

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what steps he is taking to protect the non-port areas of East Anglian coastline from drug smuggling after 1 January 1993; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list, by drug, all seizures made by Customs and Excise coming through East Anglian ports for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make a statement on how he proposes to prevent drugs being brought freely into East Anglian ports after 1 January 1993;

(4) if he will make a statement on the levels of manpower and resources he plans to make available for Customs and Excise activities against drug smuggling into East Anglia after 1 January 1993.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 27 January 1992]: The drugs threat to the United Kingdom is well illustrated in national statistics issued by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise at the beginning of this year showing that drugs seizures by Customs continue to increase. In particular they show an increase of 89 per cent. in cocaine and 478 per cent. in synthetic drugs.

A total of 62 per cent. of all seizures, by weight, came from or through another European Community member state, representing drugs to a value of almost £82 million.

East Anglia's proximity to the European mainland and also its facilities for deep sea traffic place it in the forefront of the fight against drugs from both EC and non-EC sources.

The table lists all customs' drug seizures in East Anglia between 1987 and 1991.

On the completion of the single market on 1 January 1993, while all fiscal and customs formalities at EC frontiers will be removed, permitting the freest movement of legitimate passenger and freight traffic, essential anti-smuggling checks will remain. These will be focused on major dangers to society such as drugs, instruments of terrorism and child pornography and will be performed in a carefully targeted manner by flexible and mobile teams.

In East Anglia 275 staff will be available on 1 January 1993 for this role involved in information and intelligence gathering; the evaluation of risk; flexible deployments to counter the risk at ports, airports, airfields, along the coastline and at every conceivable entry point. Those numbers can also be supplemented by additional resources from elsewhere as the need arises.

These staff will be conducting highly selective checks, relying on improved intelligence assessments and closer co-operation with businesses and with enforcement agencies overseas in a continuing effort to counter those serious threats to society.

The coastline of East Anglia, as with the rest of the United Kingdom, is covered by Customs maritime and aerial resources, often in close co-operation with the police. In addition, national and international intelligence-led operations against targeted small craft are a regular occurrence, including traffic destined for the east coast from the Netherlands. Customs are developing an air/sea anti-drugs memoranda of understanding programme with other maritime countries. A draft agreement with Dutch law enforcement agencies has been agreed and will be signed soon.

SCOTLAND

Research and Development

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide total Government spending on research and development in Scotland in constant terms in each year since 1973-74.

Mr. Lang: The information available is set out in the table below. It is an abstract from table 1.2.2 of the current version of the "Annual Review of Government Funded R & D 1991"—published by HMSO and available in the Library. Section 2.22 of that annual review contains a detailed description of the related activities funded by the Scottish Office. In addition, there is considerable spending by other Government Departments—such as the Department of Education and Science—in Scotland and by the research councils.

Grant-aided Colleges

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has determined the allocations of grant-in-aid for recurrent expenditure to grant-aided colleges in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The allocations are:

	Offer[1] 1992-93 financial year (£ million)
Craigie College of Education	1·416
Duncan of Jordanstone College of Art	3·470
Dundee Institute of Technology	6·720
Edinburgh College of Art	3·167
Glasgow Polytechnic	15·827
Glasgow School of Art	3·112
Jordanhill College of Education	7·671
Moray House College of Education	6·161
Napier Polytechnic of Edinburgh	19·360
Northern College of Education	4·516
Paisley College of Technology	10·546
Queen's College, Glasgow	4·391
Queen Margaret College	4·606
Robert Gordon Institute of Technology	11·632
Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama	2·160
St. Andrew's College of Education	2·968
Scottish College of Textiles	2·163

[1] The offers are conditional on parliamentary approval of the Supply Estimates and take account of the increases in the tuition fees which colleges will receive for undergraduate students.

These allocations reflect the very high priority which the Government are continuing to give to higher education, and will provide more opportunities for people wishing to enter higher education. The number of students for whom grant provision has been made has been increased by nearly 8½ per cent. in 1992-93 in recognition of the success of the sector in attracting additional students. After including the higher levels of tuition fees to be paid to colleges in 1992-93, the allocations represent an increase in Government funding of about £19 million; or about 12 per cent. compared with the current year if colleges achieve their funded student enrolments. Changes in the recurrent resourcing of individual colleges are shown below.

Year-on-year comparison of grant-in-aid and tuition fees

	Grant-in-aid[1] plus estimated tuition fees for funded students

Total	159·575	178·448	+11·8

[1] Because of changes to the treatment and coverage of in-service provision, resources for in-service have been excluded from both years.

2. In 1992-93 Craigie College of Education will introduce courses in secondary postgraduate teacher training and will be funded for these. This is the main reason for the very high increase in resources for 1992-93: if this funding is excluded, the increase in resources is about 7 per cent.

The distribution of resources among colleges generally reflects the ability of individual colleges to enrol additional students, and in the case of teacher training it is based on the need for newly qualified teachers. The highest increase in resources on a like with like basis is 18 per cent. for Queen's college, Glasgow, reflecting particularly strong growth in student numbers. Twelve of the 17 colleges are estimated to receive increases in resources of over 9 per cent.—which is more than twice the projected rate of inflation.

For each college, the funding level will adequately cover cost increases, and will enable the colleges to continue to contribute to the rising participation in higher education in recent years.

Scottish Estates

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is Highland and Islands Enterprise's preferred strategy for the future management and development of Scottish estates.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 23 January 1992]: I have asked the chairman of Highlands and Islands Enterprise to write to the hon. Member.

Fishing and Shooting Estates

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the owners of the Scottish fishing and shooting estates listed in the publication "Sport at Home and Abroad, 1992 Season", by Highlands and Islands Enterprise.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 23 January 1992]: I have asked the chairman of Highlands and Islands Enterprise to write to the hon. Member.

"Sport at Home and Abroad"

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the nature and scale of the assistance given by Highlands and Islands Enterprise to the publication "Sport at Home and Abroad, 1992 Season"; and if the recipients of such assistance will be required to repay all or part of the assistance if the project is commercially successful;

(2) what are the benefits he expects to accrue for the people and the economy of the highlands and islands from Highlands and Islands Enterprise's assistance to the publication of "Sport at Home and Abroad, 1992 Season"; and how such assistance contributes to Highlands and Islands Enterprise's strategic objectives for the highlands and islands;

(3) how he expects assistance given by Highlands and Islands Enterprise to the publication "Sport at Home and Abroad, 1992 Season" to contribute to the economic development of the highlands and islands.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 23 January 1992]: I have asked the chairman of Highlands and Islands Enterprise to write to the hon. Member.

Libya (Lockerbie)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what communications the Lord Advocate has received from the Libyan authorities concerning the warrant issued in respect of the bombing of Pan Am flight 103; what reply he has sent; and if he will place a copy of the correspondence in the Library.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 24 January 1992]: The terms of diplomatic notes are confidential. However, the Libyan authorities have made public the fact of their request that the Lord Advocate assist a Libyan judicial investigation. The Lord Advocate has made it clear that he is not prepared to co-operate in such an investigation, for reasons which are obvious from the terms and nature of the charges as announced by the Lord Advocate on 14 November. The matter has been investigated fully, leading to the issue of judicial warrants in Scotland and the United States. It is now up to the Libyan authorities to comply with our requests as endorsed by Security Council resolution 731 (1992).

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Industrial Diseases

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Attorney-General what files held at the Public Records Office relating to the operation and enforcement of the 1931 Asbestos Regulations, or other relevant health and safety legislation, or other forms of regulation of the asbestos industry, are still closed, other than under the 30-year rule.

The Attorney-General: The Public Record Office holds Home Office and Ministry of Labour headquarters records concerning the work of the factory inspectorate in operating and enforcing factory and safety legislation, including the Asbestos Industry Regulations 1931. Very few local and individual case records of the inspectorate, for the period up to 1961, have been selected for permanent preservation. None of the records identified above have been closed for longer than 30 years.

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Attorney-General what files held at the Public Records Office relating to compensation for asbestos-related disease under the industrial injuries scheme or its predecessors, or to the workings of the pneumoconiosis medical boards and panels, are still closed, other than under the 30-year rule.

The Attorney-General: Records of the Home Office and of the Ministry of National Insurance and its successors relating to workmen's compensation schemes and to the industrial injuries scheme introduced in 1946 are held by the Public Record Office. The records of the Ministry of National Insurance include records of the Pneumoconiosis and Byssinosis Benefits Board. Records among those described above which contain medical details or information relating to the personal circumstances of identifiable individuals are closed for longer than 30 years under the provisions of section 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958, the period of closure depending upon the ages of the persons concerned.

Default Cases

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average number of default cases processed per hour using county court default systems, up to and including the making of instalment orders.

The Attorney-General: Throughout the county court system in England and Wales approximately 1,800 summonses were issued per working hour in 1991. Some of these would have resulted in payment at the issue stage, some would have resulted in judgment by default, some would have resulted in orders for judgment by instalments, and others would have been defended on their merits. Statistics as to the outcome of cases are not collected in this form.

TRANSPORT

Radioactive Materials (Transport)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East on plutonium transport, 20 January, Official Report, column 63, he will set out the categories of cases where movements of radioactive materials have to be notified by his Department;

(2) in cases of the movement of radioactive materials, which Government Departments have to be notified; and in what sets of circumstances.

Mr. McLoughlin: Consignments of radioactive material which must be notified to the Department of Transport before each shipment are:

Type B(U) packages containing radioactive material with an activity greater than 3×10^3 A1 or 3×10^3 A2, as appropriate, or 1000 terabecquerels (20 kilocuries), whichever is the lower;

Type B(M) packages;

transport under Special Arrangement.

The terms used are defined in International Atomic Agency safety series No. 6: "Regulations for the Safe Transport of Radioactive Material", a copy of which is held in the Library of the House.

An export licence must be obtained from the Department of Trade and Industry for the export of radioactive materials specified in the Export of Goods (Control) Order.

A40(M)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the road works on Westway and the A40(M) in Paddington to be completed; what work will have been done and at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Phase I of the rewaterproofing of the A40(M) Westway, which started in September 1991, should be completed by the end of February 1992, providing there are no periods of adverse weather. By then, almost three fifths of Westway will have been rewaterproofed and resurfaced. The estimated cost of phase I is £4·25 million.

Phase II is planned to start in June 1992 and take about five months. It will complete the resurfacing of Westway and include the rewaterproofing of the A40(M)/M41 roundabout and the Wood lane flyover.

When the works are completed, major resurfacing on Westway will not be necessary for many years, and the waterproofing should last for at least 20 years.

Cornelis Johanna

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer of 23 January, Official Report, column 270, when the inclining experiment will be carried out on the Cornelis Johanna.

Mr. McLoughlin: Arrangements are being made to conduct the inclining experiment as soon as possible.

Motorway Accidents

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 656, on research undertaken into accidents caused by motorists falling asleep, whether any of the research has been funded or commissioned by Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Loughborough study was not funded by the Government.

The Welsh Office however has funded a study by Bangor university of driver fatigue, the report of which, "The Long-Distance Driver", was published in 1990.

Driver fatigue was one of the elements of the extensive programme of accident causation studies carried out by the Department's Transport and Road Research Laboratory during the 1970s and early 1980s.

In order to assess future research needs, my Department has commissioned a further review of research from the medical commission on accident prevention at the Royal College of Surgeons.

Roads Programme, North-West

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the expected central Government expenditure on the roads programme in the North-West in 1991-92 and in each of the following five years.

Mr. Chope: The forecast outturn roads programme expenditure in the Department's north-west region in 1991-92 is £174 million. This includes new construction and maintenance. The budget for next year—1992-93—has not yet been finalised. Expenditure in subsequent years is dependent on future public expenditure settlements.

Speed Limit Enforcement

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many automatic speed limit enforcement equipment experiments are being conducted in Britain; and if he will make a statement on their effectiveness and the proposals he may have for extending the schemes.

Mr. Chope: Small-scale trials are being carried out to test the equipment and evaluate its operational use in enforcing speed limits. When suitable equipment has been granted type approval by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, it will be deployed more widely and its effectiveness in reducing accidents will be evaluated by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory.

Vehicle Registration

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the 10-day time limit for transferring registration of motor vehicles; if he will make it his policy to ensure that any vehicle requiring transfer of registration be subject to the signature of the registered owner; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The 10-day delay period applies where there is a doubt about the propriety of the transfer application, and is intended to assist in the detection of car-related crime. There are about 1·9 million applications for change of registration each year and it would be impracticable to require the signature of the registered keeper before allowing any change.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many applications to transfer registration documents have been made under form V712/1 to DVLC Swansea in respect of stolen vehicles.

Mr. Chope: About 10,000 V712 letters are issued weekly by DVLA. Since the system was introduced in 1986 more than 1,200 arrests have been made and more than 3,400 stolen vehicles recovered as a direct result of this procedure.

Safety Belts

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people in the rear of motor vehicles and wearing lap seat belts only have been killed and injured, respectively, in the United Kingdom, during the past five years for which records are available.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is not available.

A38

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will announce his Department's preferred route for the A38 trunk road improvement between Liskeard and Bodmin.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 20 January 1992]: I have written to my hon. Friend.

ENVIRONMENT

Dockland Forum

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the period over which the London Docklands development corporation has funded the Dockland Forum; if he has given any instructions or advice concerning its continuation in the financial year 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The LDDC has approved grant aid to Docklands Forum over the period 1982-1992. The LDDC has advised the forum that this grant aid will come to an end in March 1992.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to phase out the disposal of all types of waste in the sea.

Mr. Baldry: Dumping of solid waste at sea is a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Dumping of sewage sludge at sea will be phased out by the end of 1998. The United Kingdom is voluntarily refraining from dumping radioactive waste at sea. All waste water discharges in England and Wales are subject to regulation by the appropriate regulatory authorities. They must meet specified international and domestic standards and may be subject to conditions to ensure that those standards are met, so that discharges do not cause unacceptable harm to the environment.

Water Contractors

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to bring forward proposals to require contractors undertaking work on behalf of water companies to maintain the same standards as the water companies are required to maintain in order to prevent environmental damage and pollution.

Mr. Baldry: Every company holding an appointment as a water or sewerage undertaker has in place a code of practice, approved by the Secretary of State, covering the use of its works powers on private land. These codes apply equally to any employees, agents and contractors carrying out works on behalf of the company, and cover environmental considerations and reinstatement among other matters. An undertaker may be liable to pay compensation for damage caused in the carrying out of its works, either by itself or by contractors acting on its behalf; and the Director General of Water Services can direct it to do so in a particular case. Other environmental legislation also generally applies in the same way to a water, or water and sewerage, company and to contractors working for it.

Rural Development Commission

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will now set out the basis on which the Rural Development Commission will receive Government funding after the programme of workshop sales has been completed.

Mr. Trippier: We recognise the one-off nature of the portfolio disposal receipts. We will take this into account in deciding the basis of the Rural Development Commission funding in future years.

Canada Geese

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance is issued to local authorities regarding the humane control of Canada geese; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Subject to the requirements of the EC birds directive and the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, it is for the local authorities who wish to control Canada geese to decide what methods may be appropriate, but they can seek technical advice from the Agricultural Development Advisory Service—ADAS—or English Nature.

National Parks

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the budget for each of the national parks over the last 10 years, giving the percentage increase for each year over the previous year, including an overall figure for the whole period, together with the rate of inflation over the same period.

Mr. Baldry: National parks supplementary grant—NPSG—meets 75 per cent. of national parks' approved expenditure, the balance being funded by each park's constituent county and metropolitan district councils. Information on NPSG allocated to each of the English national parks for the financial years 1983-84 to 1992-93 and the percentage increase each year over the previous year together with the inflation rate for the period is given in the table:

Defective Housing

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council-owned properties within Easington have structural defects which would qualify under the defective housing regulations.

Mr. Yeo: Easington district council reports ownership of 133 dwellings designated as inherently defective under the housing defects legislation.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homeowners in Peterlee who live in homes which have structural and design defects have been successful in obtaining grants to repair such defects.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not available.

Housing Investment Programme, Easington

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by year since 1985 the housing investment programme bid by Easington district council to his Department and the housing investment programme allocation for each of those years.

Mr. Yeo: The table provides the information requested.

	HIP bid	HIP allocation £ thousands	EA allocation
1985-86	17,420	4,525	—
1986-87	20,952	3,860	—
1987-88	n/a	3,632	—
1988-89	n/a	3,894	433,218
1989-90	24,417	3,197	391,988
New capital finance system[1]
1990-91	33,892	4,731	12,000
1991-92	33,137	[2]5,585	393,000
1992-93	27,556	[2]6,205	460,000

[1] Under the new capital finance system, introduced in 1990-91, the HIP allocation does not convey borrowing approval directly.

[2] These figures are not final. Additional supplementary credit approvals are expected to be issued in the course of each financial year.

Since 1981-82 authorities have been able to augment the borrowing power of their HIP allocations by using the prescribed proportion of their capital receipts.

Noise

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what questions he has received about the number of environmental health officers employed by local authorities to combat noise nuisance between neighbours.

Mr. Baldry: I have received no specific questions on this. Local environmental health officers carry out a wide range of functions and I am aware that the number of complaints to local authorities about neighbourhood noise is increasing. However, it remains for each local authority to determine its own priorities in deploying its environmental health officers, having regard to their statutory duties under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, the available resources and needs of their community.

Non-statutory action, such as dispute mediation by third parties and community codes on noise behaviour, may help to relieve the pressure on environmental health officers and also achieve a more effective and longer lasting solution. My Department is therefore part-funding a mediation scheme in Bristol. We are also funding a pilot neighbourhood noise awareness scheme in Forest Hill, London. The scheme incorporates a community code suggesting ways of keeping noise down and being a considerate neighbour.

Overcrowding

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received requesting changes in planning regulations to restrict or further regulate alleged overcrowding in privately rented accommodation.

Mr. Yeo: Under part X of the Housing Act 1985 a person who permits a dwelling to be overcrowded commits a criminal offence. The enforcement duty lies with local authorities.

Authorities also have discretionary powers to control overcrowding in houses in multiple occupation by serving notice requiring the number of people accommodated to be reduced.

The control of overcrowding in dwellings is not a matter for the planning system, and I am not aware of any recent representations that it should be.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the cost to local authorities of homelessness for reasons of mortgage repossessions for each year 1979 to 1991, inclusive.

Sir George Young: The information available to the Department about local authorities' costs associated with homelessness is not broken down according to the cause.

3D Ltd.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the application for city grant by 3D Ltd. for the west end scheme in Bradford has been completely considered; whether a decision has been made; and what section of the scheme is under consideration.

Mr. Key: My Department received a revised application for city grant from 3D on 15 October 1991. It relates to a first phase of the west end scheme, comprising offices in Aldermanbury, a European pavilion and a multi-storey car park. Several meetings have been held with the applicants, but additional information is awaited before a decision can be made.

Arthur Ford Ltd.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Arthur Ford Ltd. of Nottingham regarding its loss on a departmental contract where the original contractor has gone into receivership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 20 January 1992]: Arthur Ford Ltd. was a sub-contractor on Turriff Ltd. on a project which the Property Services Agency is managing on behalf of the Ministry of Defence at RAF Cosford. It has made representations to PSA concerning moneys owed to it by Turriff which is now in receivership.

Councillors (Allowances)

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the increase in the allowance to members serving on local authorities will be made; and what will be the total increase.

Mr. Key [holding answer 28 January 1992]: We are currently reviewing the spending limits on allowances paid by local authorities and will let them know shortly the limits which will apply from 1 April 1992.

THE ARTS

Japan Festival

Mr. Grist: To ask the Minister for the Arts which events in the Japan festival 1991 he attended in his official capacity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I attended the following events:

28 August 1991: "Contemporary Art from Japan" Exhibition at the Talbot Rice Gallery, University of Edinburgh;
16 September 1991: The Royal Opening of the Japan Festival at the Victoria and Albert Museum;
16 September 1991: The "Visions of Japan" Exhibition, also at the Victoria and Albert Museum;
17 September 1991: The Royal Opening of the Kamakura Exhibition at the British Museum;
22 October 1991: The exhibition "Japan and Britain: An Aesthetic Dialogue 1850-1930" at the Barbican.

I also attended receptions for sponsors at Lancaster House and in Cardiff and Newcastle. The Japan Festival 1991 has been the largest celebration of another country's culture ever held in the United Kingdom.

The festival has attracted very wide support, and hundreds of highly successful and varied events have taken place nationwide. It will, I am sure, make a valuable and lasting contribution to relations between our two countries and to the understanding and appreciation of Japanese culture in the United Kingdom.

ENERGY

Plutonium

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 7, if he will now provide details on the amount of plutonium offered to Euratom on the United Kingdom's accession to the treaty of Rome on 1 January 1973; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Refuseniks

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Ukraine authorities about their failure to grant an exit visa to Motvei Goishpan of Kharkov and to Vladimir Kofman of Kiev.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We can certainly raise the cases of refuseniks Motvei Goishpan of Kharkov and Vladimir Kofman of Kiev with the Ukrainian authorities, but in order to make our representations most effective we shall need further details.

Treaty of Rome

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 101, to the hon. Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell), what discrepancies have been found so far between the treaty text made available to hon. Members on 16 December and the text as prepared for signature; whether any further differences will be laid before the House before signature; and what the process of preparation for signature involves.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The text made available to Parliament on 16 December was in two parts, covering political union and economic and monetary union. In preparing this agreed text for signature these sections have been combined to form a single treaty text, the numbering of the articles of the text has been brought into line with those of the treaty of Rome and translations have been prepared. The final text of the treaty will be made available to Parliament immediately following signature.

East Timor

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he intends to take on the resolutions of the parliamentary assemblies of the Council of Europe and of the Western European Union in respect of East Timor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have noted the resolutions.

Cameroon

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations he has made to the Government of Cameroon about human rights.

Mrs. Chalker: We have made representations to the Cameroon Government about human rights on several occasions. The most recent was in October 1991, both in Yaoundé and to the Cameroon ambassador in London. We shall continue to monitor the situation carefully.

Somalia

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonweath Affairs if he will make a statement on the action taken by the United Nations Security Council regarding the situation in Somalia.

Mrs. Chalker: On 23 January the United Nations Security Council passed a resolution, No. 733, requesting the secretary general to appoint a co-ordinator to oversee the effective delivery of increased United Nations humanitarian assistance, in liaison with other international agencies. The Security Council also requested the secretary-general to co-operate with the Organisation of African Unity and the League of Arab States in contacting the parties to the Somali conflict to try to secure a ceasefire, the distribution of humanitarian assistance, and a political settlement to the conflict. The Security Council also agreed to an immediate embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Somalia.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Armley Prison

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will order an inquiry into Armley prison following the further suicide; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the death of Mr. Melvyn Hodgson at Leeds prison on 28 December last year. I shall decide what form of inquiry into the circumstances may be appropriate, once the inquest into Mr. Hodgson's death has been concluded.

Extradition

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the safeguards and rights of appeal under extradition treaties concluded, to date, by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. John Patten: The safeguards and rights of appeal are contained in the Extradition Act 1989, particularly parts II and III, and paragraphs 1, 8, and 10 of schedule 1.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department with how many countries Her Majesty's Government have (a) concluded an extradition treaty, (b) is currently negotiating an extradition treaty and (c) no extradition treaty or limited extradition arrangements.

Mr. John Patten: (a) The United Kingdom has extradition arrangements with the following Commonwealth countries listed in schedule 1 to the Extradition (Designated Commonwealth Countries) Order 1991—1991 No. 1700:

Antigua and Barbuda
Australia
The Bahamas
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belize
Botswana
Brunei
Canada
Dominica
Fiji
The Gambia
Ghana
Grenada
Guyana
India
Jamaica
Kenya
Kiribati
Lesotho

with the parties to the European convention on extradition, listed in schedule 2, part 1 to the European Convention on Extradition Order 1990—1990 No. 1507:

Austria
Cyprus
Denmark
Finland
France
Germany, Federal Republic of Greece
Iceland
Israel
Italy
Liechtenstein
Luxembourg
Netherlands
Norway
Portugal
Spain
Sweden
Switzerland
Turkey;

and through bilateral treaties, not all of which are currently operative, with the following foreign states:

Albania
Argentina
Belgium
Bolivia
Chile
Colombia
Cuba
Czechoslovakia
Ecuador
Guatemala
Haiti
Iraq
Liberia
Mexico
Monaco
Nicaragua
Panama
Paraguay
Peru
Poland
Romania

Yugoslavia

Arrangements with the Republic of Ireland are based on the reciprocal backing of warrants.

(b) The possibility of replacing the existing arrangements with India under the Commonwealth scheme with a bilateral treaty will be the subject of official discussions next month.

(c) Limited extradition arrangements exist with some countries not listed in the tables by virtue of the international conventions referred to in section 22(2) of the Extradition Act 1989. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly giving details of the parties to those conventions.

United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to continue funding the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: UKIAS currently receives grant-in-aid so that it may provide advice and representation before the immigration appellate authorities in cases where an application to enter or remain in the United Kingdom or a claim to asylum has been refused. The Government have a high regard for the service which UKIAS's staff provide to their clients. We are not, however, satisfied with the manner in which UKIAS's general council and executive committee oversee the service and we have repeatedly pressed them to make changes to conform with the standards expected of a body receiving grant-in-aid. In particular, we expect the organisation to become more broadly based, with a wider range of representation. We think that anybody who is paid by UKIAS or otherwise has a personal pecuniary interest in the provision of immigration advice should not be able to serve on the general council or executive committee, and that the role of those committees should be restricted to general policy and senior staff appointments. We also expect UKIAS to account for the funds they receive by improving their corporate planning and performance measurement.

UKIAS has not so far accepted or implemented these changes. On 20 January I met the executive committee to discuss this. I gave notice that the current situation in UKIAS was such that the Government could not properly provide additional funds for the expansion of their refugee unit to meet the extra work created by the increase in asylum applications and the introduction of new rights of appeal in the Asylum Bill. The London representative of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees who attended the meeting and who hitherto has provided 75 per cent. of the refugee unit's funds, expressed similar concern. The refugee unit now needs to expand without further delay and so that this can proceed both the Government and the UNHCR intend to transfer the funds for refugee work from UKIAS to a new body which will supervise the refugee unit temporarily. The transfer will take place as soon as the new body is established, we hope by the end of February 1992.

I also gave the executive committee notice that continued payment of the grant for general immigration work depended on their making the required changes within three months. If changes are made to meet the conditions we and the London representative of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees have set out, the grant for immigration work will continue and we will discuss the reattachment of the refugee unit to UKIAS. If, however, the necessary changes are not made, we have given notice that we shall feel bound to terminate the grant to UKIAS and fund a new organisation to provide these services.

Derek Bentley

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) of 23 January, Official Report, column 315, if he is now in a position to decide whether any action on his part is appropriate in the case of Derek Bentley.

Mr. Patten: No. The case is receiving careful consideration. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary will announce his decision once the review is complete.

Rule 43

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what positive action is being taken by his Department to encourage inmates to return to normal prison location from rule 43; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Detailed guidance was provided to governors in 1990 on the arrangements that should be made for the removal of inmates from association under prison rule 43 and young offender institution rule 46, and for the management of vulnerable prisoners. The White Paper "Custody, Care and Justice"—Cm 1647—presented to Parliament last September, stated that no prisoner should be segregated for longer than is absolutely necessary. It described the development of policies directed to provide a climate in prisons in which inmates could be removed from segregation and located more appropriately. In particular, the Government accepted a proposal in the Woolf report that the existing rules should be amended. Later this year, separate rules will be introduced to make clear the responsibilities and powers of governors in respect of vulnerable prisoners.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider extending the requirement to comply with fire regulations to include all bed-and-breakfast accommodation premises with less than six bed spaces.

Mr. John Patten: Hotels and boarding houses with sleeping accommodation for more than six persons—or with some sleeping accommodation above the first floor or below ground-floor level—require a fire certificate under a designation order made under section 1 of the Fire Precautions Act 1971. We have no plans to designate smaller hotels and boarding houses.

We nevertheless intend to make regulations under section 12 of the Act to implement the fire safety requirements of European Community directives relating to the health and safety of workers at work. These will generally apply to every place in which one or more persons work and will take effect on 1 January 1993.

In accordance with the directives, the regulations will place the primary responsibility for ensuring fire safety on employers. Enforcement of these regulations will be by fire authorities and, for Crown premises, by HM inspectorate of fire services. Detailed consideration is currently being given to how they will be applied to places of work, including bed-and-breakfast accommodation establishments outside the scope of the designated order.

Police Officers (National Memorial)

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up a committee containing representatives of the police throughout the United Kingdom to consider the provision of a national memorial to all police officers who have been killed in the line of police duty in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. The Police Memorial Trust already has approved to erect a memorial to police officers killed on duty in the United Kingdom. The site is at Cambridge green, between Horseguards Parade road and the Mall. Construction work on the memorial, the design for which has been approved by the Royal Fine Arts Commission, is expected to begin later this year.

Assaults on Police

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to make a custodial sentence mandatory for those convicted of inflicting bodily harm on police officers.

Mr. John Patten: The courts have strong powers to deal with those who harm police officers and the Court of Appeal has made it clear that they should use them. We have conducted a six-month survey of the sentences given for assaults against police officers during the period to December 1991. We will consider whether any action is needed in the light of a careful analysis of the results of the survey and will announce our conclusions.

Gatwick Airport

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what notices are displayed by the immigration service at Gatwick airport to identify the channel for passengers holding passports issued by members of the European Community.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Signs directing European Community nationals to the designated area of the immigration arrivals control are provided by Gatwick Airport Limited at 17 locations in the south terminal and four locations in the north terminal.

Prison Officers

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many vacancies for prison officers there are at Her Majesty's prisons, Elvert, Durham and Franklands, Durham.

Mrs. Rumbold: In the prison officer class overall Her Majesty's prison Durham has a shortfall of four officers below its target staffing figure of 423 and Her Majesty's prison Frankland has a surplus of three officers above its target staffing figure of 405. Within these totals, there are vacancies at both prisons in the principal, senior officer and hospital officer grades, and there is a vacancy for a principal works officers at Her Majesty's prison Durham.

Crime Prevention, Peterlee

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what level of funding was granted to the Peterlee sub-division for crime prevention and neighbourhood watch schemes in the years 1985 to 1991.

Mr. John Patten: None. It would not be possible to provide central funds for every local crime prevention initiative. Between 1986 and 1988 a civilian neighbourhood watch assistant in the sub-division was appointed under the community programme. Since January 1991 there has been a similar placement under the employment training programme. I understand from Durham constabulary that local funding of a permanent neighbourhood watch assistant in the area is under consideration.

Passport Applications

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations his Department have received, and on what dates, regarding the passport application of Mrs. M. P. Williams of Blaengwynfi.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The right hon. and learned Member wrote to me on 20 December 1990 concerning Mrs. Williams' eligibility for a passport. He wrote again on 11 November 1991 about the application for citizenship which she lodged on 30 September 1991. I have today written to the right hon. and learned Member about the case.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dioxins

Mr. Soames: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will be in a position to publish the food surveillance report on dioxins.

Mr. Gummer: I am pleased to announce that the report, food surveillance paper No. 31, "Dioxins in Food" is published today.

The key finding is that levels of dioxins in United Kingdom food are so low that only the most sophisticated analytical techniques, capable of measuring accurately to 10 parts in a quadrillion—one thousand million million—can detect them. The report also records that the estimated average intake of dioxins via the diet is less than one quarter of the World Health Organisation tolerable daily intake. Any risk to health from these chemicals in food is therefore likely to be remote.

Other important findings were that levels of dioxins in milk were generally very low, especially at retail level and consumers' intake of dioxins from milk were consequently also low; levels of dioxins in all the samples of fruit, vegetables and eggs were extremely low and intakes from these foods were also very low; levels of dioxins in foods such as meat, fats and oils, and fish were, as expected, slightly higher than in the other foods tested—dioxins are known to accumulate in fatty tissues. Nevertheless, intakes from these products were still less than one tenth of the WHO tolerable daily intake.

The report also presents detailed results of the work carried out on milk from two farms near Bolsover in Derbyshire, previously announced on 26 June 1991, which was found to contain high levels of dioxins. Although retail milk in the area was found to be perfectly acceptable, action was taken last June as soon as the results became available to prevent milk from these premises entering the public supply thereby ensuring that consumers remained fully protected. The results from a special research programme currently being carried out on these farms will be published as soon as the work has been completed.

The report has been considered by independent expert committees, the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment, and the Food Advisory Committee. These committees welcomed the work carried out, and confirmed the remoteness of any health risk. Surveillance work will, however, continue as recommended by the committees.

Foxes

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the approximate size of the fox population in the United Kingdom; whether the animal carries disease; and what percentage of foxes are killed by hunting, shooting and gassing.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 24 January 1992]: The size of the fox population varies depending on the time of year, with an estimated 500,000 foxes in England, Scotland and Wales at the end of the summer, falling to 250,000 by the end of winter. Foxes can act as vectors for a number of diseases, most notably rabies on mainland Europe, and also a number of parasites such as Echinococcus granulosus, which can cause hydatid disease in man. It is estimated that 12,500 foxes are killed each year by hunting, while approximately 100,000 are killed by other means, including shooting. No products for gassing foxes are currently approved under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Central Statistical Office

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to introduce charges to users of statistics produced by the Central Statistical Office.

Mr. Maples: The Central Statistical Office is funded by vote to provide certain statistical services to Parliament, Government Departments and international organisations without charge. There is no plan to change these arrangements. The CSO will also continue to charge other users of its statistics in accordance with the policy set out in its agency framework document—paragraph 6.9 and annex F—a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Within the guidelines set out in annex F the CSO will, as stated in paragraph 6.5 of the framework document, explore ways of getting best value out of existing and potential revenue earning activities without detriment to its principal objectives: and that once the key objective of improving the quality and relevance of Government economic statistics has been substantially achieved it will be appropriate to give greater emphasis to increasing revenue.

Excise Duty

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out (a) the present rates of excise duty, expressed in ecus, charged by the respective EC member nations on beer, cider, table wine, fortified wine and spirits, (b) the agreed reference rates of excise duty on these products and the target dates for convergence by all member nations and (c) the changes that would need to be made in United Kingdom excise duties to match the action already taken in Denmark.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is as follows:

(a) Excise Duties in Ecus (latest available)

	Beer (at 12·5 Plato) per hlpa[1]	Cider (at 5 per cent. abv)[2] per hl	Wine	Spirits per hlpa[1]

(b) There are no agreed reference rates as yet. There are no target dates for convergence.

The Danish Government have reduced their excise duties on beer by 10·6 per cent., and on wine by 13·3 per cent. No matching action is required from the United Kingdom.

Golden Shares

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all those companies where the Government retain a golden share together with any restrictions on the use of such shares.

Mr. Maude: The table shows all the companies in which the Government holds special or "golden" shares. The only restriction as to the exercising of the rights attached to a special share is where such a share is time limited. Where this is applicable, the table shows the expiry date on or before which the Government may redeem a special share.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many claim forms have been received by the deposit protection board from BCCI depositors.

Mr. Maples: As at 24 January 1992, a total of 12,818 forms have been received by the Deposit Protection Board from BCCI depositors.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the estimated amount of payments under the deposit protection scheme for the BCCI depositors.

Mr. Maples: The amount which the deposit protection scheme will pay out to BCCI depositors will depend on how many depositors make valid claims under the scheme. The estimated maximum amount of payments would be some £88 million, on the information presently available, if all eligible sterling depositors were to make valid claims against the board.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many forms were sent out to BCCI depositors under the deposit protection scheme.

Mr. Maples: As at 24 January 1992, a total of 39,687 forms have been sent out to BCCI depositors. In addition, 13,676 forms have not yet been dispatched, as no correspondence addresses for depositors were maintained by BCCI, and the depositors have not themselves requested forms.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Allason: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the level of staffing at Inland Revenue offices in Torbay; and whether there are sufficient personnel to handle inquiries relating to the non-registration for uniform business rate by bed-and-breakfast premises.

Mr. Maude: Staffing levels in the Inland Revenue Valuation Office Agency are considered adequate to meet its statutory duties.

Privatisation

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount of debt written off in privatisations since 1988 giving the figures by company privatised.

Mr. Maude: The table attached shows the debt written off in privatisations since 1988 by company and type of debt.

Debt Written Off in Privatisations Since 1988

Company	Amount £	Type of Debt
British Steel	500,000,000	Public Dividend Capital
British Steel	3,480,000,000	Borrowing under Iron and Steel Act 1982

[1] Following reorganisation of the Scottish Electricity Companies prior to privatisation, this debt was transferred to Scottish Nuclear Ltd. and subsequently written off.

Competitive Tendering (Derbyshire)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 13, when he replied to the letter he received; and if he will make a further statement concerning Derbyshire county council's policies on competitive tendering.

Mr. Maude: I have received a letter.

Company Taxation

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Government will start the consultation on the legislation proposed for the tax treatment of groups of companies.

Mr. Maude: The Inland Revenue is today publishing draft clauses on groups of companies that the Government intend to introduce in the next Finance Bill. As I announced on 15 November 1991, the legislation, if passed by Parliament, will be effective from that date. Comments are invited by 28 February. Copies of the draft clauses have been placed in the Library of both Houses of Parliament.

Nurses

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to equalise for VAT purposes the charges made for qualified nurses for in-home care and those made for nurses who are not fully qualified and registered only as carers.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer on 28 January 1992]: The Government keep VAT law under constant review. I would not wish to anticipate my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's Budget Statement.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Baltic States

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to extend the application of its know-how funds to new categories of enterprises in the Baltic states.

Mrs. Chalker: There are no immediate plans to extend the know-how fund in the Baltic states beyond the following four priority sectors: food processing and distribution, financial services, small business creation and energy.

Aid

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 20 November, Official Report, column 204 and 28 November, Official Report, column 583, what percentage of British aid in 1989 was untied; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My answer to the hon. Member for Workington on 20 November related to total aid commitments. My answer on 28 November related to bilateral aid expenditure. The latest estimate of untied aid as a percentage of total aid commitments for 1989 is 34·8 per cent.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the percentage change in overseas aid was in real terms between 1979 and 1990.

Mrs. Chalker: Gross public expenditure on aid was 17 per cent. lower in real terms in 1990 compared with 1979. However, the aid programme is managed on a financial year basis and patterns of disbursements within financial years may not be reflected in calendar year statistics. Compared with 1979-80 gross public expenditure on aid in 1990-91 was 8 per cent. lower in real terms.

WALES

Business Rates

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he intends to make any adjustments to local authorities' 1990-91 contributions to the Welsh non-domestic rates pool.

Mr. David Hunt: I can confirm that following receipt of audited returns, my Department has written to 33 of the 37 district councils in Wales informing them of the adjustments I will be making to the contributions they made into the non-domestic rates pool during 1990-91. Authorities whose contributions to the pool were too high will receive repayments amounting to some £5,566,030, while authorities whose contributions were too low will be making additional payments amounting to £3,612,501. My Department will be writing to the remaining four district councils once queries associated with their audited returns have been resolved.

Parliamentary approval of this new expenditure is being sought in a spring supplementary estimate on class XVI, vote 11. Pending that approval, expenditure on repayments to local authorities will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

Schools Inspectorate

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has yet completed his review of the role and organisation of Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Yes. I propose an important and powerful role for Her Majesty's Inspectorate—HMI—which takes full account of the distinctive features of the education service in Wales. The Education (Schools) Bill now before Parliament establishes an independent office of Her Majesty's chief inspector—HMCI—of schools for Wales to oversee arrangements for a new system of regular school inspections and to provide me with advice on the quality of education provided by schools and the educational standards achieved by them, and whether the financial resources made available to schools are managed efficiently.

The new arrangements set out in the Education (Schools) Bill give effect to the Government's commitment in the citizens charter, and in the charter for parents in Wales that I published at the end of September, to give parents much more comprehensive and regular information about the standard of education in the schools their children attend. In future all schools will be inspected at regular intervals by inspectors who will be required to be registered for that purpose with HMCI. For the first time, parents will have the right—set out in legislation—to meet those undertaking the inspection and make their own views known. Parents will be sent a summary of the published inspection report; school governors will be required to prepare an action plan in the light of the report, send it to parents and report to parents on the implementation of that action plan. The proposals will lead to published reports on a much larger number of schools and on a much more frequent basis than under current arrangements. Together with the proposals for the publication of comparative information on examination results, attendance rates and the destinations of school leavers, these arrangements will give parents a far better picture of the education available in their locality and enable them to become more effective partners in the education of their children.

HMCI will be able to attach conditions to the registration of inspectors and will also have responsibility for monitoring their performance, approving or providing their training and giving guidance on good practice in school inspection. In addition, HMCI will be required to make an annual report to the Secretary of State, which will be laid before Parliament, and will undertake such other functions in connection with schools as may be assigned to him by the Secretary of State.

The powers available to this new statutory, independent office of HMCI will be considerable. I would expect them to be used to the full to ensure that school inspection in Wales will be of high standard and will reflect and safeguard distinctive features of the education system in Wales, notably Welsh-medium education and the teaching of the Welsh language and Welsh history and culture.

I shall shortly be announcing my intentions as regards the date when the new school inspection arrangements should come into operation in Wales, and also the frequency of inspections, taking account of the timetable for the progressive introduction of delegated budgets for schools and of the arrangements envisaged in England. HMI will continue its programme of inspection of schools until such time as the new arrangements come into effect.

The Education (Schools) Bill makes provision for HMI to have a continuing role in the direct inspection of schools in England and Wales. I believe this role to be important, especially in the initial stages of the new arrangements, in setting high standards of inspecting and reporting, monitoring the work of the new inspection agencies and providing a valuable source of evidence for advising on the maintenance of educational standards. HMI will also continue to inspect independent schools and advise me on schools that give cause for complaint in both the public and independent sectors.

The Further and Higher Education Bill provides for the transfer of important responsibilities in relation to further education, including quality assurance, to a Further Education Funding Council and it will be for the council to decide how to obtain the quality assessment services it will require; provision is being made in the Bill to enable it to obtain those services from HMCI if it wishes to do so. In view of the small numbers of staff involved in Wales and the consequent need for the maximum flexibility of operation, such an arrangement would offer clear advantages. The Bill provides for HMCI to undertake inspections of local authority maintained and assisted institutions providing further education courses, including adult education courses, and to provide me with advice. The Bill also provides that quality assessment in higher education should become the responsibility of the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales. Consequently, HMI will cease to inspect most areas of provision in this sector. However, they will continue to inspect initial teacher training and provide advice to the Secretary of State based on their reports.

I am strengthening the independence of HMI by creating a separate department headed by HMCI. HMI will no longer be members of the Welsh Office but will remain civil servants, retaining their existing terms and conditions of service. In the past the close working relationship between HMI and the Welsh Office Education Department has ensured that I have received the best possible advice based on up-to-date assessments of what schools and colleges are doing. HMI will continue to provide such advice for the benefit of all working in education in Wales.

Overall the new arrangements will necessitate a considerable change in the balance of the duties undertaken by HMI. I expect that in due course there will be some overall reduction in the numbers of HMI engaged in work related to schools but it is not possible to be precise at this stage; much will depend upon the rate at which local authority advisory and inspection services are able to adapt to the requirements of the new system, and upon the availability of independent registered inspectors able to work in Wales. I intend to keep the situation under review.

I would like to pay tribute to the work of HMI. They are universally respected as independent arbitrators of educational standards who have a key role to play in the reforms we are introducing in the education field. The new measures I have proposed will strengthen their independence and I know they will respond to the challenge of their new role.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the sectors of activity, in addition to the inspection of schools, of Her Majesty's inspectors of education in Wales; and what is the proportion of their time and resources devoted to each sector.

Sir Wyn Roberts: About 65 per cent. of the time of Her Majesty's inspectorate (Wales) is spent on inspecting and reporting; the remaining 35 per cent. is devoted to advising the Welsh Office/Ministers on current and emerging issues, providing advice to the educational system generally through assessorships, publications and courses/conferences and keeping up to date with educational developments.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in Wales were inspected by Her Majesty's inspectors of education during 1990-91; and how long it would take for all primary and secondary schools to be inspected at the same rate of inspection.

Sir Wyn Roberts: During 1990-91 Her Majesty's inspectorate visited more than 40 per cent. of primary schools and all secondary schools in Wales to inspect some aspect of their provision. These inspections include formal inspections of individual schools, national and county surveys of aspects of education—for example, mathematics, Welsh, English, science and technology—and visits by general inspectors to obtain information and assessments which contribute to the national picture. Each of the 230 secondary schools is thus visited annually and each of the 1,717 primary schools at least once every three years. Of the inspections undertaken in 1990-91, 33 were full inspections of primary schools and six were full inspections of secondary schools.

Pentreclwydau

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will agree the application for grant aid from Ryan Mining International to re-open Pentreclwydau pit in the Vale of Neath in order to fund a new rail link and associated infrastructure to take coal traffic off the highways.

Mr. David Hunt: An in-depth appraisal of Ryan Mining International's application for a freight facilities grant is under way and I shall make my decision when this work has been completed.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications for sheep annual premium scheme allocations completed by farmers in Wales were rejected during 1991 due to the forms being incorrectly completed; what was the total number of appeals submitted as a result of the refusals; and how many of these appeals were successful.

Mr. David Hunt: Of 17,384 claims for sheep annual premium in Wales in 1991, 76 had to be rejected owing to forms being incorrectly completed. The number of appeals submitted as a result is 46. None has been successful to date.

Radon Gas

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met representatives from the Institution of Environmental Health Officers to discuss levels of radon gas in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Until the results of the National Radiological Protection Board survey are available such a meeting would be premature. To date the Welsh Office-commissioned survey and that carried out by the National Radiological Protection Board have not revealed any towns or villages in which there may be significant effect on housing arising from radon.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated number of homes in Wales with a radon gas level of 200 bq/m³ or over.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: It is not possible to estimate the number of homes in Wales with radon levels above 200 bq/m³ until the full results of the National Radiological Protection Board survey are known.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which areas of Wales are covered by the free on demand measurement service for householders in areas with high radon levels; how many applications have been forthcoming under the scheme; and what are the main findings of the research undertaken.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Any householder in Wales concerned about radon can ask for a free measurement. To date, 195 surveys have been requested. The results of the National Radiological Protection Board survey are not yet available.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ensure that all new houses built in Wales incorporate (a) a radon-proof polythene membrane and (b) radon sump and extract pump or ventilated subfloor void.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I will consider what measures, if any, may be needed when the full results of the National Radiological Protection Board survey become available.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, North of 20 January, Official Report, columns 177-79, what information he has on (a) the cost and (b) the length of time required for the completion of a study of the application of de-watering pumps to the reduction of side-effects on property affected by the proposed Cardiff bay barrage.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has no firm views at present on the length of time or cost of this study.

Royal Navy Armaments Depot, Trecwn

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is his best estimate of the civilian job losses that will arise in the local community as a consequence of the closure of the Royal Navy armaments depot, Trecwn; and when these will take place;

(2) what is his estimate of the civilian job losses that will arise in the local community as a consequence of the closure of RAF Brawdy; and when the jobs will go.

Mr. David Hunt: Around 80 direct jobs will be lost at RAF Brawdy and 415 direct jobs are affected at RNAD, Trecwn which is to close in 1996. The wider effects of these decisions will be considered by the task force which I announced on 24 January.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the cash contribution currently made to the local economy as a result of the employment provided at the Royal Navy armaments depot, Trecwn.

Mr. David Hunt: No official estimate is available of the cash contribution of RNAD, Trecwn to the local economy.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the cash contribution currently made to the local economy as a result of the employment provided at RAF Brawdy.

Mr. David Hunt: No official estimate is available of the cash contribution made to the local economy by RAF Brawdy. I am, however, aware that the local authorities and the Transport and General Workers Union published figures in their social and economic study of RAF Brawdy in March last year. This report will be taken into consideration by the task force which I announced on 24 January.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) whether he will take steps to launch an initiative to provide new jobs in the local economy to replace those being lost as a result of the proposed closure of the Royal Navy armaments depot, Trecwn;

(2) whether he will take steps to launch an initiative to provide new jobs in the local economy to replace those being lost as a result of the proposed closure of RAF Brawdy.

Mr. David Hunt: In the light of the Secretary of State for Defence's announcement on 24 January that RNAD, Trecwn is to be progressively run down and closed in March 1996 and that flying training at RAF Brawdy is to end on 31 August 1992, I have announced that a special task force for the area is to be established with immediate effect. It will be the responsibility of the task force to: consider and make recommendations on short-term measures to alleviate the impact of these decisions; study the economic potential of the area affected, identify its strengths and weaknesses and make recommendations on measures to secure the economic regeneration of the area; seek alternative uses, including possible defence uses, for the site at RAF Brawdy; and to consider alternative uses for the site at RNAD, Trecwn following its closure; and review the co-ordination of the activities and plans of central and local government and of the principal agencies in the area.

In addition, I also propose to chair a strategy group, comprising the chairmen of all the relevant organisations, to launch the task force programme and monitor its progress.

RNAD, Milford

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many jobs were lost to the local area as a result of the closure of the Royal Navy armaments depot, Milford.

Mr. David Hunt: The Ministry of Defence announced in March 1988 that the Royal Navy armaments depot at Milford Haven would be gradually run down and close by March 1991. At the time of the announcement 175 people were employed at the base. Of these, 79 transferred to RNAD, Trecwn; 11 to other Government Departments; 12 were lost through natural wastage and 73 were made redundant.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the financial contribution made by the Royal Navy armaments depot, Milford to the local economy, directly and indirectly (a) when operating at its height and (b) in the year prior to closure, expressed in 1992 prices.

Mr. David Hunt: I am not aware of any official assessment of the financial contribution made by the RNAD, Milford to the local economy.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he took to launch an initiative to provide new jobs in the local economy to counteract the effect on jobs, the local economy and the local community arising from the closure of the Royal Navy armaments depot, Milford.

Mr. David Hunt: Following the announcement in 1988 that RNAD, Milford Haven would close in 1991, my predecessor met a delegation, led by my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett). Subsequently the Milford Haven business initiative was established under the auspices of the Welsh Development Agency. Under the initiative and assocaited programmes a total of £2·5 million actual and approved expenditure has been spent in the town to date by the WDA on improvements.

Since the depot closed on 31 March 1991, the MOD has sold the site for a variety of industrial and housing purposes, including a £35 million jetty to handle super-tankers for Gulf Oil.

There is also a wide range of measures available through my Department and the other agencies, including the West Wales training and enterprise council which became operational on 27 March last year, to assist those made redundant to secure alternative employment and to stimulate job creation.

Job Losses

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, for each of the last four years, each company or organisation which has (a) shed jobs or (b) closed a unit in Pembrokeshire, together with the number of jobs involved in each case; and what action he has taken to counteract the effects of those specific job losses in each case.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of confirmed redundancies for the last four years for the Haverfordwest, Fishguard and South Pembrokeshire travel-to-work areas are: 113 (1988), 106 (1989), 295 (1990) and 166 in 1991. The details of the individual companies cannot be provided for reasons of confidentiality.

Unemployment rates for the three travel-to-work areas were as follows in December 1985 and December 1991:

	December 1985 Percentage	December 1991 Percentage
South Pembrokeshire	20·1	14·8
Haverfordwest	16·8	11·1
Fishguard	14·6	9·2

There is a wide range of measures available through my Department and the other agencies to assist those who are unemployed and to stimulate job creation.

Quangos

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many quangos have been set up in Wales since 9 June 1979; and if he will list each of them with the year in whch they were set up.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 21 January 1992]: Five non-departmental public bodies have been set up in Wales since 9 June 1979. Their names and the year in which each was set up are shown as follows:

Body	Year set up
Welsh National Board for Nursing Midwifery and Health Visiting	1983
Cardiff Bay Development Corporation	1987
Curriculum Council for Wales	1988
Housing for Wales	1989
Countryside Council for Wales	1991

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nominee Shareholdings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to abolish nominee shareholdings.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many registered auditors there are in the United Kingdom; and what information he has on the number of registered auditors in Germany.

Mr. Redwood: At 14 January some 27,800 individuals were registered with supervisory bodies under the Companies Act 1989 as being eligible for appointment as company auditors or responsible for company audit work on behalf of registered audit firms. I understand that there are two categories of auditors in Germany: about 12,000 Wirtschaftspruefer, who audit the accounts of large companies, and about 52,000 Steuerberater, who normally act for individuals and small companies.

Shipbuilding Intervention Fund

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his Department's policy on implementation of the recent EC decision on the level of intervention funding allowed to smaller ships.

Mr. Leigh: Following the decision of the European Commission, notified to member states on 7 January 1992, I have decided to reduce the maximum level of support for large merchant ships from 13 to 9 per cent. with effect from 1 January 1992. I have similarly decided that maximum support for small ships will be reduced from 9 to 4·5 per cent. from the same date. The new levels, which are the maximum permitted by the European Commission are inclusive of shipbuilders relief at 2 per cent. A sliding scale will no longer be applied to applications for aid in respect of small ships. In addition, the United Kingdom definition of "small ship" will be amended to thus aligning it with the EC definition. Vessels costing less than £1 million will no longer be eligible for shipbuilding intervention fund support.

"a ship costing less than the equivalent of ECU10 million to build"

Privatisation

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give in respect of each privatisation since 1979 (a) the loss or profit of each company in the five years prior to privatisation and (b) any grants or loans made over the same period.

Mr. Redwood: The figures for the major privatisations undertaken by my Department are as follows:

ECGD Insurance Services Group ("ISG")

Prior to privatisation, no separate audited financial statements were prepared for ISG, although some financial details of the ISG business are contained in ECGD's annual trading accounts, copies of which are held in the Libraries of the House.

For the purposes of inviting tenders for ISG, illustrative pro forma financial information concerning the business was compiled by ECGD's accountancy advisers on the sale. Copies of this information were provided to the Library of the House in April and May 1991.

ECGD did not receive grants or loans during the period 1986 to 1991.

Cable and Wireless

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to vary the terms of the golden share he holds in Cable and Wireless.

Mr. Redwood: I have no such plans.

Company Boards

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all those companies where the Government have the right to appoint directors to company boards, and publish a list of all such directors appointed since 1987.

Mr. Redwood: This information is not held centrally.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the number of applications granted for regional selective assistance and total amount of grant allocated in the district of West Lancashire in 1990-91 and 1991-92 to date.

Mr. Leigh: In the financial year 1990-91 the Department made offers totalling £647,000 on six applications for regional selective assistance in the local authority district of West Lancashire. Between 1 April 1991 and 23 January 1992 a further nine offers were made with a total value of £1,006,000.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West of 22 January, Official Report, column 243 when the cost per job limit for regional selective assistance was last altered.

Mr. Leigh: The cost per job limit is an administrative criterion which forms part of the terms under which Treasury authority to make financial assistance available under section 7(1) of the Industrial Development Act 1982 is delegated to the Secretary of State. The terms of the delegated powers are subject to regular review; the cost per job limit has remained unchanged since 1984.

Instruments of Torture

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will investigate the supply of equipment by British companies for use for execution or torture.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave on 23 January, Official Report, columns 292-94.

Steel Production

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what quantity of steel and engineering steel was produced in the United Kingdom in the last quarter of 1991 and in the same period in 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Leigh: Information on crude steel production is regularly published in "Economic Trends" which is available in the Library of the House. "Engineering steel" cannot be separately identified in production statistics.

Furniture Industry

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to be in a position to respond to the concerns of the British Self-Catering Federation with regard to EC proposals on material content in furniture and associated issues; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 27 January 1992]: The Commission decided, in May 1991, to suspend work on the draft EC directive on the fire behaviour of upholstered furniture pending further research into the fire characteristics of materials used in furniture and into test methods. The objective of this research is to support requirements imposing limits on the burning behaviour of upholstered furniture and the associated emission of smoke and toxic gases. We have made it clear to the Commission that we will retain our furniture regulations until a regime consistent with the level of protection in the United Kingdom is available under the directive.

The application of the United Kingdom's Furniture and Furnishings (Fire Safety) Regulations to self-catering holiday accommodation has necessitated a wide ranging review of the legal position with the involvement of other Departments. I am consulting with colleagues about a possible way forward and I hope to be able to make some positive proposals shortly.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry at what time he received the letter from the Official Receiver on 14 January; and at what time his letter was dispatched appointing the liquidators of the BCCI.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 28 January 1992]: On the making of the winding up order against BCCI on 14 January 1992 the Official Receiver applied by fax to the Secretary of State for the appointment of joint liquidators in his place. This fax was received by officials at 12.57 on 14 January who confirmed the appointment by the Secretary of State by fax at 13.09 on the same day.

HEALTH

Factor 8

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of factor 8 produced by the Bio Products Laboratory is of high purity 8 SM.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is commercially confidential.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the number of units of factor 8 which the national blood transfusion service or the national health service has purchased from overseas suppliers in each of the last two years.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available centrally.

Blood and Plasma

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment his Department has made of the implications of the single European market on progress towards national self-sufficiency in blood and plasma products; and if he will make a statement;

(2) by what date he envisages that the United Kingdom and Europe will have self-sufficiency in blood and plasma products.

Mr. Dorrell: The EC directive which harmonises the licensing requirements for blood products promotes a policy of Community self-sufficiency in such products derived from the donations of voluntary and unpaid donors but does not forbid importation. This is consistent with our own long-standing policy of seeking self-sufficiency in blood products sourced from our own volunteer donors. Nevertheless, while promoting self-sufficiency we also recognise the clinical freedom of doctors to choose the product most suitable for an individual patient.

Imported products are being prescribed in this country as the result of the preference of individual clinicians. The Bio-Products Laboratory is meeting in full the current demand for its blood products and continues to make efforts to increase its share of the blood products market but the choice of product remains with the clinician.

No target date has yet been set for the achievement of self-sufficiency in blood products throughout the EC.

National Blood Authority

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding his recent circular on the establishment of a national blood authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received a wide range of responses to the consultation document on the proposal to establish a national blood authority—NBA—to oversee the provision of blood supplies in England. Respondents have generally supported the principle of a NBA to replace the national directorate of the National Blood Transfusion Service and the Central Blood Laboratories Authority. We now propose to set up a technical working group of the main National Health Service interests to consider the relevant operational matters.

Our blood supply is among the safest in the world thanks to our blood services and the voluntary donors who freely give their blood for the benefit of those who need it. We consider the NBA will be effective in maintaining and improving on the high standards of safety, quality and efficiency in our blood services to the benefit of both patients and donors.

Waiting Lists (Haringey)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the latest waiting list for each specialty in the Haringey health authority and the number of people who have waited (a) for over one year and (b) for over two years, in each specialty.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest information available centrally is given in the table.

Waiting list data—at 31 March 1991
Haringey health authority—ordinary admissions and day cases

Capital Charging System

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total cost of administering the first year of the capital charging system for his Department.

Mr. Dorrell: About £53,000.

Arachnoiditis

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of medical negligence (a) have been settled and (b) are still outstanding by sufferers of arachnoiditis.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

NHS Staff and Beds

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many beds and nursing and auxiliary nursing staff there were in the Ryhope general hospital in the years from 1985 to 1991;

(2) if he will list the number of acute beds in (a) Sunderland general hospital, Sunderland royal infirmary, (b) Hartlepool general hospital and (c) Dryburn general hospital, Durham, during the years 1985 to 1991; and if he will indicate the number of nursing staff and auxiliary staff in the above named hospitals during the same years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Myelograms

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has offered to health authorities on the continued use of myelograms.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None. Prescribing information is available to doctors in the data sheets of the individual products used in myelograms. It is for doctors who use a product to ensure that they are fully familiar with the benefits and the risks of any procedure or treatment.

Research Institutes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by standard region (a) the research institutes operated for, or on behalf of, his Department and the total employment thereat, (b) the total number of such institutes and the total employment therein and (c) if he will express the regional totals as a percentage of the national totals.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department provides funding in support of research through its centrally commissioned research—CCR—programme, the national health service and a number of non-departmental public bodies.

Information in the form requested is available only for the research units funded under the CCR. This is set out in the table. Further information on the CCR is contained in the "DH Yearbook of Research and Development 1990" a copy of which is available in the Library.

As a result of our new R and D strategy announced last April, we expect an increase in employment opportunities for health researchers in coming years.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation to ensure that private nursing homes, as a condition of being licensed, provide physiotherapy, and chiropody services; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Regulations made under the Registered Homes Act 1984 already require that, among other things, the person registered shall, having regard to the age and condition of patients, provide adequate professional and other staff and adequate treatment facilities. It is our view that this would extend, in an appropriate case, to physiotherapy and chiropody services.

"Putting Women in the Picture"

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he received a copy of "Putting Women in the Picture", produced by the British Medical Association.

Mr. Dorrell: We received a copy of the version of this report published in the British Medical Journal—BMJ volume 304, 11 January 1992—on 10 January 1992.

Home Care Services

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what, in the last 12 months, was the number of (a) social services clients receiving home care services, (b) how many of these paid a charge, (c) how many of those who are chargeable had the charge waived on hardship grounds and (d) how many of those charged were in receipt of attendance allowance.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally. Some information about numbers of clients is contained in the annual Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy publication "Personal Social Service Statistics Actuals", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Low Income Scheme

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will extend the national health service low income scheme to include the cost of glasses.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Help with the cost of spectacles is already available under the NHS low income scheme to people with limited resources.

Specialist Hospital Units

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of patients will be taken on by specialist hospital units on an extra-contractual arrangement after April 1992; whether this will be both in the short-term and the long-term; and what arrangements will be made to accommodate any consequential financial shortfall arising from the transition to the new system of contracts;

(2) which specialist hospital units have completed the drawing up of contracts with regions and districts; and for each unit what is the number of contracts made.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally. Regional and district health authorities are currently agreeing and finalising their 1992-93 contracts with providers.

Spinal Injury Units

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department issued guidance on contracting after 1992 to the spinal injuries units; and what was the advice given.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In his annual statement about supra-regional services my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in February 1991 the transfer of responsibility for funding spinal injury services to regions. This will become effective on 1 April 1992 and allows regional health authorities time to plan for smooth incorporation of units into the normal contracting arrangements.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding spinal injuries units will receive directly from central Government after April 1992; how the former supra-regional funding will be distributed; and on what basis each unit will receive its allocation.

Mr. Dorrell: From 1 April 1992 funding currently provided to the spinal injury units via the supra-regional services has been included in the main revenue allocations of regional health authorities. Former supra-regional funding has been distributed to regions on the basis of historical patient flows to each unit. Units will receive funding via contracts agreed with purchasers.

Mesothelioma

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of deaths from mesothelioma in England and in Wales during each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: The number of deaths in England, and Wales, with any mention of mesothelioma on the death certificate in 1986-90 is as follows:

	England	Wales
1986	642	30
1987	649	28
1988	868	18
1989	783	20
1990	814	27

Population Statistics

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the latest estimates by the Registrar General of (a) total populations and (b) populations aged 18 years old and over for each district council area in England and Wales.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is given in the table.

Electors

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish his estimates for 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991 of (a) the total number of adults eligible to vote and (b) the total number registered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 20 January 1992]: The information requested, relating to England and Wales, is as follows:

(Thousands)

	Total parliamentary electors	Approximate corresponding resident population at preceding mid-year
1988	38,629	39,852
1989	38,561	40,040
1990	38,596	40,203
1991	38,509	40,305

The electorate figures include unknown numbers of legitimate dual registrations—by persons with second homes and students—each year, as well as overseas electors.

The resident population estimates include persons aged 17, and 63 per cent. of those aged 16, who will become 18 during the period when each electoral register is in use. No account has been taken of adults who die between the mid-year reference date and the 10 October qualifying date for the following year's electoral register. The estimates include residents who are not Commonwealth citizens or citizens of the Republic of Ireland, persons detained in mental institutions, and peers, none of whom are eligible to be parliamentary electors.

These population estimates are based on the 1981 census; provisional estimates for 1991 based on the 1991 census will be available in the autumn.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Higher Education

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the outcome of his consultations about a common financial year in the proposed single higher education system.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My Department and the Welsh Office education department are today writing to higher education institutions in the following terms:

Higher education institutions: A common financial year

The White Paper, "Higher Education: A New Framework" (Cm. 1541), indicated the Government's intention that there should be a common financial year to operate within institutions in the new higher education sector. By "financial year" is meant that period for which accounts are maintained. As a first step, the White Paper indicated that there would be consultation with the UFC and PCFC on what that year should be. There would then be consultation with institutions' representative bodies.

Following consultation as indicated above, the Government have decided that the common financial year should be 1 August—31 July. This was the preferred option of the representative bodies of higher education institutions and the Funding Councils, and reflects the cycle of academic activity in most institutions.

Subject to the passage of the Further and Higher Education Bill [Lords], the Secretary of State proposes to direct that the 1993-94 financial year of Higher Education Corporations shall be 1 August—31 July. Subsequent financial years shall be each successive period of twelve months. The 1992-93 financial year will therefore end on 31 July 1993.

Other higher education institutions in receipt of public funding have the power to determine their own financial years, and those which currently do not operate on 1 August—31 July are requested to change on a similar timetable to that proposed for the Corporations.

GCSE Results

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of young people in local education authority schools in Lambeth, Southwark, Lewisham and Greenwich achieved one or more GCSE in 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not available centrally.

Training

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average cost of full-time vocational training provided by colleges of further education in Greenwich, Lambeth, Lewisham and Southwark.

Mr. Eggar: The information available to the Department is not disaggregated in the form requested.

Local Authorities (Sport)

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the latest outturn of spending by local authorities on the provision of sport and recreation which were relevant to his Department.

Mr. Atkins: Total net expenditure on sport and active recreation by local authorities in England was £781 million in 1989-90. This is the latest available final outturn figure. Figures for the preceding three years are as follows:

Local authority net expenditure on sport and active recreation in England

£ million

	Current	Capital	Total
1986-87	362	154	516
1987-88	381	156	537
1988-89	413	194	607

School Leavers

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide for Greater London a table showing the numbers of school leavers in each year from 1988 to 1991 who went into (a) a job, (b) a YT or YTS, (c) further education, (d) unemployment and (e) none of these.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 January 1992]: The table gives a breakdown of the pupils leaving school in Greater London, analysed by their intended destinations for the academic years 1987-88 to 1989-90, the latest year for which information is available. The Department does not hold information on the numbers of school leavers expecting to become unemployed.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Farming

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were employed in farming in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is given in the table. It is based on returns made in the June agricultural census, which does not cover minor holdings.

Year	Total agricultural labour force
1987	59,383
1988	59,455
1989	59,096
1990	58,436
1991	57,212

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many full-time farmers there were in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is given in the table. It is based on returns made in the June agricultural census, which does not cover minor holdings.

Year	Full-time farmers
1987	24,583
1988	24,620
1989	23,199
1990	22,722
1991	22,307

Fire Services

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the population of Donaghadee in the censuses of 1981 and 1991; what is the estimated additional population in the Donaghadee/Ballywalter area in the summer due to caravan holiday makers; how many fire engines were based in Donaghadee in 1981 and at the end of 1991; how many fire calls there were to the Donaghadee fire station in each of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement on the future adequacy of the fire service in Donaghadee.

Mr. Needham: The population of Donaghadee in the 1981 census was 4,018. The 1991 census figure will not be available for some considerable time. However, the electoral ward figure in the 1991 census preliminary report for the town of Donaghadee and surrounding area is 5,662 as compared to 5,599 in 1981. The estimated additional population in the Donaghadee/Ballywalter area in the summer due to caravan holiday makers is approximately 11,800. This figure is based on the number of caravans currently licensed and assumes four persons per caravan.

Two fire engines were based at Donaghadee in 1981 and one at the end of 1991.

Details of the fire calls to Donaghadee fire station are as follows:

	Number
1982	111
1983	186
1984	155
1985	121
1986	157
1987	168
1988	137
1989	133
1990	142
1991	209

The fire authority's recent survey indicates that the town of Donaghadee is a category C fire risk area and the surrounding area is category D. The authority is satisfied that it can meet the Home Office standard response times for these risk categories by the provision of one fire engine at the Donaghadee station and appropriate levels of support from surrounding stations, including the new whole-time station at Bangor, when necessary. The position is kept under regular review.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fire engines were based in the peninsula electoral areas of Ards borough council at the end of 1990; how many engines are based there at present; at which locations they are based; when a new fire engine will be based at Ballywalter; and if he will make a statement about the adequacy of the fire services in the peninsula area between the present time and the provision of the new fire engine at Ballywalter.

Mr. Needham: Seven fire engines were based in the Peninsula electoral areas of Ards borough council at the end of 1990. Six are based there at present located as follows:

Newtownards — 3
Donaghadee — 1
Portaferry — 2

The fire authority expects that, subject to the satisfactory training of personnel, a new fire engine will be based at Ballywalter in early 1993. At present the Ballywalter area is marginally outside the Home Office standard response time of 20 minutes from the nearest neighbouring fire station at Donaghadee. The provision of a fire engine at Ballywalter will enable the fire authority to rectify this. The fire authority is satisfied with the adequacy of fire services elsewhere in the Peninsula area.

Population Statistics

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the latest estimates by the Registrar General of (a) total populations and (b) populations aged 18 years old and over for each district council area in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested, taken from the 1990 mid-year estimates of population, is as follows:

District council area	Population (to nearest 100)
Ards	65,400
Belfast	295,100
Castlereagh	58,100
Down	57,700
Lisburn	98,700
North Down	72,600
Antrim	47,600
Ballymena	57,300
Ballymoney	24,100
Carrickfergus	31,000
Coleraine	48,600
Cookstown	27,700
Larne	29,000
Magherafelt	33,200
Moyle	15,000
Newtownabbey	72,900
Armagh	49,100
Banbridge	32,100
Craigavon	78,200
Dungannon	43,800
Newry and Mourne	89,700
Fermanagh	50,600
Limavady	29,900
Derry	100,500
Omagh	45,800
Strabane	35,700

Figures on age breakdown of the population to district council level are not produced in mid-year estimates. However, this information will be included in the Northern Ireland census 1991 summary report, to be published in the autumn.

Prisoner Statistics

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners in Northern Ireland prisons were serving (a) mandatory and (b) discretionary life sentences on 31 December; and in each case how many of them had served more than 10 years on that date.

Dr. Mawhinney: A total of 311 prisoners were serving mandatory life sentences, of whom 164 had served more than 10 years. Fifteen prisoners were serving discretionary life sentences, of whom 12 had served more than 10 years.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of those prisoners who had served more than 10 years on 31 December are in a segregated wing chosen by (a) Republican and (b) Loyalist prisoners.

Dr. Mawhinney: Forty seven life sentence prisoners were in segregated republican wings and 27 life sentence prisoners were in segregated loyalist wings.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the length of sentence served by each prisoner in Northern Ireland prisons sentenced to a (a) mandatory and (b) discretionary life sentence which exceeded 10 years on 31 December.

Dr. Mawhinney: It would be inappropriate to list individual prisoners and the sentences they have served, but the table gives a summary of the numbers who have been detained for more than 10 years.

Type of sentence	Number of prisoners by years served
	10	11	12	13	14	15	16	17	18	Total
Mandatory	12	29	18	23	46	22	9	2	3	164
Discretionary	1	2	1	3	4	3	1	0	0	12

National Insurance

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what would be the effect in in 1991-92 and 1992-93, on both a first year and a full year basis, on the national insurance contributions of (a) employees and (b) employees and the self-employed, if (i) national insurance contributions were chargeable at the current rates on fringe benefit, (ii) national insurance contributions were chargeable at the current rates on unearned income of those under retirement age in excess of £60 per week, (iii) the ceilings on contributions were abolished, (iv) a combination of (i), (ii) and (iii) and (v) as (iv), but if contracting-out rebates were abolished and the current 9 per cent. contribution rate was cut to 8 per cent.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 24 January 1992]: I regret that it is not possible to provide all the information requested. However, figures for the revenue yield of national insurance if the ceilings on contributions were abolished are:

£ million

	First year	Full year
1991-92
Employees only	25	30
Employees and self-employed	30	40

SOCIAL SECURITY

Students (Vacation Payments)

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received concerning the restriction of social security payments to students during their vacations.

Miss Widdecombe: We have received a number of representations on this matter, but responsibility for student maintenance is that of my right hon. and Learned Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

Employment Training (Disability)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what ways participation in employment training or youth training will affect the eligibility for disability living allowance of a person with a disability who will qualify for either the mobility and/or care elements of disability living allowance after April 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Participation in employment training or youth training will not affect entitlement to either component of disability living allowance. There will be no change in the curent arrangements for attendance allowance; after six months on such a scheme, claimants will be asked whether their needs have changed. The award may then be reviewed, depending on the claimant's answer.

Homes (Fees)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evidence he has of whether elderly people have been obliged to leave residential or nursing homes because they were unable to meet the fees.

Miss Widdecombe: We have received no such evidence.

Housing Costs

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what rules govern entitlement to mortgage interest payments to those on income support who have contractual mortgages where the interest rate is fixed annually and where that rate is greater than the prevailing monthly interest rate for other mortgages;

(2) what guidance is issued to local office staff when determining the level of mortgage interest payments to those on income support where the interest charged on their mortgage is greater than the average mortgage rate of interest;

(3) what figure is used to calculate the level of mortgage interest rates when income support claimants are eligible for assistance with mortgage interest payments;

(4) how many people receiving mortgage interest payments from income support are liable to make monthly payments subject to review by the lender at fixed annual intervals.

Miss Widdecombe: Income support mortgage interest payments are calculated using the interest rate chargeable on the loan in question, even if that rate is greater than the generally prevailing one. There are no special rules for fixed interest rate mortgages. Guidance for local office staff on the calculation of income support mortgage interest, including details of some of the various schemes on the market, is included in the adjudication officers guide, a copy of which is available in the Library.

No statistics are collected on the numbers of income support recipients with mortgages subject to annual review by the lender.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his answer of 24 January, what response he has made to the representations made by Bradford and district Age Concern between July and November 1991 about cold weather payments in Bradford.

Mr. Scott: Replies have been sent to Bradford and district Age Concern.

DEFENCE

Battalions

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 514, on how many occasions battalions, other than those on a spearhead tour of duty, have been deployed over the past five years to meet various short-notice requirements, excluding Operation Granby.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Between January 1987 and December 1991 there have been six occasions when additional units have been deployed to meet short-notice requirements, each time to Northern Ireland, for short periods. Two units—the 1st Battalion, the Royal Highland Fusiliers and the 27th Field Regiment, Royal Artillery—are also currently temporarily deployed to the Province.

Military Training Grounds

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to designate any further areas of mid-Wales as military training grounds for members of the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans at present to acquire any major new area of land in Wales for military training. The reshaping of our armed forces is, however, likely to result in increased pressure on existing training areas throughout the United Kingdom. The Ministry of Defence may therefore need from time to time to acquire or dispose of land on the edges of some of these areas in order to enhance their integrity and training value.

Tracked Vehicles

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department intends that tracked vehicles should make increased use of training areas in Scotland as a result of proposed changes in deployment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no such plans.

Military Satellites

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what contribution his Department is making to the costs of studies of options for future military satellites currently being undertaken by the Western European Union;

(2) what contribution his Department is making to the costs of operation of the Western European Union satellite station at Torrejon air force base in Spain.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A satellite data interpretation and training centre is to be established in Spain with a United Kingdom director, for an experimental period of three years. The United Kingdom contribution of £4·6 million will be met by my Department. The United Kingdom contribution of £0·6 million to WEU satellite systems feasibility studies will be met by the Department of Trade and Industry.

REME Workshops, Liverpool

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for 42 district workshops REME, Liverpool.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A study into the Army's requirements for static workshops is now in progress. No decisions have yet been taken.

Firefighters

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the salary scales of each grade of firefighter in the armed forces; and what mechanisms exist to study comparability with firefighters employed by fire and civil defence authorities.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Service men trained in firefighting skills are paid at the same rate as other service personnel of equal rank and pay banding. No mechanism exists to study comparability with firefighters employed by fire and civil defence authorities.

Industrial Base

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the future size and shape of the British defence industrial base.

Mr. Alan Clark: I am confident that the commercial approach to procurement which my Department pursues will continue to ensure that the British defence industry remains strong, efficient and innovative.

Defence Budgets

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish what information he has regarding the defence budgets of all members of NATO; and if he will show for each their defence budget (a) as a percentage of gross domestic product and (b) in £ sterling.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to table 10 of volume 1 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991". The average exchange rate used was $1·79 to £1.

Defence Establishment Closures

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what arrangements he made (a) to inform the work force and (b) to make a public announcement of the closure decision in respect of the Royal Navy armaments depot, Trecwn;

(2) what arrangements he made (a) to inform the work force and (b) to make a public announcement of his decision to close RAF Brawdy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) and for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) on 24 January, Official Report, columns 377-78. The work forces at both establishments were informed in the usual way.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the arrangements to involve the Welsh Office in the decision-making process on the future of (i) Royal Navy armaments depot, Trecwn and (ii) RAF Brawdy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There has been regular contact between the MOD and the Welsh Office, at ministerial and official level, throughout the decision-making process. The MOD will be represented on the special west Wales task force which was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales on 24 January.

Military Bases

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on informing the work force at military bases of closure decisions prior to that information being made public.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In accordance with departmental practice, announcements on closure decisions are made to the work force concerned at the time the decision becomes public knowledge.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Theft

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many thefts were reported in the Palace of Westminster in 1989 and 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Thirty-seven and 66 respectively. Each report of property stolen is vigorously followed up by the police. The amount of property stolen would be considerably reduced if articles of value were secured and desks and filing cabinets locked when offices are left unattended.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is his estimate of (a) how many adults will be eligible for training under the employment training initiative in Greenwich, Lambeth, Lewisham and Southwark in 1992-93 and (b) the percentage of these adults who are likely to be classified as facing special training needs;

(2) what is his estimate of (a) the number of young people likely to fall into the youth training guarantee group in 1992-93, in the four boroughs of Greenwich, Lambeth, Lewisham and Southwark and (b) the percentage of these young people in the youth training guarantee group who are likely to have special training needs.

Mr. Jackson: The south Thames training and enterprise council, which covers Greenwich, Lambeth, Lewisham and Southwark, is responsible for providing training places under employment training and youth training in its area, including training places for those with special training needs. The training and enterprise council is currently discussing the number of training places required in 1992-93 with my officials.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated average cost for providing additional support for trainees on youth training and employment training for (a) child care support, (b) language support, (c) travel, (d) communication services for the deaf and premises adaptation and (e) other specialist support for people with disabilities.

Mr. Jackson: The information is not available.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the average cost of providing training for adults and young people on employment training and youth training programmes in Greenwich, Lambeth, Lewisham and Southwark.

Mr. Jackson: The south Thames training and enterprise council, which covers Greenwich, Lambeth, Lewisham and Southwark, is currently negotiating its plans for 1992-93 with my officials. While these negotiations are in progress they are subject to normal confidentiality.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the percentage of young people and adults eligible for employment training and youth training, who may require child care support payments in Lambeth, Lewisham, Greenwich and Southwark.

Mr. Jackson: It is not possible to estimate the number of young people and adults who may require help with the cost of child care in order to enter YT and ET. Training and enterprise councils are required to provide reasonable and necessary support costs, including child care, for those ET and YT trainees who are resident or normally resident in the TEC area, and who are in the guarantee and aim groups.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people were registered as unemployed and covered by the guarantee by the careers offices in Lambeth, Southwark, Lewisham and Greenwich on 10 January.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not available in the form requested.

Tourism

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been achieved in finding a method of accumulating statistics of day visitors to coastal resort towns so an appropriate criteria can be added to the standard spending assessment calculations, to compensate local authorities for the extra expenditure required to support tourism.

Mr. Forth: Information on day visits from the home is available for most counties from the leisure day visits survey. Officials from my Department are assisting their colleagues in the Department of the Environment who are considering how this and subsequent survey data can best be developed for use in the standard spending assessment calculations.

Work Permits

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the number of work permits issued by his Department in each of the last three years; and what was the employment for which these permits were given.

Mr. Forth: The total number of work permits granted in 1989, 1990 and 1991 were 29,730, 34,627 and 28,978 respectively. The main areas of employment in each year for which permits were granted were:

Occupational groups	1989	1990	1991
Professional entertainers	12,107	13,289	12,248
Company secretaries, accountancy occupations	4,877	5,442	3,921
Directors, general managers	2,050	2,318	1,697
Engineering researchers, designers, consultants	1,695	1,877	1,144
Management specialists	1,279	1,024	666
Scientific researchers and consultants	1,155	974	1,092
Hotel and catering occupations	1,104	1,186	1,060
Health care occupations	973	1,317	1,398
Teaching and training occupations	840	2,764	1,373
Construction specialists	840[1]	1,675	1,982
Marketing and public relations specialists etc.	629	532	327

[1] Revised figure.

Of the total figures for each year 4,228, 4,812 and 3,513 were granted in 1989, 1990 and 1991 under the training and work experience scheme.

Disabled People

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to publicise the advantages to employers of employing disabled people in respect of their aptitude for certain kind of work, including routine work.

Mr. Jackson: We believe that people with disabilities have the same range of abilities as others in the labour market, and that they should have access to the full range of employment opportunities. The Department already encourages employers to recognise the advantages of employing people with disabilities and to adopt and implement constructive policies and practices in this area. The Employment Service's disablement advisory service works with employers to achieve this.

In 1984, the Department published the code of good practice on the employment of disabled people; in 1990, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State launched the disability symbol initiative, which offers employers the opportunity to state publicly their commitment to recruiting, integrating in employment, retaining and offering career development to people with disabilities. The Department has also recently reconstituted the committees for the employment of people with disabilities and has given them a more focused brief to promote effective policies to employers.

Unemployment (Costs)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the total current cost of unemployment to the Exchequer including benefits, administrative costs and lost revenue.

Mr. Jackson: The latest available estimate of gross benefit payments to the unemployed in 1991-92 is £5,590 million. The cost of administering unemployment benefit in 1989-90, the latest year for which figures are available, was £176 million. Administration costs for other benefits paid to the unemployed cannot be separately identified. Estimates of tax revenue foregone are not available.

Offshore Installations

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what information he has about how many offshore installations have carried out a review of the ability of emergency systems to withstand severe weather conditions, as recommended by the Cullen report; and what the Health and Safety Executive has done to ensure that installations have carried out this review;

(2) what the Health and Safety Executive has done to ensure that all personnel on board offshore installations are supplied with personal survival equipment, in accordance with recommendations Nos. 85 and 86 of Lord Cullen's report;

(3) what information he has about how many offshore operators have undertaken an evacuation, escape and rescue analysis of their installations as recommended by Lord Cullen; and what the Health and Safety Executive has done to ensure this has been done;

(4) what information he has on how many offshore installation operators have conducted fire-risk analysis, as recommended by Lord Cullen in his report on Piper Alpha;

(5) what action the Health and Safety Executive has taken to ensure that fire-risk analysis is carried out on all offshore installations; and what assistance the Health and Safety Executive has given to the platform operators by way of practical and technical advice;

(6) how many offshore installation operators have carried out an assessment of the risk of ingress of smoke or gas into the accommodation sections as recommended by Lord Cullen in his report on Piper Alpha; and what the Health and Safety Executive has done to ensure that these assessments have been carried out;

(7) what information he has about how many offshore installations have fitted smoke and gas detectors and implemented ventilation shutdown arrangements for accommodation sections as recommended in the Cullen report; and what the Health and Safety Executive has done to ensure that this recommendation has been acted upon.

Mr. Forth: Immediately following the publication of Lord Cullen's report, the Department of Energy wrote to individual companies and industry organisations asking for action on these and other recommendations which could be implemented without, or in advance of, legislation. Following the transfer of regulatory responsibility, the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) wrote in July 1991 asking for progress reports on these recommendations.

All offshore operators have now responded. The HSE is following up these responses with individual companies where necessary and monitoring progress during offshore inspections. In appropriate cases enforcement powers will be used to require improvements to be made.

I understand that the Health and Safety Commission's proposals for safety case regulations to be published next month will require all these areas to be addressed adequately and in an integrated way.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what research work the Health and Safety Executive is currently engaged in to do with escape methods from offshore installations; and how far this work is being conducted jointly with the offshore industries;

(2) what extra money the Government are making available to fund research into safe escape methods for emergency conditions on board offshore installations.

Mr. Forth: Studies on temporary safe refuges, methods to enhance the launch capacity of survival craft, the practicability and safety of escape chutes and emergency stairway systems, survivor recovery techniques and personal protective equipment have been commissioned by the Health and Safety Executive's offshore safety division. The offshore industry is collaborating in all of these studies.

Research on evacuation, escape and rescue methods is one of the HSE's main priority areas within its research strategy for offshore safety. The enhanced financial provision for offshore safety provided by Ministers following the Cullen report included an element to cover these and other recommendations for additional safety research.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what the Health and Safety Executive has done to ensure that all offshore installation managers and their deputies receive training and regular refresher courses in decision making for emergency situations;

(2) what advice the Health and Safety Executive has given to offshore installation operators about emergency drills and exercises, their frequency, content and which staff should be included in the exercises.

Mr. Forth: Existing offshore safety legislation specifies the frequency and content of emergency drills and musters and which persons should be included.

I understand that the Health and Safety Commission's proposals for safety case regulations to be published next month will require these and other aspects of safety-related training to be adequately addressed as part of the operator's safety management system.

In the meantime, the Offshore Petroleum Industry Training Organisation, the Health and Safety Executive and both sides of industry are working together to develop a standard for training in offshore emergency command and control, aimed specifically at offshore installation managers.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what advice the Health and Safety Executive has given to offshore installation operators about the registering of contractor staff; how often these lists are updated; and where copies of the register are kept.

Mr. Forth: The Offshore Installations (Logbooks and Registration of Death) Regulations 1972 require that a continuous record of persons on or working from an offshore installation is maintained both on the installation and onshore. The record must include details of the employers of such persons.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many offshore installations currently have totally enclosed motor propelled survival craft available with a capacity of carrying safely 150 per cent. of the people on the installation.

Mr. Forth: The maximum number of persons allowed on board any offshore installation is fixed by the Health and Safety Executive following an examination of lifesaving appliances. However, since the number of persons on board offshore installations varies according to the activities being undertaken, this information can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the safety case regulations for offshore installations will be applicable to temporary and experimental drill sites.

Mr. Forth: I understand that the Health and Safety Commission's proposals for safety case regulations, to be published next month, apply to all fixed and mobile offshore installations engaged in drilling activities.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what steps have been taken to create a central register of the personal details of offshore employees who have attended training courses;

(2) what consultations he has had with the United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association concerning the implementation of Lord Cullen's recommendation 105 on minimum training requirements.

Mr. Forth: The United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association has issued revised guidelines for offshore emergency safety training; these take account of consultations with the Health and Safety Executive, whose inspectors will take them into account in considering compliance with employers' general duties to provide adequate training. The guidelines state that they represent a minimum training requirement for survival, firefighting and emergency safety training; and that personnel who have not met the minimum requirements should not be permitted to work offshore.

In July 1989 the Offshore Petroleum Industry Training Organisation established a central training register to hold details of attendance at, and completion of, emergency safety training courses by offshore personnel. Access to the register is available by registering as a user.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on what the Health and Safety Executive is doing, before the safety case regulations are brought in, to ensure that offshore installation operators are complying with existing safety regulations.

Mr. Forth: Inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive's offshore safety division will continue to enforce existing offshore health and safety regulations by conducting inspections and audits and by using their powers to require improvements to be made or to prohibit activities where necessary. Additional inspectors are being recruited using the increased resources made available to the Health and Safety Commission to implement the recommendations in Lord Cullen's report and to enhance the inspection and audit functions.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the recommendations made by Lord Cullen from the Piper Alpha inquiry, that have already been implemented; if he will list the recommendations made by Lord Cullen that will be implemented by the Offshore Safety Bill [Lords]; and if he will list those recommendations which will be implemented by regulation.

Mr. Forth: The following recommendations in Lord Cullen's report have been implemented: numbers 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 34, 53, 88(part), 91, 93, 94 and 105.

Work is well under way towards implementing the following recommendations, including those which industry have been asked to take forward in advance of legislation: 27, 29, 33, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42, 45, 46, 48, 52, 54, 59, 60, 61, 66, 67, 68, 69, 71, 72, 76, 77, 80, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 89, 95, 96, 99, 101, 102, 103 and 104.

Recommendation 18 will be implemented by the Offshore Safety Bill [Lords].

The proposed safety case regulations and associated guidance will implement recommendations 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 28, 32, 40, 44, 47, 51, 65, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 104 and 106. I understand that the Health and Safety Commission will be publishing a consultative document in February 1992.

The review of offshore safety regulations and guidance will take forward recommendations 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 31, 33, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 49, 50, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 62, 63, 64, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 78, 79, 81, 82, 83, 85, 88(part), 89, 90 and 103. The review cannot formally commence until the Offshore Safety Bill has been enacted.

Recommendation 30 will be taken forward as soon as a suitable primary legislative vehicle is available.

On recommendation 92, the Department of Transport already receives notification of the location of standby vessels on a weekly basis and this information is available to HSE's offshore safety division. HSE is considering what further action may be necessary.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with offshore operators about the Offshore Safety Bill [Lords] and the recommendations of the Cullen report; what submissions he has received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I have met representatives of the United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association to discuss matters connected with offshore safety. In addition, HSE's offshire safety division has had extensive discussions with offshore industry associations and individual companies about a range of matters arising from the Cullen report.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has had from trade unions concerning the Offshore Safety Bill [Lords] and the Cullen report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: No representations have been received from trade unions on the Offshore Safety Bill, but HSE's offshore safety division has had extensive discussions with trade unions about a range of matters arising from the Cullen report.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on what proportion of the offshore division's time will be dedicated to visiting installations and checking that safety cases are correct and are being adhered to.

Mr. Forth: The allocation of OSD time to various activities is a matter for the Health and Safety Commission and Executive. However, the assessment of safety cases and the inspection of installations will be key operational priorities for the division as it expands to more than 400 staff in the next few years.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what he intends to do to bring the safety conditions on board offshore support vessels and standby vessels servicing offshore rigs in line with the recommendations made by Lord Cullen for the rigs themselves;

(2) what plans he has to transfer responsibility for safety on board offshore support vessels and standby vessels to the Health and Safety Executive; what submissions he has received on this issue; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what plans he has to propose that offshore support vessels and standby vessels carry out safety case studies similar to those proposed for offshore installations.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State's responsibilities, and those of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive, relating to the safety of crews of standby and offshore support vessels are confined to activities carried out on or in connection with an offshore installation, as defined in article 4 of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 (Application Outside Great Britain) Order 1989. Safety requirements, under the Merchant Shipping Acts, applicable to all merchant crews are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. We have received no submissions on this matter and there are no plans to change these arrangements.

The general duties of operators of offshore installations under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act would include ensuring that support vessels do not put the safety of offshore installation personnel at risk. And I understand that the Health and Safety Commission's forthcoming proposals for safety case regulations apply to all offshore installations and heavy lift vessels, and cover risks to all personnel on the installation, or engaged in connected activities as defined by the 1989 order.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to review the codes of practice for manning and operating standby vessels.

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for review of the regulations and Code relating to standby vessels lies with the Health and Safety Commission and Executive. Many specific improvements recommended by Lord Cullen were incorporated into a revised code on the assessment of standby vessels attending offshore installations, published in July 1991 by HSE and the Department of Transport; all vessels must fully meet its requirements by 31 December 1992.

Possible changes in regulations will be considered by the commission in taking forward the comprehensive review of existing offshore legislation proposed in Cullen recommendation 19.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with trade unions, offshore operators and the oil petroleum industry training board about supplying appropriate training packages for staff working on offshore installations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Representatives of the department and of the HSE participate in the work of the Offshore Petroleum Industry Training Organisation. Trades unions and offshore operators are represented on the OPITO board, and take part, with HSE, in working groups on training standards and competences.

Close co-operation is likely to continue between HSE and OPITO to develop appropriate training standards for offshore personnel. The Health and Safety Commission's proposals for safety case regulations to be published next month will require safety-related training, and competence standards, to be addressed as part of the operators safety management system.

Silica Dust

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will ask for a report from the Health and Safety Executive on its current proposals for changing the limits of silica dust in the atmosphere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The new exposure limit for silica has now been implemented by regulations amending the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) Regulations 1988. These were laid before Parliament on 1 November 1991 and came into force on 1 January 1992. The proposal for this new limit was contained in a widely publicised and free consultative document published by the Health and Safety Commission in December 1990 inviting comments on the proposal by April 1991. This proposal followed a review of occupational exposure to silica dust by the Health and Safety Commission's advisory committee on toxic substances whose members include representatives from industry and trades unions as well as independent experts in the field of occupational health and hygiene.

The Health and Safety Commission, whose members also include representatives from employers and employees, considered the comments received and recommended that the proposal for a maximum exposure limit for silica be adopted. I am satisfied with these arrangements for setting the new limit and the consultation procedures employed.

SCOTLAND

Exports

16. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the increase in Scottish exports in the period 1978 to 1990.

Mr. Allan Stewart: There is no comprehensive information on total Scottish exports.

The Scottish Council (Development and Industry), however, carries out an annual survey of Scottish manufacturing exports only. The results show that the value of Scottish manufacturing exports increased by 21 per cent. in real terms, between 1978 and 1990 to their highest ever recorded level of £8·6 billion.

Royal Hospital for Sick Children

7. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will pay an official visit to the royal hospital for sick children to discuss funding the new extension.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend authorised Lothian health board to donate £1 million to the appeal from the disposal of surplus assets. The running costs are estimated at more than £300,000 every year for the new wing and these will also be met by the Government.

Labour Statistics

18. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest unemployment figures in Lanarkshire and Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: After falling in each of the previous four months, the number of claimants in Lanarkshire travel-to-work area in December 1991 was 20,095. The work force based unemployment rate was 11·8 per cent.

In Scotland, the number of claimants on the unadjusted series in December 1991 was 228,766. The work force based unemployment rate was 9·2 per cent.

Industrial Development

19. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chief executive of Scottish Enterprise to discuss industrial development in Renfrewshire.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend and I have frequent discussions with the chairman of Scottish Enterprise, often along with the chief executive, addressing a range of subjects including industrial development in all parts of Scotland.

Ravenscraig

20. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken in connection with the proposed closure of British Steel Ravenscraig since 13 January.

Mr. Lang: In addition to the very substantial additional resources, already announced, through Scottish Enterprise, for Lanarkshire development agency, formal notification was made to the European Commission on 23 January of the United Kingdom Government's proposals to designate an enterprise zone in North Lanarkshire.

29. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has as to the effect of the closure of Ravenscraig on the unemployment rate in adjacent areas.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My Department's current best estimate of the local impact of the closure, and associated job losses announced by British Steel on 8 January 1992, is that an increase of less than one percentage point, on a work force basis, in the Lanarkshire travel-to-work area unemployment rate could be anticipated in the medium term. This increase is additional to the impact associated with the earlier steel job loss announcements made in 1991.

Housing

21. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet representatives of Scottish local authorities to discuss the current housing situation in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I met representatives of the housing committee of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on 6 December 1991. Further meetings with the convention to discuss housing matters will be arranged later this year.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

22. Mrs. Ray Michie : To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland to discuss environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend has not met the chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland to discuss the environmentally sensitive areas scheme as such. He has, however, recently obtained the council's views on candidates for designation as new ESAs and these are currently being considered with officials of the council.

Nurses

23. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of nurses in training in each of the Scottish health boards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As the answer is lengthy I will, with permission, circulate the information in the Official Report. However, between 1980 and 1991 the number of qualified nurses in the NHS in Scotland rose by 30 per cent. to over 36,400.

Qualified nurses: Changes in demand and supply Scotland: 1980 to 1991[1]

	1980	1991	Percentage change
Qualified nurses (WTE)	28,028	36,442	+30
Nurses in training[2]	12,414	10,005	−19
Basic students[3]	6,998	7,940	+13
Pupils[4]	3,287	236	−93
Basic students and pupils	10,285	8,176	−21
Net leaving rate – RGN[5]	14·0	10·6	−24
Net leaving rate – EN[5]	14·5	9·9	−32

[1] These data are derived from the annual 30 September census of NHS staff. Data for 1991 are provisional.
[2] Includes post registration/enrollment training.
[3] Excludes post registration students. Note that students become registered nurses when qualified.
[4] Note that pupils become enrolled nurses when qualified.
[5] Net rates refer to nurses in post at one annual census who have left by the next (1991 refers to leavers between 30 September 1990 and 30 September 1991; 1980 refers to leavers between 30 September 1980 and 30 September 1981). These rates include only nurses who have left the NHS in Scotland. Interboard transfers are excluded.

Nurses in training in Scotland as at 30 September 1991 (Provisional)

Health Board	Number of nurses
Argyll and Clyde	672
Ayrshire and Arran	459
Borders	168
Dumfries and Galloway	286
Fife	505
Forth Valley	494
Grampian	754
Greater Glasgow	2,712
Highland	347
Lanarkshire	782
Lothian	1,778
Tayside	991
Orkney	17
Shetland	10
Western Isles	30
Scotland	10,005

Between 1980 and 1991 the number of qualified nurses in the national health service in Scotland rose by 30 per cent. to over 36,400.

Textile Industry

24. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the specific steps he proposes to take to assist the Borders textile industry and promote diversification in the local economy in the region.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Government recognise the importance of the textile industry to the economy and employment in the Borders and through Scottish Enterprise and Scottish Borders Enterprise are supporting initiatives designed to assist the industry in a variety of ways and to encourage economic diversification in the area. Scottish Enterprise and Scottish Borders Enterprise are in receipt of substantial Government funds.

The Scottish Office continues to examine ways of obtaining European Community funds for economic development in the Borders.

Power Lines

25. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has had with Scottish Power about the construction of power lines in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Before Scottish Power can construct any overhead power lines, it is required to receive the consent of the Secretary of State under section 37 of the Electricity Act 1989. In the current financial year, 130 such applications have been received from the company and 93 applications have received consent.

Health Services

26. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends meeting the chairmen of health boards to discuss the provision of health services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I will be meeting health board chairmen on Friday.

Steel Industry

27. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he has made to meet the Dalzell shop stewards to discuss their investment proposals which would establish a viable Scottish steel industry safeguarding the future of their plant and Ravenscraig.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I would be happy to meet the Dalzell shop stewards again to discuss the future of the plant.

New Towns

28. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the proposed wind-up of the Scottish new towns.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Following careful consideration of the responses to the recent consultation exercise, my right hon. Friend has decided to proceed with the wind-up of East Kilbride and Glenrothes development corporations.

The wind-up orders will be made next month and the target date for completion will be 31 December 1995.

Investment

30. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the value of inward investment in Scotland since 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Figures prior to the establishment of Locate in Scotland in 1981 are not available.

From April 1981 to March 1991, Locate in Scotland has recorded planned inward investment in Scotland by companies, totalling some £4·2 billion.

RETEX Programme

31. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what approaches he has made to the European Commission regarding the RETEX programme.

Mr. Allan Stewart: On 20 December the European Commission agreed a draft proposal for a RETEX scheme designed to assist areas dependent on the textiles industry. Member states and the European Parliament will be invited formally to comment on the draft proposal in the coming weeks, although Scottish Office and other United Kingdom officials had already made representations to the Commission in earlier discussions. The United Kingdom Government will naturally seek to ensure the most effective coverage of United Kingdom textile areas while avoiding any unfair competition against United Kingdom producers.

Lanarkshire Economy

32. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his plans for the regeneration of the Lanarkshire economy.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I look to Lanarkshire development agency, supported by Scottish Enterprise, to take the lead in implementing economic development measures, building on the early action programme recommended by the Lanarkshire working group.

In addition, the Government have formally notified the European Commission of proposals for an enterprise zone in north Lanarkshire.

Land Use

33. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government regarding land use in Caithness and Sutherland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Land use in Caithness and Sutherland is primarily a matter for Highland regional council as the planning authority for the area. My right hon. Friend understands that the director of planning for Highland region proposed to the chairman designate of Scottish Natural Heritage the preparation of an integrated land use and development strategy for Caithness and Sutherland jointly by both bodies and, possibly, Highlands and Islands Enterprise. This proposal has been accepted in principle and will be taken forward as resources permit.

The Government welcome this initiative, which will build on work already done, such as the preparation of the land use strategy published by Highland regional council in 1989.

Rail Network

34. Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the electrification of the Scottish rail network and the provision of inter-city services north of the central belt.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has from time to time received representations from individuals, organisations and Members of Parliament on a variety of rail matters including further electrification. None however has been specifically concerned with inter-city services north of the central belt.

Council House Sales

35. Mr. [illegible]: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many council houses have been sold to sitting tenants in Scotland since May 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since April 1979 nearly 234,000 public sector houses in Scotland have been sold to sitting tenants. Included in that figure are nearly 173,000 sales by local authorities.

40. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses in Scotland have been sold under the right-to-buy legislation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Between October 1980 and September 1991, over 221,000 public sector houses have been sold under the right-to-buy legislation.

Dunbartonshire Enterprise

36. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last had discussions with Dunbartonshire Enterprise on the latest developments in the Scottish economy.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Communications between my right hon. Friend and me and the local enterprise companies take place chiefly through Scottish Enterprise; and we have frequent discussions with the chairman and board members of Scottish Enterprise to discuss a range of matters, including developments in the Scottish economy.

New Forth Bridge

37. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the proposal to construct a further road bridge over the River Forth.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have already met Fife regional council and most recently with Lothian regional council to discuss with them the various transportation issues concerning future travel requirements west of Edinburgh and across the Forth estuary in Fife. I now propose to prepare a consultation document which will set out the options for measures to meet the growing traffic demands in this area which I hope to be in a position to issue in early spring.

Lockerbie

38. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action the Lord Advocate has taken in connection with the Lockerbie investigations since 20 January.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Lord Advocate has taken note of Security Council resolution 731 (1992) adopted unanimously on 21 January 1992 and looks for the early surrender by the Libyan authorities of the two accused persons for trial in Scotland or the United States. The Lord Advocate has continued to be kept informed of progress in the investigation.

Firearms

39. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what initiatives he intends to take to stop the increase of murder and serious assaults by the use of firearms.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Very strict controls are imposed on the acquisition and possession of firearms, one purpose of these measures being to restrict the ability of criminals to obtain firearms. Detecting illegally held firearms is a matter for the police who make strenuous efforts to prevent criminals acquiring firearms which they may subsequently use in committing crimes. The Government continue to provide substantial resources to assist the police in maintaining law and order: since 1979, police expenditure has risen by more than 50 per cent. in real terms. The Government will also continue to ensure that an adequate range of penalties is available to the courts to deal with crimes and offences involving firearms. With the assistance of the firearms consultative committee, the Government keep firearms control under continual review.

Toxic Waste (Glasgow)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Hamilton road route construction between Daldowie and Fullarton in the Glasgow, Shettleston constituency has unearthed any evidence of toxic waste material having been dumped in the area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Toxic material has been excavated and handled under controlled conditions within and arising from the activities of the former Cambuslang steel works adjacent to Fullarton road.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence he has of chromium dumping or other dumping of potentially harmful material in the Baillieston, Carmyle, Broomhouse and Mount Vernon areas of the Glasgow, Shettleston constituency.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Chromium waste may have been deposited at four sites in the area. Glasgow district council has undertaken a detailed investigation and has confirmed that there is no surface contamination. Industrial, commercial and household wastes have been deposited at 10 sites in the area.

Mesothelioma

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of deaths in Scotland from mesothelioma during each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The figures requested are given in the table:

Deaths with any mention of mesothelioma on the death certificate, Scotland, 1986-90

	Number
1986	67
1987	93
1988	103

Population Statistics

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will register the latest estimates by the Registrar General of (a) total populations and (b) populations aged 18 years and over for each district council area in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is given in the table. For clarity of presentation, the table includes figures for regions, island areas and the whole of Scotland.

"Higher Education: A New Framework"

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the outcome of consultation on proposed changes to institutional financial years, made in paragraph 94 of the White Paper "Higher Education: A New Framework", Cm 1541.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Representative bodies, following consultation, have confirmed their agreement to adopt a financial year of 1 August to 31 July. Subject to the passage of the Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Bill, I can therefore confirm that those institutions which are to receive funding from the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council will operate on a financial year of 1 August to 31 July. This means that the financial year for universities will not change, and that grant-aided colleges of higher education will move from their present financial year which runs from 1 April to 31 March. The 1992-93 financial year for those institutions in receipt of funding from the council will, therefore, end on 31 July 1993; the 1993-94 financial year will operate from 1 August 1993 to 31 July 1994 and subsequent financial years shall be each successive period of 12 months.

Regional Development Assistance

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total regional development assistance to Scotland, in constant terms in each year since 1973-74.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 28 January 1992]: The information requested is given in the table.

Gross expenditure on regional preferential assistance

	Constant 1990-91 prices £ million
1973-74	595·8
1974-75	653·6
1975-76	820·1

1987-88	189·7
1988-89	174·7
1989-90	156·9
1990-91	159·2

Note: Includes gross expenditure in Scotland on Regional Selective Assistance, Regional Development Grants, Regional Enterprise Grants, Scottish Development Agency and Highlands and Islands Development Board expenditure on grants and land and factory building. The figures also include a number of forms of assistance in the years up to 1982 which have been discontinued.

Part-time Workers

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will estimate the percentage of all women part-time workers in (a) Scotland and (b) the regions and islands areas of Scotland earning less than (i) £2·50 per hour, (ii) £3 per hour, (iii) £3·60 per hour, (iv) £4 per hour, (v) £4·50 per hour and (vi) £5 per hour;

(2) if he will estimate the percentage of women part-time manual workers in (a) Scotland and (b) the regions and islands areas of Scotland earning less than (i) £2·50 per hour, (ii) £3 per hour, (iii) £3·60 per hour, (iv) £4 per hour, (v) £4·50 per hour and (vi) £5 per hour;

(3) if he will estimate the percentage of women part-time non-manual workers in (a) Scotland and (b) the regions and islands areas of Scotland earning less than (i) £2·50 per hour, (ii) £3 per hour, (iii) £3·60 per hour, and (iv) £4 per hour, (v) £4·50 per hour and (vi) £5 per hour.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 27 January 1992]: Information at the level of detail requested is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member giving the requested information, where sample sizes allow, as soon as possible. A copy of the letter will be placed in the library.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the EC guidelines governing the carrying out of an environmental impact assessment for major infrastructure projects; if he will make a statement on the relationship of the proposed Skye bridge public local inquiry proceedings to the guidelines; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 January 1992]: The requirements for an environmental impact assessment on major infrastructure projects are set out in EC directive No. 85/337/EEC and the Environmental Assessment (Scotland) Regulations 1988: The relevant guidance is contained in Scottish Office circular 13/88. A comprehensive environmental statement on Skye bridge has been published and will be fully considered at the public local inquiry.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what restrictions there are on whether the proposed Skye bridge public local inquiry can commence in the absence of an environmental impact assessment having been submitted; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 January 1992]: The Scottish office has published a comprehensive environmental statement which addresses the various issues involved. The environmental statement is the result an environmental impact assessment and has been published under part VI of the Environmental Assessment (Scotland) Regulations 1988, in accordance with EC council directive No. 85/337/EEC.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the threshold below which the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board will not entertain a claim; and what were the lower limits in each year since 1986.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 January 1992]: The current minimum level of criminal injuries compensation is £1,000. The lower limits applying in each year since 1986 can be derived from the following table:

Date of increase	Minimum limit £
February 1983	400
November 1986	550
February 1990	750
January 1992	1,000

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many victims of crimes of violence received compensation under the criminal injuries compensation scheme in 1991-92; and what was the total amount awarded.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 January 1992]: Figures for 1991-92 are not yet available, but it is estimated that outturn expenditure by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board on compensation to victims of crimes of violence committed throughout Great Britain will be of the order of £144·6 million. In 1990-91, £109·3 million was paid to 35,190 victims.

Victim Support Groups

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much funding he gave victim support groups in 1991-92; and how much is planned for 1992-93.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 28 January 1992]: For the financial year 1991-92 the Scottish Office initially awarded the Scottish Association of Victim Support Schemes (SAVSS) a total grant of £442,000.

I hope to announce the grant for 1992-93 shortly.

Maternity Units, Glasgow

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future provision of maternity units in Greater Glasgow.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 28 January 1992]: This is a matter for greater Glasgow health board. In announcing my approval to the provision of a new maternity unit at Glasgow royal infirmary, I asked the board to develop a long-term strategy for maternity services in Glasgow.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Tribunals (Allowances)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Attorney-General what are the rates of subsistence allowance payable to persons attending hearings of tribunals as chairpersons, tribunal members, appellants, appellants' representatives, members of the Council on Tribunals, tribunal officers and other officials; and on what basis these allowances are fixed.

The Attorney-General: Chairpersons, tribunal members, members of the Council on Tribunals, tribunal officers and other officials may, in certain limited circumstances, be paid a day subsistence allowance of £3·90 or £8·60, depending on the time spent on duty. They may also be paid an overnight subsistence allowance of £98·70 or £68·50 in London, or £85·85 or £63·15 elsewhere, depending on rank, if they are obliged to attend at a place not within daily travelling distance of their home. These are the rates generally applicable throughout the public service. Most tribunals do not pay subsistence allowances to appellants or appellants' representatives, but there are exceptions, for example, the social security commissioners, and in those cases the rates paid are generally linked to standard public service rates.

TRANSPORT

London Travel Statistics

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he possesses and for what date of the approximate percentage of private car drivers entering or leaving central London each day during (a) weekday peak periods, (b) weekday non-peak periods, (c) at weekends and (d) any other period whose movement costs are not wholly met from their taxable income.

Mr. McLoughlin: A survey in April 1989 found that 48 per cent. of cars entering central London on a weekday during the morning peak—7 to 10 am—were privately owned and 52 per cent. were paid for, owned or leased by an employer or company. The corresponding proportions during the off-peak—10 am to 1 pm—were 52 and 48 per cent. respectively.

About three quarters of the privately owned cars in the peak period, and two thirds in the off peak, received some form of travel assistance from their employer or company for the journey being undertaken. Travel assistance could take the form of tax relief—for the self-employed—provision of parking, mileage allowance or payment for parking charges or fuel.

More detailed information is available in TRRL research report 326, "Company Travel Assistance in the London area" and I shall arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Information for other times of the day and at weekends is not available.

Safety Belts

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to require all new saloon motor vehicles sold in the United Kingdom to have three cross-body safety belts in the rear seats.

Mr. Chope: One manufacturer has now introduced three point belts for rear centre seating on some models. I hope that other manufacturers will follow this lead. It would not be possible to make this compulsory without the agreement of the European Community.

Licensed Vehicles

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department holds on the number of licensed vehicles in the United Kingdom, by region.

Mr. Chope: The records kept at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency show the total number of vehicles licensed in the United Kingdom, by region, as at 31 December 1990 were as follows:

Number of licensed vehicles

Region	Thousands
Northern	1,104
Yorkshire and Humberside	1,995
East Midlands	1,758
East Anglia	1,097
South East	8,229
South West	2,403
West Midlands	2,456
North West	2,566
Scotland	1,811
Wales	1,222
Not known	32
Total Great Britain	24,673
Northern Ireland	543
Total United Kingdom	25,216

Cornelis Johanna

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer of 23 January, Official Report, column 270, when he expects to receive advice as the extent of his Department's liability to the present owners of the Cornelis Johanna.

Mr. McLoughlin: I expect to receive advice in February.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Waste Oil

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals to equalise the tax treatment of waste oil disposed of as furnace oil with that of waste oil disposed of in other ways.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

Tobacco

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what limit will be imposed on the quantity of tobacco products which an individual may import into the United Kingdom from other EC countries for personal consumption after 1993.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: From 1 January 1993 there will be no restriction on tobacco products purchased duty-paid in another EC country and brought into the United Kingdom by private individuals for their personal use. To help distinguish genuine private importations from those of a commercial nature liable to United Kingdom duty, the following indicative levels will apply in accordance with the agreement reached at the ECOFIN Council on 16 December 1991:

800 Cigarettes
400 Cigarillos
200 Cigars
1·0 kg Smoking tobacco

The December ECOFIN meeting also decided to retain duty-free shopping for travel within the EC until 1 July 1999. Travellers will be able to purchase duty-free tobacco products up to the level of the current duty free allowance, in addition to any goods they have obtained from duty-paid sources.

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action the Customs and Excise will take to prevent smuggling of tobacco products from other EC countries into the United Kingdom after 1993.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Customs and Excise are planning a range of anti-smuggling measures for 1993. These will be largely intelligence based, allowing additional inland resources to be targeted to both detect and deter any growth in illicit trade. This strategy will be supported by the minimum indicative levels agreed at the 16 December ECOFIN which will help to distinguish private purchases for personal consumption from commercial trade.

The Department of Health's Tobacco Labelling Regulations, which require health warnings in English on all tobacco products sold in the United Kingdom, will also aid identification of illicit importations.

Tax Allowances and Reliefs

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give an estimate of the regional distribution of the number of taxpayers with total allowances and reliefs in excess of £10,000, £15,000 and £20,000 referred to in the reply given to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle), on 21 January, Official Report, column 128.

Mr. Maude: I regret that this information is not available on a regional basis.

Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the estimated receipts from privatisation, including debt repayments, in 1991-92, identifying the industry concerned in each case.

Mr. Maude: Estimated privatisation proceeds including debt repayments for 1991-92 are shown in the following table, by industry.

Forecast privatisation proceeds in 1991-92

Privatisation	£ million
Electricity (England and Wales)	[1]3,507
BT	[1]1,945
Water Holding Companies	1,490
Electricity (Scotland)	[1]1,192
NTL	68
Forestry Commission	16
Insurance Services	10
Motorway Service Area leases	5
Miscellaneous[2]	−233
TOTAL	8,000

[1] Gross proceeds (costs yet to be reported to Parliament).
[2] Includes costs arising from the electricity and BT sales.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the estimated receipts from repayment of debt from privatised electricity companies have been varied in amount or timing from those given in the various prospectuses at the time of flotation.

Mr. Maude: No. the precise timing of redemption of such debt depends on future decisions.

BT Loan Stocks

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the total receipts by the Government from British Telecom loan stocks will be after 31 March.

Mr. Maude: The value of the outstanding BT loan stock held by the Government after 31 March 1992 will be £2,186 million.

British Gas (Debt Repayment)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the total debt repayable to the Government by British Gas will be after 31 March.

Mr. Maude: The total debt repayable to the Government by British Gas plc after 31 March 1992 will be £350 million.

Departmental Reports

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the 1992 departmental reports to be published.

Mr. Mellor: Proposed publication dates for 1992 departmental reports are as follows:

1992 Departmental reports: proposed publication dates

Statistical Supplement to the Autumn Statement—Friday 31 January Ministry of Defence—Thursday 6 February
Department of Energy—Thursday 6 February
Department of Education and Science—Thursday 6 February

Northern Ireland—Friday 14 February

Copies will be made available at the Vote Office.

HMSO

Mr. Simon Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what financial target he has set Her Majesty's Stationery Office for 1992.

Mr. Maples: I have today laid a further Treasury minute setting HMSO the financial target for 1992 of achieving a profit after interest in current cost accounting terms of £6 million. This compares with the target for 1991 of a profit after interest in current cost accounting terms of £4 million.

Rents

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average rent paid by persons earning less than £10,000 per year.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

The latest information from the 1990 family expenditure survey shows that the estimated mean weekly rent of households in rented accommodation in England, where the head of household has an annual gross income of less than £10,000,is £27 or £14 net of housing benefit.

Local Authority Borrowing

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures showing the total (a) borrowing requirement and (b) indebtedness attributable to local authorities in the United Kingdom for each year since 1979; and what estimates he has for each year since 1979 of the total indebtedness repaid by the use of capital receipts from the exercise of the right-to-buy provisions.

Mr. Key: I have been asked to reply.

The borrowing requirement for authorities in the United Kingdom and The total indebtedness for all English authorities from 1979-80 to 1989-90 is as follows. The proportion of receipts generated by the right-to-buy provisions that have been applied to reduce local authority indebtedness are not available.

£ million

	Borrowing Requirement	Total Indebtedness
1979-80	2,969	30,187
1980-81	2,120	32,076
1981-82	−224	34,069
1982-83	83	36,231
1983-84	1,209	38,698
1984-85	2,387	40,554
1985-86	1,674	40,138
1986-87	149	43,033
1987-88	1,355	44,904
1988-89	339	47,295
1989-90	1,321	48,695
1990-91	3,431	n/a

(Source: Department of the Environment returns and Central Statistical Office.)

Note: Figures provided for the borrowing requirement are for the United Kingdom as a whole; figures for total authority indebtedness are for England only.

ENERGY

Research Institutes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list by standard region (a) the research institutes operated for, or on behalf of, his Department and the total employment thereat and (b) the total number of such institutes and the total employment therein; and if he will express the regional totals as a percentage of the national totals.

Mr. John Wakeham: My Department is responsible for one such institute: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority which operates from nine sites as follows:

Region	Number of sites	Numbers employed, end-1991	Region as per cent. of national total employed
Scotland	1	1,650	18·4
North	1	512	5·7
North West	3	1,594	17·8
South East	3	3,912	43·6
South West	1	1,301	14·5
TOTAL	9	8,969	100·0

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he has had with the nuclear installations inspectorate regarding the anticipated date of completion of consideration of the long-term safety reviews of Sizewell A, and Dungeness A Magnox nuclear power stations.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None. However, officials in the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate keep my officials informed about the progress of these reviews.

Nuclear Research

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the organisations and individuals from whom his Department received comments on his departmental consultation paper on nuclear research and development; and when he expects to come to conclusions on the responses.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Department has received substantive comments from almost 100 organisations and individuals.

The largest group of responses, some 30 per cent. of the total, were from suppliers or potential suppliers of goods and services to the nuclear industry. Some 20 per cent. were from the research or higher education field. Ten per cent. came from the energy industries. The remainder of the comments came from other Government Departments or agencies, campaigning organisations, trade unions and professional associations and private individuals.

I hope to publish a strategy for the Department's nuclear R and D programmes, which will take into account comments received on the consultation document, in the near future.

Sizewell B

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the existing nuclear operating regime will apply to the Sizewell B PWR nuclear power station.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The treatment of Sizewell B by the Government and the appropriate regulatory authorities will be no different from that of Nuclear Electric's existing stations.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what analysis has been made of the reasons why the fees paid out for advice on electricity privatisation in 1990-91 exceeded the original estimate.

Mr. Wakeham: The figure included in the main supply estimates for 1990-91 was based on the best estimate available in November 1989. Continuing and regular reassessments were made of the resources needed to complete the successful flotation of the electricity supply industry in that year. It was these that led to the additional provision which was sought, and approved by Parliament, in the 1990-91 spring supplementary estimates.

ENVIRONMENT

Limestone Pavement

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of sites of limestone pavement that have been notified for protection under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, and the number that have had orders made in north Yorkshire, Cumbria, Lancashire, Derbyshire, and any other part of England where pavements exist; and how soon the process will be completed.

Mr. Baldry: I understand that the relevant authorities of Cumbria county council, the Lake District special planning board, Lancashire county council and the north Yorkshire county council have determined to protect by orders all those areas of limestone pavement notified to them by English Nature and the Countryside Commission. It is estimated that this programme will be completed by the end of summer 1994.

So far orders have been made as follows:

	Number of orders
Cumbria (including the National Park)	22
Lancashire	10
North Yorkshire	9

Opencast Mining Pollution

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what forms of compensation there are for households in opencast mining areas for the effects of noise, pollution and heavy road traffic.

Mr. Yeo: The planning system provides the basis on which the appropriateness of particular development proposals is assessed, and the effect on the surrounding area will be a material factor in that assessment. Apart from this, it is open to aggrieved people to undertake civil actions for nuisance.

Sprinkler Systems

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to make it obligatory to evacuate a building constructed on the trade-off principle if the sprinkler system becomes inoperative for any reason.

Mr. Yeo: Provision for the ongoing maintenance of sprinklers installed for the purpose of Building Regulations in non-certificated premises will be included in regulations to be made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department. These will be made under section 12 of the Fire Precautions Act 1971 and are intended to take effect on 1 June 1992. Fire officers enforcing those regulations will wish to ensure that adequate alternative arrangements are made whenever a sprinkler becomes inoperative during the time a building is occupied. Such measures may include fire safety management procedures, and may need to involve a partial restriction or prohibition on the use of all or part of the premises.

Research Institutes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by standard region (a) the research institutes operated for, or on behalf of, his Department and the total employment thereat and (b) the total number of such institutes and the total employment therein; and if he will express the regional totals as a percentage of the national totals.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department's only research institution is the Building Research Establishment at Garston, Watford. It has been an executive agency since April 1990. It carries out work for other customers as well as my Department. It employs such staff as are necessary to carry out its work. Staff numbers are currently the equivalent of 703·5 full-time employees.

Building Regulations

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures will be required under the new building regulations to cater for any change in use of a building, its layout and its contents.

Mr. Yeo: The Building Regulations 1991, which will come into effect on 1 June 1992, impose requirements on certain building operations including the making of a "material change of use", as defined in regulation 5. Regulation 6 sets out those requirements of schedule 1 to the regulations which must be satisfied where there is a material change of use, and provides that such work must be carried out as is necessary to ensure that the building, or that part of it where the material change of use is being made, complies with those requirements. The table sets out what those requirements are for each particular case of change of use.

It is quite possible that changes in the internal layout of a building may adversely affect the building in relation to compliance with one of the relevant requirements, for example paragraph B1—means of escape. In such cases the change will be regarded as "material" for the purposes of the Building Regulations, and the building owner will be required to ensure that the work complies with the regulations and that the building as a whole is not made more unsatisfactory.

The contents of a building are not normally of any relevance to the Building Regulations, although they may of course indicate the use to which a building is being put. It is possible that, in certain circumstances, a change in the contents of a building may be regarded as a material change of use of the building for the purposes of the regulations.

Building regulations requirements which must be satisfied where there is a material change of use

Change of use	All cases of material change of use	All cases where building is over 15m in height[1]	Change of use to a hotel or boarding house, institution, or public building, or where the building was previously exempt	Change of use to a dwelling	Creation of a flat
Requirement(s) of Schedule 1 that the building (or part[1]) should comply with	B1 (Means of escape) B2 (Internal fire spread—linings) B3 (Internal fire spread—structure) B4(2) (External fire spread—roofs) B5 (Access and facilities for the fire service) F (Ventilation) G1 (Sanitary conveniences and washing facilities) G2 (Bathrooms) H4 (Solid waste storage) J (Heat producing appliances)	B4(1) (External fire spread—walls)	A (Structure)	C4 (Resistance to weather and ground moisture) E (Resistance to the passage of sound)	E (Resistance to the passage of sound)

[1] Regulation 6(2)(c) provides that even where the change of use is being made to part only of a building exceeding 15m in height, the whole building must comply with requirement B4(1).

Home Safety

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make home safety a mandatory function for local authorities.

Mr. Key: My Department has no such plans.

City Challenge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities he expects to be awarded city challenge money in the current round of competition; and on what date he will be announcing the results.

Mr. Portillo: The Department of the Environment and other Government Departments are currently considering the action plans submitted by the 11 city challenge pacemakers on 6 January. Points arising from the plans are being discussed with individual authorities so that decisions can be reached as soon as possible.

European Environment Agency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the reasons why no permanent site has been agreed to date for the European environment agency.

Mr. Baldry: A decision about location has been delayed because the agency is one of a number of new EC institutions yet to be sited somewhere in the Community. Agreement on the siting of the agency is at present dependent upon agreement on the package as a whole. The issue of where the European Parliament should meet in the future in particular is holding up progress.

Homelessness

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific account he takes of net expenditure by borough councils on homelessless as part of his structure of standard spending assessment for the year 1992-93.

Mr. Key: The total of standard spending assessments has been set in the light of the spending needs of all authorities including an allowance for appropriate expenditure on providing for the homeless.

Business Rates

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will tabulate the annual income and expenditure on disbursements into and from the national non-domestic rates pool for each year of its operation together with his estimates of such operations for the year 1992-93.

Mr. Key: The amounts of non-domestic rates distributed from, and contributed to the central pool for England in 1990-91 were:

Distributable Amount (£000)	Contributions (£000)
10,428,500	10,733,421

The amounts which are being, or to be distributed and which it is estimated will be paid into the pool in 1991-92 and 1992-93 are:

	Distributable Amount (£000)	Contributions (£000)
1991-92	12,408,000	11,992,289
1992-93	12,306,000	12,339,000

The contributions for 1990-91 are currently being adjusted to reflect the amount of rates actually collectable from businesses in that year. It is estimated that those contributions will be reduced by about £127 million as a result of the adjustments. Contributions for 1991-92 will be adjusted during 1992-93.

Nursery Education

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he takes of the need for, or number of places currently provided in, nursery education in inner city areas when calculating his standard spending assessment for relevant local authorities; and if he will state the arithmetic or other formula used for any such calculations.

Mr. Key: Provision for nursery education is made within the standard spending assessment for under-fives education. This is based on the numbers of children aged under five resident in each relevant authority with allowances for extra costs associated with additional educational needs and higher costs in London and the south-east. Details are given in the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England), which is in the Library.

Environmental Policy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the ways in which Her Majesty's Government intend to work closely with the European Parliament in the coming months on environmental policy.

Mr. Baldry: The Government already consult, brief and exchange views with Members of the European Parliament on a regular basis. However, to achieve the smooth passage of Environment Council business during the United Kingdom presidency in the second half of this year, we will be developing further our contacts with the European Parliament and its environment committee.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimate of the personal social services share of reductions in rate or revenue support grant for England as a whole for each year since 1978-79 at 1991-92 prices, when calculated by applying to the grant reductions the share that personal social services spending made up of total local authority spending each year and using relevant expenditure in each year except for (a) net expenditure met by rents, rates and balances for 1978-79 to 1980-81, (b) budgeted net revenue expenditure for 1990-91 and (c) standard spending assessments for the current year.

Mr. Key: Revenue support grant, like its predecessor rate support grant, is paid to local authorities in support of general revenue expenditure. It would not therefore be appropriate to try to attribute amounts of grant to specific services.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his Department's regulations governing the contained use of genetically modified organisms and outdoor releases of genetically modified organisms following his consultations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Consultations on the proposed regulations were completed on 22 January and my Department and other interested governmental parties are currently analysing the results. The regulations will be laid as soon as possible after the issues raised by the comments received have been considered and resolved.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library the draft regulations on the council tax upon which the local authority associations are being consulted through the council tax technical sub-group.

Mr. Portillo: I am arranging for copies of the draft regulations already sent to the local authority associations to be placed in the Library of the House and for further drafts to be placed there as they are issued.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table in the Official Report based upon the information contained in annex VIII of his local government statement of 26 November, showing for each local authority area listed on pages 2 to 13 (a) income from the community charge for standard spending, (b) business rate income and (c) revenue support grant in each case as a percentage of standard spending assessment, with each local authority being listed in ascending order according to the percentage size of its revenue support grant.

Mr. Key [holding answer 29 January 1992]: A table containing the information requested has been placed in the Library.

Thurrock Borough Council

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much Government grant has been paid to Thurrock borough council since April 1987 for expenditure on Thurrock borough council's housing stock.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 20 January 1992]: Thurrock borough council was not entitled to housing subsidy for the financial years 1987-88 to 1989-90. Housing revenue account subsidy, introduced on 1 April 1990, replaced housing subsidy and incorporated rent rebate subsidy which was previously paid to local authorities by the Department of Social Security. The council has claimed housing revenue account subsidy as follows:

1991-92	7,170,427

In addition, Thurrock has received housing capital allocations, including housing investment programme allocations, part of which will have been used for expenditure on its own stock. These allocations may be supplemented by the authority's own resources, and for the years in question total:

1987-88	2,359,000
1988-89	2,044,000
1989-90	1,839,000
New Capital Finance System[1]
1990-91	3,305,000
1991-92	[2]4,063,000

[1] Changes made at the time of introduction of the new capital finance system in 1990-91 mean that the levels of allocations before and after that date are not comparable.
[2] Provisional estimate of final allocation.

Wild-Caught Bird Trade

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will commission and fund a study on a case-by-case basis into which bird species are likely to benefit from the wild-caught bird trade, as recommended on page 3 of the recent Joint Nature Conservancy Council report on international trade in wildlife.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 28 January 1992]: The Government already support studies of the potential impact of wildlife trade throughout the world through its subscription to the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora. The JNCC and the royal botanic gardens, Kew, also monitor the wildlife trade generally on our behalf. We will keep the need for further research under review.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to introduce registration and possession controls for all Convention on Trade in Endangered Species appendix 1 species held in the United Kingdom, as recommended on page 3 of the recent Joint Nature Conservancy Council report on international trade in wildlife.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 28 January 1992]: I wrote to the European Commission in October urging it to propose stricter controls on the trade in appendix 1 species. The Commission reported in December that it planned to publish proposals shortly, and my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside pressed for early progress on these. We shall be giving urgent attention to the proposals when they are published.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those birds species that (a) have benefited and (b) are likely to benefit from the international trade in wild-caught birds.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 28 January 1992]: Comprehensive information on species which have benefited from trade is not readily available. Properly controlled trade can provide an incentive for the better management of many species. The same general principles can be applied to the bird trade as to trade in other species mentioned in the JNCC report.

Defence Estate

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken to ensure that local authorities will receive sufficient information from the Ministry of Defence to ensure that land forming part of the defence estate is noted in their registers of potentially contaminated land.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have been asked to reply.

There is a close liaison between the Ministry of Defence and the Department of the Environment concerning the implications for the defence estate of the public registers of land which may be contaminated to be compiled under section 143 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. In addition, the MOD is working with the DOE to prepare a profile of potentially contaminative uses of defence land which is designed to assist local authorities to compile register entries. The MOD will respond positively at the appropriate time to local authority requests for information, subject to the constraints of national security.

WALES

Radon Gas

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the total number of deaths from lung cancer in Wales and the estimated proportion of deaths caused by exposure to radon gas.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: During 1990 there were 1,976 deaths from lung cancer in Wales. It is not possible to give an accurate estimate of how many, if any, of these were caused by exposure to radon. The National Radiological Protection Board estimates that 5 per cent. of lung cancer deaths in the United Kingdom may be attributable to exposure to radon.

Information on lung cancer deaths in years prior to 1990 is contained in the OPCS publication "Mortality Statistics: Area"—Series DH5—which is available in the Library of the House.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects local authorities in Wales to finalise their new arrangements for waste disposal sites.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: By September 1992.

Children's Ear, Nose and Throat Surgery

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the South Glamorgan health authority concerning the date on which the children's ear, nose and throat operating theatres will be transferred from the Children's Ear, Nose and Throat hospital, Cowbridge road west, Ely, Cardiff, to the University hospital of Wales, the Heath, Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This is an operational matter for the authority.

Primary School Classes

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of children in primary classes in Wales in (a) 1988 and (b) 1991, in classes of (i) 31 to 35, (ii) 36 to 39 and (iii) 40 and above.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the number of children in primary classes is not held centrally in the form requested. The table gives the number of ordinary classes in primary schools by size of class. Data for 1991 are not yet available.

	31 to 35	36 to 40	41 and over
1988	1,602	132	8
1990	1,634	97	9

Figures relate to September of the academic year.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since 22 July 1991.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 5 November 1991]: None.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 30 January.

Mr. MacGregor: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has been having important discussions today with President Yeltsin on his first visit abroad as President of an independent Russia. My right hon. Friend will be meeting President Bush this evening after his arrival in New York to chair a meeting of the United Nations Security Council.

UN Environment and Development Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the organisations invited, and the criteria for inviting them, to his meeting with non-governmental organisations on 5 February to explore the prospects for the United Nations conference on environment and development in Rio de Janeiro in June.

Mr. MacGregor: I have been asked to reply.

Participants in the seminar on 5 February have been invited in their personal capacity, not as representatives of organisations. Leading figures from environment and development groups and business were asked to nominate appropriate individuals to receive invitations to the seminar. The choice of whom to nominate was left entirely to them.

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy, in his discussions with President Yeltsin on 30 January, to raise the outstanding verification problems that hinder the completion of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. MacGregor: I have been asked to reply.

No.

HOME DEPARTMENT

National Alliance of Womens Organisations

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the National Alliance of Womens Organisations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will provide financial support to the National Alliance of Womens Organisations.

Mrs. Rumbold: We recognise the practical advice this body provides for some women's organisations. We have provisionally decided to give NAWO a small grant in 1992-93 to help with administrative costs. This is subject to approval by Treasury and by Parliament.

Police Truncheon (Replacement)

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will authorise the replacement of the present police short truncheon with the American side handled baton.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The procurement of equipment is the responsibility of chief officers of police. We are prepared to arrange for a scientific evaluation of any equipment which might assist in public order control if chief officers request it.

Knife-proof Vests

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will carry out an urgent evaluation of a knife-proof vest for police foot patrols.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Home Office police scientific development branch recently completed research on stab resistant materials. We are ready to undertake further scientific research into new products if requested to do so by chief officers.

Firearms

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been carried out by his Department since the enactment of the Firearms Act 1982 of the extent to which imitation firearms now on sale can be converted to fire live ammunition without any special skill using tools in common use.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the Firearms Act 1982 any imitation firearm which is readily convertible to fire live ammunition is subject to the same strict licensing controls as a "real" firearm. Since that Act came into effect, it has been normal practice for manufacturers and retailers to submit model firearms to the Home Office forensic science service for an assessment of their status before releasing them for sale.

Asylum Seekers

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each month how many asylum applications were decided (a) by the granting of refugee status, (b) by the granting of exceptional leave to remain and (c) by the refusal to either; and, of those granted refugee status or leave to remain, how many were port applicants for asylum and how many were lawfully in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Available monthly information for 1990 and the first half of 1991 is given in the table. Corresponding information for the second half of 1991 is not yet available.

Police (Body Armour)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to provide body armour to all the police forces for the protection of officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The procurement of equipment for forces is entirely a matter for chief officers. I understand that all forces have body armour available for officers when an operational need can be foreseen. The Home Office is ready to undertake scientific research into new products if requested so to do by chief officers.

DNA Profiles

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy in respect of the retention of the paper copy of DNA profiles taken from persons cleared of an offence as part of the case record; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Paper records of DNA profiles are retained by forensic science laboratories for audit and quality assurance purposes.

Prison Estate

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce his conclusions on the further review of the prison estate.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have considered very carefully the large number of representations received following my announcement on 24 July 1991, Official Report, column 596, of the proposals which had emerged from the review of the prison estate. The proposals included changes to the roles of 15 establishments, and the closure of seven establishments as well as units at Her Majesty's prison Drake Hall, Her Majesty's prison Highpoint and Her Majesty's prison Norwich.

Since these proposals were made the prison population has risen and the prison service has had to resort to very high levels of police cell use to accommodate prisoners. Yesterday there were 1,244 prisoners in police cells. The use of police cells in this way is entirely unacceptable and I do not now believe that it would be right to continue with the proposed closures, except for Her Majesty's remand centre Pucklechurch and the open unit at Her Majesty's prison Highpoint in 1993-94. I therefore now intend that the establishments in the following list should continue in operation for at least the next two years and subject where appropriate to changes of role.

HMYOI Kirklevington
To convert to adult use.

HMYOI Werrington
To remain as a young offender institution.

HMP Hewell Grange
To continue for the present in its temporary role as an adult open prison.

HMYOI Finnamore Wood Camp
To remain as a young offender institution.

HMP Oxford
Closure to be deferred and to be used as a decanting facility by London establishments during the present period of large scale refurbishment.

HMP Aldington
To remain as a training prison.

HMP Norwich (Britannia)
Closure to be deferred and to be used temporarily to relieve the main establishment while work goes ahead to install integral sanitation.

HMP Drake Hall
The proposal to mothball one unit will not now go ahead.

I have also reached the following conclusions in respect of the proposed changes of role:

HMYOI Castington
To be retained as a young offender institution.

HMYOI Deerbolt

To establish a juvenile unit within existing buildings.

HMP Nottingham

To be retained as a training establishment.

HMYOI Lancaster Farms

To be used as a remand centre as well as a young offender institution.

HMP Risley

To be used as both a local and training prison as new accommodation comes into use.

HMP Leeds

To be used as both a training and a local prison as new accommodation comes into use.

HMP Stafford

Further consideration will be given to the proposal for this establishment to be converted in part to a local prison in 1995-96.

HMP Gloucester

One wing to be used as a remand centre.

HMYOI Eastwood Park

To close as a young offender institution (1992-93) and re-open as a female establishment (1993-94).

HMYOI Hollesley Bay Colony

To convert in part to adult use.

HMP Bedford

To convert in part to a remand centre. But further consideration will be given to whether it will in addition be necessary to use some of the accommodation at HMP Woodhill as a remand centre.

HMP Reading

To convert to a remand centre.

HMP Elmley

To open as part local and part category C training prison.

HMP Coldingley

To convert from a category B to a category C training prison.

HMYOI Guys Marsh

Further consideration will be given to the most effective way of providing an adequate number of remand centre places in the south of England. It is now proposed that for the time being Guys Marsh will be used to hold adult male sentenced prisoners as well as young offenders.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ghana and Guatemala

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, how much government aid, other than humanitarian aid, was given to (a) Guatemala and (b) Ghana in each of the last three years.

Mrs. Chalker: United Kingdom bilateral aid to Ghana and Guatemala in the past three United Kingdom financial years was:

£ thousands

	Ghana	Guatemala
1988-89	33,558	12
1989-90	33,150	61
1990-91	25,193	72

These figures exclude disaster relief and food aid, being classified as humanitarian aid—Ghana £5,000 in 1989-90 and £32,000 in 1990-91; Guatemala £29,000 in 1989-90.

The figures do not include Commonwealth Development Corporation funds—Ghana £4·2 million in 1990 calendar year—or the United Kingdom share of aid through multilateral institutions.

International Organisations

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much Britain contributed financially to (a) International Labour Organisation, (b) Food and Agriculture Organisation, (c) International Food and Agriculture Development, (d) United Nations Development Programme, (e) World Food Programme, (f) UNICEF, (g) United Nations High Commission for Refugees, (h) United Nations Food for Population Articles and (i) United Nations Environment Programme, in cash and real terms for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Chalker: Contributions were as follows, using Her Majesty's Treasury's GDP deflator for the real terms data:

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

East Timor

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Indonesian Government in response to its national inquiry team report into the Dili massacre in East Timor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Indonesians have been informed of the contents of our statement of 28 January, in which we noted the conclusions of the commission of inquiry and President Soeharto's prompt responses. We expressed support for the recommendation that all those thought to have broken the law should face legal proceedings and urged the Indonesian authorities to investigate thoroughly the responsibility of members of armed forces and see that those found responsible would be punished. We remain concerned about a number of other issues and have urged the Indonesians to take the necessary action both to investigate the fate of those missing and put in place policies designed to ensure that abuses of human rights in East Timor cease.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the human rights situation in East Timor.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 20 January 1992]: On 28 January we issued a statement in which we noted the conclusions of the commission of inquiry and President Soeharto's prompt response. We expressed support for the recommendation that all those thought to have broken the law should face legal proceedings and urged the Indonesian authorities to investigate thoroughly the responsibility of members of armed forces and see that those found responsible would be punished. We remain concerned about a number of other issues and have urged the Indonesians to take the necessary action both to investigate the fate of those missing and put in place policies designed to ensure that abuses of human rights in East Timor cease.

India

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people applied for places on the Indian FCO scholarship programme in 1991-92 and 1992-93; how many have been awarded places; and whether he has plans to extend the scheme.

Mr. Garel-Jones: A total of 152 FCO scholarships—39 new awards, 113 continuing awards—were made to Indian students in 1991-92. For 1992-93 the figure is 189—56 new awards and 133 continuing awards.

Figures for the total number of applicants for FCO scholarships are not available since a large proportion of FCO scholarships are jointly funded with United Kingdom academic institutions to whom all applicants apply direct; and a large number of FCO scholarships are made from a pool of candidates applying for awards under other official, non-FCO, award schemes.

There are no plans to increase the current provision of resources for FCO scholarships for Indian students, which, at £1,163,000 for 1991-92, already represents nearly 6 per cent. of the global budget of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office scholarships and awards scheme.

Human Rights

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts his Department has had with the Helsinki citizens assembly, based in Prague, established in 1990 to monitor progress in the 1975 Helsinki human rights accords.

Mr. Garel-Jones: A United Kingdom representative of the Helsinki citizens assembly for peace and democracy met FCO officials for the first time on 6 November 1990, to discuss attendance at the CSCE Paris sumit later that month. The representative is regularly sent information on CSCE matters and is invited, together with others interested in the CSCE process, to briefing meetings in the FCO.

Sellafield

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the testimony by Paul Leventhal, president of the Nuclear Control Institute before the Sub-Committee on East Asian and Pacific Affairs of the United States Senate Committee on Foreign Relations held on 14 January on plutonium from the thermal oxide reprocessing plant (THORP) at Sellafield.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Yes. A copy has been ordered and will be added to the FCO departmental library.

Thaira Parveen

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken on the application by Thaira Parveen (Ref. G 321282; HUL/292/91) to enter the United Kingdom; whether a recommendation has been sent to the post in Islamabad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: In accordance with the guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, issued to Members on 14 December 1988, I have referred the question to the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The hon. Member will receive a reply from the unit very soon.

Gulfraz Khan

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Gulfraz Khan of Bradford applied to the post in Islamabad for a replacement of his British passport lost while travelling in Pakistan; when the post asked the Liverpool passport office for verification details; when his passport was handed into the post in Karachi; whether a new passport has been collected by Gulfraz Khan; and why no temporary travel document was issued to Gulfraz Khan to enable him to return to school in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 16 January 1992]: An application for a replacement passport was made to the British high commission at Islamabad on behalf of Gulfraz Khan on 27 October 1991. Liverpool passport office was asked for verification of details of his lost passport on 28 October 1991. The British deputy high commissioner at Karachi advised Islamabad on 4 November 1991 that Gulfraz Khan's lost passport had been recovered, and arranged the same day for its dispatch to Islamabad by safe means. Mrs. Samina Akhtar, Gulfraz Khan's mother, collected his new passport from the high commission on 16 January. At no time did the family request the issue of emergency passport facilities to enable Gulfraz Khan to return to school in this country.

DEFENCE

Contaminated Land

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Department has had with contractors or consultants on the subject of remediation of contaminated land forming part of the defence estate at the Shoeburyness ranges.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It has not been necessary to seek advice on remediation techniques for contaminated land in connection with the Shoeburyness ranges. Consequently no discussions have been held with contractors or consultants on this subject.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Department had during 1991 with contractors or consultants on the subject of remediation of contaminated land forming part of the defence estate at the Atomic Weapons Establishments at Aldermaston, Burghfield and Llanishen.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The AWE maintains regular contacts with land remediation contractors and consultants. Specifically, discussions took place during 1991 with a specialist contractor concerning pre-project planning of remedial work around an on-site sewage facility.

Royal Dockyards

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the royal dockyards at Devonport and Rosyth.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Studies are in progress to review the future infrastructure and arrangements for the refitting and repair of the Royal Navy's ships and submarines.

Housing

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make it his policy to monitor the success of service personnel in finding housing after leaving the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence is examining a range of options for improving housing opportunities for service personnel, with the aim of easing any difficulties service personnel may experience in finding housing at the end of their service career. It is not possible, however, to monitor effectively the housing circumstances of personnel once they have left the Services.

Sleeping Accommodation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 514, what information he is able to provide about unused sleeping accommodation in the control of his Department in Greater London.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 31 December 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, 596 Ministry of Defence-owned houses and flats within the Greater London boundary were vacant. The majority of these properties were either already allotted to service families who were due to move in shortly or were undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation. The remainder will be required for regiments being re-deployed from elsewhere in the United Kingdom and for personnel returning from overseas as part of the drawdown. In addition, 48 dwellings were in the process of being sold.

The Ministry of Defence is also in the process of disposing of its interest in three sites—Furse house in Kensington and Chelsea, RAF Chessington and east camp, RAF Hendon—which could be used for accommodation purposes.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement about compensation for nuclear test veterans.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government are willing to consider claims for compensation from nuclear test participants where any evidence of exposure to radiation can be adduced.

In the absence of recorded levels of exposure, it is only through the statistical studies of the National Radiological Protection Board that it can be determined whether causal links with cancers and leukaemias exist. Its report, published in 1988, demonstrated that no causal link had been found. The National Radiological Protection Board are currently working on a further report which is expected to be complete by mid-1992.

Vehicles (UK Content)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what requirements his Department places on non-United Kingdom bidders for contracts for a replacement vehicle for its existing Land Rover fleet to provide undertakings on the United Kingdom content in the vehicles that they are proposing to supply.

Mr. Alan Clark: International agreements on open competition for non-warlike stores preclude the placing of such requirements.

Military Equipment Fairs (Baghdad)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what records his Department keeps of British companies that have attended arms and military equipment fairs held in Baghdad.

Mr. Alan Clark: None. My Department keeps such records only when attendance has been sponsored by Her Majesty's Government.

Military Equipment Sales

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the value of sales of military equipment by United Kingdom companies in each year since 1979-80 (a) within the United Kingdom, (b) to other EC countries and (c) to non-EC countries, in (i) cash and (ii) 1992 prices.

Mr. Alan Clark: To answer the question precisely as asked would involve disproportionate cost. I will, however, be happy to write to the hon. Member on this subject.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment, South Derbyshire

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in south Derbyshire were employed in (a) 1983, (b) 1987, (c) 1991 and (d) at present, including the self-employed; and what is the rate of change of employment over the same period.

Mr. Jackson: The latest available local area data for the self-employed come from the population censuses for April 1981.

Information about employees in employment in parliamentary constituencies is from the periodic censuses of employment. No census was taken in 1983 and 1989 is the latest date for which figures are available. The numbers of employees in employment in South Derbyshire are shown in the table:

September of each year	Number of employees	Percentage increase since 1984
1984	18,800
1987	19,600	+4·3
1989	20,500	+9·4

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to review the six bed space rule for bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Mr. Key: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on 11 December 1991, Official Report, column 431.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Balligan House

12. Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to keep open Balligan house for the mentally handicapped.

Mr. Brooke: This is primarily a matter for the Eastern health and social services board and the hon. Gentleman will be aware from his recent correspondence with the chairman of the board that it is currently reviewing the residential services for people with a mental handicap in North Down and Ards. I am sure that he will agree therefore that it would not be appropriate for me to comment at this stage.

Prison Security

12. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce a bill similar to the Prison Security Bill to apply to Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Special Needs Education

13. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many children in the Province have been statemented; to what extent the subsequent arrangements made for their education have fulfilled the requirements in the statements; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: At Janaury 1991, a total of 5,997 children in Northern Ireland had statements of special educational needs. I am not aware of any general dissatisfaction about the way in which the requirements of statements are being fulfilled.

Political Initiatives

15. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he now has any plans for further political initiatives in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member to the joint statement issued on Monday 27 January by the Government and the leaders of the four main constitutional parties in Northern Ireland, copies of which have been placed in the Vote Office.

Employment

16. Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on current levels of employment in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: At September 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, there were an estimated 523,350 employees in employment. This represents an increase of almost 22,000 over the past five years.

Constitutional Talks

17. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his latest talks with the constitutional parties in the Province.

18. Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his recent talks with party leaders in Northern Ireland.

24. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his plans for future political progress in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: I refer my hon. Friends and the hon. Member to the joint statement issued on Monday 27 January by the Government and the leaders of the four main constitutional parties in Northern Ireland, copies of which have been placed in the Vote Office.

Home Ownership

19. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the level of home ownership in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: By the end of May 1991 the total number of owner-occupied properties was 350,000 or almost 65 per cent. of the total housing stock.

Crime

20. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the use of video cameras to combat crime in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: Video cameras have a wide range of useful applications in combating crime in Northern Ireland, for example, in preventing and detecting crime in commercial premises and as an aid to perimeter security at industrial, commercial and Government premises.

Investment

21. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest figures of inward investment to Northern Ireland both from inside the rest of the United Kingdom and from outside.

Mr. Needham: The total forecast investment resulting from projects for which selective financial assistance was offered between April 1988 and April 1991 is £230 million. Of this, approximately £219 million relates to projects involving companies based outside the United Kingdom.

Terrorism

22. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the number of planned terrorist incidents detected in advance.

Dr. Mawhinney: Increasingly effective proactive work by the security forces is undoubtedly deterring or preventing substantial numbers of terrorist attacks. The Chief Constable of the RUC has stated that at least four out of five major anticipated terrorist outrages are being prevented.

Security

23. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: I regret to report that since I last answered a similar question on 12 December there have been 20 deaths as a result of terrorist violence in Northern Ireland. All the dead were civilians.

The Government will remain steadfast in its commitment to bring terrorism to an end. The security forces will continue to pursue terrorists and bring them to justice. Last year, some 400 persons were charged with terrorist related offences, including some 120 with murder or attempted murder.

Oil and Gas Reserves

25. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining the findings of explorations to date in Northern Ireland for oil and gas reserves.

Mr. Needham: Since 1964, nine exploration licences have been granted by the Department of Economic Development and seven exploratory wells have been drilled. Four of those wells had gas shows, but these were not sufficient quantities for commercial exploitation.

Belfast City Centre

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much private and public sector funding has been made available to date to regenerate Belfast city centre.

Mr. Needham: Current and programmed private sector investment in Belfast city centre totals £290 million. This comes on top of the £320 million invested over the last six years. For their part, the Government have contributed to the regeneration both through urban development grant and various environmental improvement schemes.

Roads

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the major capital expenditure on roads provision in (a) Down, (b) Newry and Mourne and (c) Banbridge district council areas in each year since 1 April 1981; and what breakdown he has on spending on roads provision in each electoral ward.

Mr. Needham: Capital expenditure on major road schemes was as follows:

	District council
	Down	Newry and Mourne	Banbridge
1981-82	29	427	75
1982-83	58	493	90
1983-84	17	1,365	125
1984-85	4	1,320	28
1985-86	Nil	839	282
1986-87	Nil	1,198	508
1987-88	Nil	1,466	360
1988-89	Nil	590	1,246
1989-90	210	1,120	91
1990-91	80	516	64

Expenditure details are not maintained for electoral wards.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been allocated to roads expenditure in the Downpatrick and Craigavon roads divisions from 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993; and how this amount is spent.

Mr. Needham: Details of the financial allocations to roads service divisions have not yet been finalised, but it is expected that Downpatrick and Craigavon divisions will receive approximately £16·5 million and £14·5 million respectively.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of bovine spongiform encelphalopathy were confirmed in each county in Northern Ireland in each year since 1986.

Mr. Hanley: There were no cases of BSE in Northern Ireland in 1986 or 1987. The table shows the numbers by county to 31 December 1991.

County	Year confirmed
	1988	1989	1990	1991
Antrim	1	10	31	56
Armagh	0	1	8	11
Down	1	10	22	27
Fermanagh	1	1	10	19
Londonderry	0	4	8	26
Tyrone	0	4	21	31
TOTAL	3	30	100	170

There are 1,533,266 cattle in Northern Ireland.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assistance he will give to renewable energy projects in Northern Ireland in 1992; and when he intends to inaugurate a 20 per cent. non-fossil fuel obligation.

Mr. Needham: In 1992-93 an estimated £300,000 assistance will be provided for collaborative renewable energy projects in Northern Ireland. Additional assistance will be available to industrial and commercial organisations under the energy efficiency survey scheme. I hope to announce arrangements for a non-fossil fuel obligation in Northern Ireland in April.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Human Rights (Exports)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to monitor the effectiveness of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989 in preventing the export from the United Kingdom of equipment directly used in the violation of human rights.

Mr. Sainsbury: The effectiveness of the Export of Goods (Control) Order is constantly being monitored and the order is amended when necessary. The 1989 order was amended eight times in two years to meet changing needs in export controls and was replaced recently by the 1991 order which contained further amendments.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will take further action to establish effective channels to receive information from non-governmental organisations on human rights aspects of the export of military, security and police equipment.

Mr. Sainsbury: My export control organisation receives expert advice from other Government Departments on all export licence applications for licensable military security and police equipment. This advice takes into account the human rights record of the country of ultimate destination. For reasons of commercial confidentiality it has been the practice of successive Governments not to divulge details of individual export licence applications, although general statistics of export licence activity is published. However, I welcome any firm evidence about human rights violations which helps to inform our export licensing decisions.

Shipbuilding Intervention Fund

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will consult with the Shipbuilding and Shiprepairers Association over the clawback provision of the shipbuilding intervention fund.

Mr. Leigh: I hope to discuss this and other matters with the Shipbuilders and Shiprepairers Association shortly.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to revise the clawback provision governing the granting of shipbuilding intervention funding.

Mr. Leigh: None at present.

Firework Accidents

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to publish the results of the 1990 joint survey undertaken by 42 local authorities and his Department to assess accurately the level of firework accidents nationally; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The results relating to hospital cases reported in the joint survey undertaken by 42 local authorities in 1990 were broadly comparable to the hospital accident figures published by the Department in 1991. A report highlighting these findings will be published in March this year.

The consumer safety unit is currently awaiting a response from the local authority officials to take forward joint discussions on the overall presentation of future firework accident data.

ECGD

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the most recent trading accounts of the Export Credits Guarantee Department have been published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I am pleased to announce that the Comptroller and Auditor General today presented ECGD's trading accounts for the financial year 1990-91 to Parliament together with his certificate and report thereon. The ECGD's annual report for the financial year 1990-91, which incorporates the trading accounts, is also published today and I have placed a copy in the Library of the House.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is yet in a position to provide a firm estimate of his Department's spending on publicity and advertising in the current financial year.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 28 January 1992]: I estimate that expenditure from the Department's central publicity budget, which includes DTI's main advertising activities, will be of the order of £11 million this year.

SCOTLAND

Glasgow Royal Infirmary

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to give capital approval for the building of the new maternity unit at Glasgow royal infirmary.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 22 January 1992]: My right hon. Friend approved on 27 December 1991 the principle of building a new maternity unit at Glasgow royal infirmary at a cost of £15·4 million. It is for Greater Glasgow health board to follow the normal procedures in taking this project forward to completion.

Stobhill Maternity Unit

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of his letter to Greater Glasgow health board announcing approval of the closure of Stobhill maternity unit and asking for a further review of the maternity services in Glasgow.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 22 January 1992]: It is not normal practice to make such correspondence available and I do not consider it appropriate to do so in this case.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Certificate of Education

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the current recruitment levels as a percentage of Government targets, for students to postgraduate certificate in education courses in (a) physics, (b) chemistry, (c) technology and (d) mathematics.

Mr. Fallon: The Government do not give separate target intakes to the higher education funding councils for postgraduate and undergraduate teacher training courses or for individual science subjects. In 1991, recruitment to secondary undergraduate and postgraduate initial teacher training courses in science, design and technology, and mathematics, as a percentage of the planned intakes for those subjects, was as follows:

	Per cent.
Science	112
Design and technology	119
Mathematics	90

Polytechnics (Competitive Tendering)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what quality safeguards are required for competitive tendering within polytechnics;

(2) what guidelines are available to polytechnics concerning the procedure for competitive tendering.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The provisions of part I of the Local Government Act (1988), which concern competitive tendering, do not apply to polytechnics, which are independent institutions. Individual polytechnics are, therefore, responsible for determining quality criteria appropriate to each contract. In order to secure the best value for money, the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council (PCFC) requires institutions to let contracts for publicly-funded capital projects through competitive tendering procedures.

The costs of any redundancies which may result from competitive tendering fall to be met by the appropriate polytechnic. In certain circumstances, the costs may be eligible for reimbursement by the PCFC under its restructuring scheme.

Further Education (Special Needs)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give general guidance to further education college boards of management about the provision of education to those with special educational needs.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Subject to the passage of the Further and Higher Education Bill, in accordance with the commitment given by my noble Friends on 14 January, Official Report, House of Lords, Vol. 534, columns 167 and 211, my right hon. and learned Friend will issue guidance to the further education funding councils on the application of the phrase "disproportionate expenditure" in clause 2 of the Bill and on the importance of ensuring that adequate arrangements are in place for assessing the educational needs of students with learning difficulties. It will be for the councils to take this into account in determining the arrangements for funding the colleges.

Schools (Selection)

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the effects of the Greenwich judgment on the selection of schools.

Mr. Fallon [pursuant to the answer 28 January 1992]: My right hon. and learned Friend has now reviewed the evidence submitted by the London Boroughs Association and individual local education authorities about the effects of the Greenwich judgment on school admissions in 1991. That evidence does not suggest that authorities have faced sufficiently serious practical problems to justify a change in the law to allow authorities' previous practice of giving priority in school admissions to those who live within their areas. My right hon. and learned Friend does not therefore propose to pursue such a change in the law.

The needs of local authorities to incur capital expenditure in order to discharge their responsibility to ensure that sufficient school places are available to meet the needs of their own residents will, however, continue to be recognised in the allocation of borrowing authority for such expenditure.

We will be writing to those who submitted evidence, and to the local authority associations, to inform them of my right hon. and learned Friend's decision.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Land (Planning Applications)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 27 January, Official Report, column 445, how many planning applications the Ministry (a) considered and (b) objected to in each county in (i) 1981 and (ii) 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: This information is not available by county.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of planning applications he was consulted on in (a) England and (b) Wales for each grade of agricultural land for each year since 1980.

Mr. Gummer: As planning applications can relate to a mixture of grades of agricultural land the records do not show the number of consultations by grade.

Information on the total number of consultations in England and Wales for each year since 1980 is as follows:

	Number
1980	1,717
1981	1,893
1982	1,479
1983	1,315
1984	1,583
1985	1,640
1986	2,037
1987	1,618
1988	1,490
1989	1,296
1990	1,439

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the rates that are payable for the storage and disposal of BSE carcases; to whom such payments are made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: This information is commercial-in-confidence and cannot therefore be disclosed.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food further to his answer of 23 January, Official Report, column 289, if he will set out the conditions covering the storage of BSE confirmed carcases in refrigerated lorries; whether his Ministry has to be notified of every location where such carcases are stored; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: There are six sites where refrigerated containers are held while loads are being assembled. The State Veterinary Service supervises the facilities to ensure that they are used only for storing BSE carcases; lockable; bird, rodent and leak proof; capable of being thoroughly cleansed and disinfected.

All carcases are transported under licence to specified destinations. The licence includes details of identification marks permitting cross referencing at holding premises.

Irradiation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research projects his Ministry is (a) carrying out or (b) funding into the effect of food irradiation on (i) pesticide residues, (ii) food additives and (iii) packaging; and if he will give in each case the name of the research establishment, duration of project and cost of project.

Mr. Gummer: The following projects are being carried out or funded by my Ministry.

Effects of irradiation on pesticide residues
Research Establishment: MAFF Food Science Laboratory (Norwich)
Duration: 3 years
Cost: £137,000

Experimental determination of radiation doses absorbed in food contact materials
Research Establishment: AEA Technology, Harwell
Duration: 9 months
Cost: £15,200

My Ministry also funded a project on "A comparison of the effects of gamma and electron beam irradiation on additives present in food contact polymers" at Sheffield university over three years to September 1991 at a cost of £36,000. Other projects on irradiation of packaging material carried out between 1984 and 1988 are described in Food Surveillance Paper No. 26, "Migration of Substances from Food Contact Materials into Food" (HMSO, 1989). The results of all this research have been or will be published in the scientific literature.

Clenbuterol

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will announce the results of the further tests for clenbuterol undertaken on meat imported into the United Kingdom from the Irish Republic.

Mr. Maclean: A total of 60 further samples of liver, kidney, muscle and heart taken from farm animals originating from the Irish Republic during the period 1 September—31 December 1991 have been examined for the presence of clenbuterol residues. One bovine sample was found to contain detectable residues of clenbuterol, as follows:

Date of import	Tissue	Screening Test	Confirmatory Test
12 October 1991	Kidney	1·8 u/kg	2·9 u/kg

The screening and confirmatory tests were carried out at the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland (DANI) Veterinary Science Laboratory at Belfast. A further test on the single positive sample was carried out at the MAFF Food Science Laboratory at Norwich, which confirmed DANI's results.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Agriculture Council held on 27 to 28 January.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting of the Council together with the Parliamentary Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry).

The Presidency presented a working document, cast in very broad terms, seeking to identify areas of agreement on the reform of the common agricultural policy in order to take the discussions forward. I made it clear that it would not be possible for the United Kingdom nor, I believed for any member state, to take a definitive view on CAP reform until they knew the outcome of the GATT negotiations. I also expressed doubts whether the working document in practice took matters any further forward. Discussions will now resume at the next meeting of the Council on 10 to 11 February.

The Council also discussed the position on GATT. I argued that the Community's response to the Dunkel paper on GATT should be based on the expectation of securing eventual agreement. The Community should concentrate on ensuring the coherence of the proposals in the three main areas of reductions in domestic support, market access and export subsidies, and explore the difficulties that the text poses because of the proposed commitments on volume reductions in subsidised exports and the absence of proposals for charges on certain cereal derivatives. I suggested that the Commission should pay much less attention to the possibility of securing a wider "green box" of permitted subsidies. These views received considerable support. The Commissioner said he would take member states' views into account in the continuing discussions in Geneva.

The Council agreed in principle on a measure specifying the rules for meat products that will apply in the single market. This is a useful step forward.

The French Minister questioned how the Commission intended responding to the proposal in the draft GATT text that import controls on bananas should be converted into a tariff. I emphasised the importance of this question for certain ACP banana producers with which the United Kingdom has traditional links. The Commission said they were examining the position.

HEALTH

Bio Products Laboratory

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is the policy of the West Midlands regional transfusion centre to purchase its supply of blood products from the Bio Products Laboratory rather than subject to tender to commercial suppliers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The hospitals which use blood products are free to choose between commercial products or the Bio Products Laboratory (BPL) products. The West Midland blood transfusion centre supplies plasma to the BPL and acts as distributor of its products to those hospitals which wish to use them. Those hospitals which prefer commercial products can readily obtain them through the usual pharmaceutical distribution channels.

Food Hygiene

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has had about the practice of certain local authorities in interpreting the Food Hygiene (Amendment) Regulations 1990 and the Food Safety Act 1990 to the detriment of social functions which take place in village halls, and where food is prepared in people's homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: A number of representations have been received. The Food Safety Act 1990 is intended to enforce a high standard of food safety. There is no reason why volunteers should not continue to provide food for sale at village hall functions.

Publications

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements exist for the circulation among regional and district health authorities of relevant publications emanating from bodies such as the British Medical Association.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has no standard arrangements for distributing such documents within the NHS, but we consider proposals on their merits if the BMA, or a similar organisation, suggests that we circulate a document jointly.

Hydatidosis

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have (a) died and (b) undergone surgery from hydatidosis in the years 1989, 1990 and 1991; and what was the estimated cost to the national health service of hydatidosis for each of these years.

Mr. Dorrell: Notifications to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys giving hydatid disease as the cause of death were as follows:

	Number
1989	3
1990	5
1991[1]	3

[1] To September.

The number of instances of surgery for hydatid disease is not available, as it is not possible to disaggregate the cost of this treatment from other surgical procedures.

Extra-contractual Referrals

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will specify for each district health authority the number of extra-contractual referral cases that have been (a) applied for, (b) accepted and (c) rejected for the first 10 months of 1991-92.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total expenditure to date on the introduction of general practitioner fundholding, excluding money transferred to fundholders to purchase health care.

Mr. Dorrell: Information is available on payments of the preparatory and management allowances which is provided in the table. These payments have been used by practices to improve and expand their management systems, which will be of benefit to patients. Information on payments made to both potential and existing fundholders in respect of computer systems is not separately identifiable.

GP fundholding preparatory and management allowances estimated expenditure

1990-91	[1] 1991-92	England total
4,372,387	8,032,000	12,404,387

[1] April-November. Latest available figures are given.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health of the total allocation to general practitioner fundholders for 1991-92 what is the amount allocated for drug prescribing; and what is the amount allocated for purchasing other health care services.

Mr. Dorrell: The total allocation in England, to the nearest million pounds was £401 million. This comprised £208 million for hospital services, £162 million for drug prescribing and £31 million for staff costs. GP fundholders may vire between these three elements of the fund in order to provide the care which best meets the needs of their patients.

Capital Charges

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the role of capital charges in the 1992-93 financial year.

Mr. Dorrell: The capital charging system, introduced on 1 April 1991, is now a firm part of the NHS financial regime. It will continue to operate in 1992-93 and in future years. It ensures that the full costs of capital in the NHS are taken into account when setting contract prices and making decisions on the use of assets.

Risk Money Reserves

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the amount of money held by each regional health authority as a risk money reserve in 1991-92; and how much was held by each regional health authority in 1990-91.

Mr. Dorrell: Comprehensive information on the amount of money set aside to manage risk is not held centrally.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how (a) a health authority, (b) a NHS trust and (c) a fundholding general practitioner apply for an allocation from regional health authority's risk money reserve.

Mr. Dorrell: The procedure for applying for money from regional reserves is for individual regional health authorities to determine.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the risk factors for which regional health authorities are holding risk money reserves.

Mr. Dorrell: The reserves are held to provide in-year flexibility in line with sensible financial practice.

Care Homes

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991 will come into force; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We intend to bring the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991 into force later this year once the necessary regulations have been made and sufficient time allowed for applications for registration to be lodged.

Operations Statistics

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the targets set by his Department in 1986 for the number of heart bypass, cataract and hip replacement operations to be done (a) in each regional health authority in 1990 and (b) in total in 1990; and what was the actual number of each type of operation in each regional health authority and in total carried out in 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 23 January 1992]: In 1986 national targets were set for numbers of operations per million population. Information on the targets at national level is in the table.

Data available for 1990-91 are not a reliable indication of whether targets have been met on a regional basis as they do not accurately reflect cross boundary flows.

	Targets per million population	Target number of operations in 1990-91 based on 1990 population	Operations performed 1990-91
Coronary artery by-pass graft (CABGs)	300	14,290	12,240
Cataract operation	1500	71,520	94,739
Hip replacement	1,050	50,060	44,477

Special Health Authorities

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's annual expenditure on special health authorities.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 14 January 1992]: Resources made available to special health authorities during 1990-91 and included in the Department's appropriation account for that year amounted to some £623 million.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the expenditure by his Department on the general practitioner fundholding scheme.

Mr. Dorrell [pursuant to his answer 24 January 1992, Official Report, column 398]: I regret that an incorrect figure was given for the total allocated to GP fundholders to purchase health care. GP fundholders are managing a total budget of £401,400,000 in 1991-92.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the loss or gain in revenue if national insurance started (a) at £100 per week for all wage earners, (b) at £120 per week and (c) if national insurance contribution was set at 10 per cent. and collected as an addition to income tax with no cut-off point.

Mr. Jack: The loss or gain in revenue is set out in the table:

(£ billion)

Employee contribution rate	First year			Full year
	Employee[1]	Employer[1]	Total	Employee[1]	Employer[2]	Total
(a) Lower earnings limit—£100
9 per cent.	−1·0	−1·1	−2·1	−1·1	−1·3	−2·4
10 per cent.	+0·4	−1·1	−0·7	+0·5	−1·3	−0·8
(b) Lower earnings limit—£120
9 per cent.	−2·3	−1·7	−4·0	−2·6	−1·9	−4·5
10 per cent.	−0·9	−1·7	−2·6	−1·1	−1·9	−3·0

[1] Employee contributions—assumes that contributions are deducted at 2 per cent. on earnings up to the lower earnings limit and that there is no upper earnings limit.
[2] Employer contributions—assumes that the existing structure of rates and earnings brackets applies above the appropriate lower earnings limit.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the weekly cost would be to someone on one and a half times male average earnings of the abolition of the national insurance upper earnings limit.

Mr. Jack: Someone earning £490 a week, which is about one and a half times average male earnings, would pay an extra £9 per week in national insurance contributions in 1991-92 if the upper earnings limit was abolished.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated annual cost to employers of abolishing the lower earnings limit for employees' national insurance contributions.

Mr. Jack: If the lower earnings limit were abolished in respect of just the employees' share of contributions, the additional cost for employers would be in administration. There are no readily available estimates of these costs. The businesses which would be affected most are likely to be those whose workforce is made up of a large proportion of, or wholly, part-time employees; for example hotels, newsagent and cleaning contractors. These types of employers would have to set up or expand their existing systems of collecting, recording and subsequently paying over contributions. Moreover, there would be pressure on employers to increase pay, so that the employee's net earnings remained the same once they had paid their contributions.

However, if the employers' lower earnings limit were also abolished, we estimate that it would cost business about £175 million a year in extra national insurance contributions.

Attendance Allowances

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for (a) attendance allowance and (b) night attendance allowance have been made in respect of constituents in Stoke-on-Trent, North, in each of the last two years and including 1991-92 to date; and if he will give in respect of day and night allowances (1) the number of successful applicants, (2) the number of refusals, (3) the number of appeals and (4) the number of outstanding appeals.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mortgage Interest

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his answer of 23 January, Official Report, column 98, if he will give the number of (a) pensioners, (b) economically inactive single adults and (c) economically inactive single adults with dependants, in receipt of income support in respect of mortgage interest in each standard region and nationally, in each year since 1980.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The tables relate to 1989 and 1990, the latest years for which figures are readily available:

	Pensioners	Single without dependants	Single with dependants
1989
North Eastern	9,000	14,000	9,000
London North	13,000	17,000	7,000
South Western	7,000	7,000	7,000
Wales	6,000	8,000	5,000
Midlands	12,000	15,000	9,000
North Western	11,000	15,000	12,000
Scotland	4,000	6,000	3,000
London South	11,000	13,000	8,000
Total	73,000	95,000	59,000

	Pensioners	Single without dependants	Single with dependants
1990
North Eastern	11,000	14,000	9,000
London North	15,000	19,000	12,000
South Western	8,000	9,000	12,000
Wales	9,000	9,000	4,000
Midlands	14,000	16,000	11,000
North Western	11,000	15,000	11,000
Scotland	4,000	6,000	3,000
London South	14,000	18,000	13,000
Total	86,000	107,000	68,000

Notes:
1. The figures for pensioners are for all pensioners whether or not they have part time earnings.
2. The figures for single adults do not include part-time earnings.
3. Figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand; for this reason the sum of individual entries does not always equal the total given.

Annual Statistical Enquiries 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total value of payments in respect of income support for mortgage interest in each standard region and nationally in 1989 and 1990.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the table:

Region	Mortgage interest 1989	Mortgage interest 1990
North Eastern	42	54
London North	78	129
South Western	33	52
Wales	22	31
Midlands	45	69
North Western	50	65
Scotland	19	25
London South	63	129
Great Britain	353	554

Notes:
1. Figures represent amounts added in the income support assessment, not actual amounts paid.
2. The figures are in pounds rounded to millions.
3. Due to rounding the sum of the individual amounts for each region does not equal the total for Great Britain for 1989.

Source: Annual Statistical Enquiries 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are estimated to be the administration costs of paying mortgage interest payments for home owners on income support directly to the mortgage lenders.

Miss Widdecombe: The estimated costs connected with the Social Security (Mortgage Interest Payments) Bill are set out in the Explanatory and Financial Memorandum to the Bill which was introduced on 23 January.

Crisis Loans

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many crisis loans were awarded from the social fund to claimants who were waiting for their first benefit payment in each of the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Scott: Annual totals of number of crisis loans paid to people awaiting initial payment of a benefit are set out in the table.

Number of crisis loans awarded to align with benefit payments

1988-89	1989-90	1990-91
143,800	191,000	207,200

Social Fund

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications were made to the social fund in each of the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 for fares to hospital; and how many of these were awarded.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will allocate any further money to the social fund budget.

Mr. Scott: I am pleased to announce that a further £6·2 million is to be allocated to the gross social fund budget by the end of this month. With the increases of £40 million made in August and £3 million in November, this takes the total gross social fund discretionary budget in 1991-92 to £277 million. As a result of this increase in the gross budget my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has approved changes in two Benefits Agency targets for 1991-92. The revised targets are:

—to live within a gross budget of £277 million for loans and grants; and —to recover £143 million in loan repayments.

Local Offices, Heywood and Middleton

189. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people claim each benefit payable (a) at each of the Heywood and Middleton social security offices and (b) in the United Kingdom.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of benefits in Great Britain is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office. Information about Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Gulf War

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further assistance is envisaged for the Kurds and Shias, and Iraqi citizens who have been materially affected by the Gulf war.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 20 January at column 15.

Sipho Mbeje

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made any representations to the Zambian Government about human rights abuses in relation to Sipho Mbeje; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I understand that the Zambian authorities are detaining Mr. Mbeje at Lusaka central prison pending his deportation. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is pursuing the question of where he may obtain asylum.

Meanwhile our high commission in Lusaka raised Mr. Mbeje's case on 9 December with the UNHCR, who advised that there was no immediate cause for concern about his condition. The high commission will continue to monitor his case.

ENVIRONMENT

Richmond Borough Council

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out figures for the last five financial years including the current year, and the projected figures for next year for Government grant to the Richmond upon Thames borough council both on capital and current account.

Mr. Key: The available information is as follows:

Government grants to Richmond-on-Thames borough council

	Revenue £ million	Capital £ million
1987-88	[1]24·82	0·21
1988-89	[1]21·45	n.a.
1989-90	[1]22·87	0·84

Projected figures

	Revenue £ million	Capital £ million
[2]1990-91	[3]63·82	1·41
1991-92	[4]91·40	[5]0·45
1992-93	[6]91·90	n.a.

[1] Revenue grants comprise rate support grant, relevant specific and supplementary grants taken to revenue, transport supplementary grant taken to revenue and rate rebate grants.

[2] The new local government finance system was introduced in 1990, and figures for 1990-91 and 1991-92 are not comparable for those before 1990.

[3] Comprises revenue support grant after safety net, national non-domestic rate entitlement, specific grants within AEF, community charge benefit and transitional relief grant.

[4] Comprises revenue support grant, national non-domestic rate entitlement, specific grants within AEF, community charge benefit, community charge reduction scheme grant and community charges (general reduction) grant.

[5] Local authority forecast.

[6] Comprises revenue support grant (which in 1992-93 includes community charge grant) and national non-domestic rate entitlements only. No estimates are available for remaining grants.

Menwith Hill Station

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment the National Rivers Authority has undertaken of the possible pollution dangers from the presence of Forest Moor naval communications and Menwith Hill station.

Mr. Baldry: I understand that a gas oil spillage from the complex occurred earlier this month causing pollution of a nearby stream. The NRA undertook containment and clean up works to prevent further pollution. Improvement works will be carried out on site to prevent a recurrence. Discharges of sewage effluent from both sites are routinely sampled by the NRA and the results are available to the public.

Diesel Cars

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is available to him on the environmental and health effects of the diesel-powered car; what evidence, including medical reports and any experimentation, this information is based upon; for how long and by whom any research has been conducted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the 15th report of the Royal Commisson on environmental pollution: "Emissions from Heavy Duty Diesel Vehicles" (Cm 1631), published in September 1991. Paragraphs 2.26 and following give a useful summary, with references, of the evidence on the environmental and health effects of diesel emissions. In general, this is relevant to emissions from diesel-powered cars as well as heavy vehicles.

Water Pollution

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions diesel oil has entered (a) Swinsty reservoir in north Yorkshire or (b) the Leeds water supply during the last three years.

Mr. Baldry: I am not aware of any occasion on which diesel oil has entered either the Swinsty reservoir or the Leeds water supply during the last three years.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Long-stay Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of prison inmates in prisons in England and Wales who have served a continuous prison sentence of over 20 years, over 25 years and over 30 years.

Mrs. Rumbold: The latest available information is given in the table.

Inmates[1] of Prison Service establishments in England and Wales on 30 November 1991 who had spent a continuous period of more than 20 years in such establishments under sentence: by time spent under sentence.

Number of prisoners

	Time under sentence
	Over 20 up to 25 years	Over 25 up to 30 years	Over 30 years	Over 20 years
Received under original sentence	64	14	5	83
Recalled following an earlier release on licence	—	—	[2]1	1

[1] The figures are those recorded centrally and are approximate; detailed checking of individual cases would involve disproportionate cost.
[2] Time served since recall from licence.

Neighbourhood Watch, South Yorkshire

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes operate in south Yorkshire.

Mr. John Patten: At present there are 1,425 neighbourhood watch schemes in operation in south Yorkshire covering aproximately 75,000 households.

Beef

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the countries from where beef was purchased for consumption in prisons in 1991 and in each case, including the United Kingdom, give the quantity bought and amount spent; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: During 1990, the quantity of beef purchased for consumption in prisons in England and Wales was approximately:

	£ million	Tons
United Kingdom	1·14	675
Eire	0·06	35

Information for year ending 31 December 1991 is not available.

DNA Profiles

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 403, if he will state which of the police forces in England and Wales currently comply with guidelines adopted by the Home Office and Metropolitan Police Forensic Science Services on the destruction of DNA profiles of persons excluded from or acquitted of offences; which police forces in England and Wales remove such profiles from their own databases; which do not; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Apart from the Home Office and Metropolitan police forensic science services, I am not aware of any police force in England and Wales which has developed, or is intending to develop, a database to hold DNA profiles.

Sipho Mbeje

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a decision on the request made by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Lusaka that Sipho Mbeje should be granted an entry visa to come to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Mr. Mbeje's application is under consideration and a decision will be reached as soon as possible.

Ecstasy

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many seizures of ecstasy and other similar drugs have been made in the most recent period for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 17 January 1992]: The number of seizures of MDMA—"Ecstasy"—MDA, amphetamines and LSD for 1990 and 1991 were as shown in the table.

Figures for police seizures in 1991 are incomplete. They represent those so far reported to the Home Office and do not include seizures made towards the end of the year.

United Kingdom

Number of seizures

	1990		1991
	Police	Customs	Police[1]	Customs
MDMA (Ecstasy)	374	25	812	49
MDA	17	0	113	1
Amphetamines	4,489	139	2,183	108
LSD	1,772	87	917	99

[1] Incomplete, some seizures from the second half of 1991 not yet reported.

PRIME MINISTER

Departmental Management

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list (i) for those Departments with a financial management initiative management system (a) the name in each case, (b) when it was established and (c) the name of the Minister who has direct supervision of the system; and (ii) those Departments which do not have a financial management initiative management system.

Mr. MacGregor: I have been asked to reply.

This information is not held centrally and the question should be addressed to individual Ministers.

Western Sahara

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Prime Minister whether he intends to discuss the future status of the western Sahara during his forthcoming meeting at the United Nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I have been asked to reply.

The subject may arise in discussion in the margins of the special meeting of the United Nations Security Council, but there is unlikely to be time for any detailed discussions of regional issues at the meeting itself.

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy at the forthcoming special meeting of the United Nations permanent members of the Security Council on proliferation (a) to establish agreed criteria for the completion of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty, (b) to urge President Mitterrand to finalise French membership of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and to halt nuclear testing in the Polynesian islands in the Pacific and (c) to establish the basis for the United Kingdom to fulfil its obligations under article VI of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty to negotiate nuclear disarmament with other treaty signatory states.

Mr. MacGregor: I have been asked to reply. The main purpose of today's special meeting of the UN Security Council is to reaffirm the importance of the UN's role in maintaining international peace and security. This may include discussion of arms control agreements. However, we have no plans to raise the issues referred to in the question.

Tax (Wales)

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Prime Minister what is the total tax paid by the people of Wales, including to local councils; what is the total expenditure from that taxation in Wales by Government, local councils and all other bodies so financed including the relevant proportion for Wales of any expenditure on a wider basis; and what these figures are per head of the Welsh population.

Mr. Mellor: I have been asked to reply. Information on the total tax paid by people in Wales is not available. Information is, for example, not available for capital gains tax. Data is available on income tax payments and the latest information, which relates to 1988-89, is given in table 2.10 of the 1991 issue of Inland Revenue Statistics. Precise figures for receipts from indirect tax payments paid by people in Wales are not available but it is estimated that the Welsh share of United Kingdom taxes collected by HM Customs and Excise in 1990-91 was about £2½ billion. The latest information on community charge and non-domestic rate payments indicates that at 31 March 1991 local authorities had received an estimated £360 million (£125 per head) in community charges for 1990-91 and that payments of non-domestic rates by businesses for 1990-91 were an estimated £430 million (£150 per head) at the same date.

Information on general government expenditure in Wales in 1990-91, other than that incurred for the benefit of the UK as a whole, is given in tables E6a and E6b of appendix E of the statistical supplement to the 1991 Autumn Statement (Cm. 1920).

EMPLOYMENT

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total waiting list of cases for industrial tribunal hearing in the Newcastle upon Tyne office on 1 January; what number and percentage of cases waiting less than six weeks, less than eight weeks, less than 10 weeks, less than 12 weeks, less than 16 weeks, less than 20 weeks and less than 26 weeks; and what the maximum waiting time was at 1 January.

Mr. Forth: I regret that the information on waiting times is not available in precisely the form requested. The figures show those cases in the Newcastle area which have been registered but which had not come to hearing by 29 January 1992.

	Number	Percentage
Less than 6 weeks	196	12·9
More than 6 weeks-less than 8 weeks	97	6·4
More than 8 weeks-less than 10 weeks	77	5·1
More than 10 weeks-less than 12 weeks	113	7·4
More than 12 weeks-less than 16 weeks	141	9·3
More than 16 weeks-less than 20 weeks	138	9·1
More than 20 weeks-less than 26 weeks	123	8·1
More than 26 weeks	633	41·7
Total	1,518

The maximum waiting time was 39 weeks, unless the parties requested a later hearing date.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken or is taking to reduce the waiting times for industrial tribunals in the Newcastle upon Tyne area.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has increased the budget for the industrial tribunals in England and Wales by over £2 million in the current financial year. This has enabled additional administrative staff and tribunal chairmen to be appointed in the Newcastle region, and there has been a substantial increase in the number of tribunal hearings. Measures are also being taken to improve efficiency.

Employee Training

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce a requirement for companies to publish information on their policy on employee training.

Mr. Jackson: The investors in people initiative already requires companies seeking the award to make a public commitment to training and developing their employees.

Labour Costs

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the change in unit labour costs in the United Kingdom since the October 1990 exchange rate mechanism entry, and what are the corresponding figures in Germany, and the average in all the ERM member countries.

Mr. Forth: Between October 1990 and September 1991 unit wage and salary costs in manufacturing in the United Kingdom rose by 4·5 per cent. compared with an increase in Germany over the same period of 7·3 per cent. Data are not available to give the corresponding average in all the ERM member countries.

Self-employment

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the change, in numerical and percentage terms, in the number of self-employed people in (a) Scotland and (b) Great Britain between 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The information is as follows:

Self-employed
Change between June 1979 and June 1990

	Actual (000's)	per cent.
Scotland	74	46
Great Britain	1,380	75

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the percentage of self-employed people in the work forces of member states of the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The information is given in the table.

Self-employed as a percentage of the civilian work force

	1989 (mid year) per cent.
Belgium	13·0
Denmark	8·5
Federal Republic of Germany	10·2
France	13·6
Greece	[1] 32·5
Ireland	[1] 18·8
Italy	21·8
Luxembourg	9·7
Netherlands	8·8
Portugal	28·2
Spain	17·9
United Kingdom	[2] 11·6

[1] Figures are for 1988, latest available.
[2] The latest available figure (June 1990) is 11·7 per cent.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of unemployed people in (a) the Ipswich travel-to-work area and (b) the Ipswich parliamentary constituency at the latest available date; and what were the equivalent figures five and eight years ago, respectively.

Mr. Jackson: The requested information is contained in the following table and can also be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Unemployed claimants (not seasonally adjusted)

	Ipswich Travel-to-work area	Ipswich Parliamentary constituency
December 1991	7,600	3,712
December 1986	8,345	4,189
December 1983	8,084	4,055

Direct comparisons are affected by the changes in the coverage of the count that have occurred over the period.

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were self-employed in (a) Aberdeen, (b) Kincardine and Deeside, (c) Scotland and (d) the United Kingdom, in each year from 1987 to date.

Mr. Forth: Estimates of the numbers of people who are self-employed are not available for areas smaller than standard regions for the dates specified. The available figures for Scotland and the United Kingdom are as follows:

Self-employed (thousands)

	Scotland	United Kingdom
June 1987	194	2,869
June 1988	215	2,998
June 1989	236	3,253
June 1990	234	3,298

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorism

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the number of persons killed in Northern Ireland as a result of the security situation since 1988 to the present day distinguishing between (a) the RUC, (b) the RUCR, (c) the Army, (d) the UDR, and (e) civilians.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is set out in the table:

Deaths in Northern Ireland as a result of the security situation

[2] As at 30 January.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the increase or decrease in the number of persons charged with terrorist offences in Northern Ireland each year since 1985.

Dr. Mawhinney: Set out are the number of persons charged with terrorist offences for each year since 1985:

Persons charged with terrorist offences

Year	Number
1985	522
1986	655
1987	468
1988	439
1989	433
1990	380
1991	[1]397

Notes:
1. Statistics on charges are kept according to the most serious offence with which an individual has been charged.
2. If the same individual is charged on more than one occasion, he/she will be added to the statistics each time.

Heart Surgery

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the projected figures for those awaiting coronary artery by-pass surgery in Northern Ireland for (a) January 1993 and (b) January 1994, allowing for the arrival of a fourth cardiac surgeon commencing on 1 April 1992.

Mr. Hanley: These figures cannot be calculated accurately for a number of reasons. The numbers waiting at January 1993 and January 1994 will be influenced by a number of different factors:

(a) the ability of the Royal Victoria hospital cardiac surgery unit to increase the number of operations carried out there;
(b) the number of by-passes purchased for residents of Northern Ireland by the four health and social services boards from hospitals in the rest of the United Kingdom and;
(c) the impact of the waiting time guarantee which will be included in the citizens charter shortly to be launched in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons the target of 1,100 cardiac operations per year in Northern Ireland has not been achieved; and if he will indicate (a) when it will be achieved and (b) what plans he has to review that figure.

Mr. Hanley: The target of 1,100 cardiac operations per year was the figure recommended by Sir John Badenoch in his 1988 report as necessary to meet the Province's need for cardiac operations. Attainment of that figure has not been possible because of physical and staffing constraints at the Royal Victoria hospital. Additional cardiac recovery facilities have now been provided and the cardiac theatres have been upgraded. However, the Eastern health and social services board has experienced considerable difficulties in recruiting an additional cardiac surgeon. I understand a locum cardiac surgeon has been appointed for one year and is expected to take up post on 1 May 1992. It is not possible at this stage to say when the figure of 1,100 operations will be reached but it will include cardiac operations purchased for Northern Ireland residents from centres other than the RVH. The figure will be regularly reviewed by the Department of Health and Social Services in the light of assessed need and the latest developments in medical technology.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients are awaiting their first appointment with a cardiac surgeon for assessment as to whether they are in need of cardiac surgery; and if these patients are counted as being on the waiting list for surgery.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what official statements have been made by health board staff concerning the relative benefits of coronary artery by-pass surgery as to (a) improving the quality of life and (b) increasing the lifespan of patients.

Mr. Hanley: I am not aware of any official statements by health board staff in Northern Ireland on this subject.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients are currently on the waiting list for (a) cardiac surgery and (b) cataract operations at the Royal Victoria hospital; how long they have been waiting; and what were the comparable figures for January 1987.

Mr. Hanley: At 30 September 1991 the latest date for which waiting list information is available centrally, there were 991 patients on the cardiac surgery in-patient waiting list at the Royal Victoria hospital. I have set out the details of how long they have been waiting. Figures for 30 September 1986 (the closest date to January 1987 for which data are comparable) are also shown. The time bands are slightly different due to a change in the recording of waiting list data from 1 April 1988. The information requested on cataract operations is not available centrally.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the latest figure for those awaiting coronary artery by-pass surgery in Northern Ireland; and what was the figure in January 1991.

Mr. Hanley: I am advised by the Eastern health and social services board that at 30 November 1991 the latest date for which figures are available, there were 758 people in Northern Ireland waiting for coronary artery by-pass surgery. The information for January 1991 is not available.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to ensure that the necessary numbers of trained staff, backed by sufficient funds for their employment, will be made available to support a fourth cardiac surgeon in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The funds for the recruitment of the necessary supporting staff have been made available to the Eastern health and social services board by the Department of Health and Social Services. Their appointment is a matter for the board.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the health boards have for purchasing additional operations outside Northern Ireland; and what safeguards will be incorporated to ensure quality and a smooth handover for follow-up care within Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The Western health and social services board has already contracted to purchase a number of cardiac surgery operations in hospitals in Great Britain. The Eastern health and social services board is planning to do so shortly. Detailed safeguards to ensure quality care for patients while in hospital in Great Britain are incorporated in the contracts and arrangements are being made to ensure continuity of care when they return to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what evidence he has that physicians and cardiologists are not referring patients for coronary artery by-pass surgery due to the low possibility that the patient would be offered cardiac surgery within a time scale of two years.

Mr. Hanley: I have no evidence to support the hon. Gentleman's suggestion.

Prison Sentences

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern ireland if he will list in the Official Report the prison sentences served by (a) Kevin McKenna, (b) Brian Gillen and (c) Gerald Kelly, indicating the changes against each and the crimes for which they were found guilty and at which courts the charges were brought.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 27 January 1992]: It would not be appropriate to give the information requested.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the proportion of costs for the environmentally sensitive areas scheme which is devoted to administration (a) in 1991 and (b) when the environmentally sensitive areas extensions and new environmentally sensitive areas are in operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Administration costs, including monitoring to assess the environmental impact of the environmentally sensitive areas scheme, currently amount to approximately 25 per cent. of the total costs. For the future my objective is to reduce these costs while maintaining the advisory role of project officers and their associated work in securing the environmental objectives of the scheme.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the hectarage and (b) the amount of money allocated to Pennine Dales ESA in (i) 1991-92 and (ii) when the new conditions will operate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Pennine Dales environmentally sensitive area covers 15,970 hectares which will increase to 46,370 hectares under the new arrangements I recently introduced. Payments in the current financial year are forecast to total approximately £1 million. Future spending in this environmentally sensitive area will depend on the level of uptake but, given the increase in the area and the other changes to the scheme could exceed £3·5 million.

Farm Woodland Scheme

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his review of the farm woodland scheme.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1991, c. 135]: In my previous reply I announced that the main interested organisations were being consulted about detailed proposals for a farm woodland premium scheme (FWPS), to replace the pilot farm woodland scheme (FWS).

The Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland and I have finalised our proposals in the light of comments received from interested organisations. I am, therefore, laying before the House today the draft farm woodland premium scheme 1992 which, subject to parliamentary approval, we propose to introduce on 1 April. This draft statutory instrument applies to Great Britain: the scheme will be introduced in Northern Ireland by separate arrangement.

The new arrangements will offer increased establishment grants and better incentives to encourage farmers to convert land in agricultural use to woodland. They will be very much easier for farmers to understand, and simpler to operate, than under the farm woodland scheme. Our proposals were welcomed in principle by all consultees although a number of detailed points were raised. We have given careful consideration to these points and in particular those mentioned by environmental interests.

The objectives of the FWPS are to encourage planting of woodland by farmers who will remain in farming, thereby enhancing the farmed landscape and environment; and to encourage a productive alternative land use to agriculture. We intend that the scheme will be environmentally beneficial and we have included a number of safeguards to minimise the risk of environmentally damaging planting. In particular, applications will be subject to environmental and silvilcultural checks by the Forestry Commission and to its consultation arrangements. Also there are limits on planting on unimproved land in the LFAs and the definitions of arable land and improved grassland are designed to ensure that environmentally sensitive sites are protected. We also propose to monitor the way in which the procedures work and the level of planting on unimproved land. We will review the position each year so that action can be taken if there are any problems. We will keep interested organisations informed and consult them as necessary.

The key features of the FWPS are as follows:—

Farmers will apply first to the Forestry Commission for grants for establishing trees under the woodland grant scheme, including the better land supplement and community woodland supplement where appropriate. They will then apply to Agriculture departments for the annual incentives under the farm woodland premium scheme.

Annual incentives of between £130 and £250 per hectare will be paid for the conversion to arable or improved grassland to woodlands. Annual incentives of £60 per hectare will be paid for the conversion of woodlands of unimproved land in the less favoured areas only.

The annual incentives will be available for two categories of woodland: more than 50 per cent. and 50 per cent. or less by area of broadleaved trees. These categories will attract payments for 15 and 10 years respectively

There will be no limit on the number of applications that can be made, but planting must not, in aggregate, exceed more than 50 per cent. of any individual agricultural unit. In addition planting of unimproved land must not exceed 40 hectares of any individual agricultural unit. However, for planting on the common grazings in the Scottish crofting counties there will be a total limit of 100 hectares for each common grazing area.

The definition of "improved grassland" will be based on the content of "productive" species in the sward. This has the advantage of being easily checked by a physical inspection, it protects sensitive sites and puts no restriction on the method of grassland improvement.

Conversion of land to arable or improved grassland must have taken place at least three years before the application is made.

No quotas or targets will be set for the scheme, but it will be subject to cash limits.

In certain circumstances farmers will be able to cancel their FWS applications and reapply for the FWPS.

WALES

Radon Gas

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many measurements for levels of radon gas have been carried out in each district authority area of Wales for each year between 1988 and 1991.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Over 1,100 dwellings have been included in a survey of radon levels in Wales which the National Radiological Protection Board is carrying out on behalf of the Department.

South Wales Integrated Development Operation

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state the names and occupations of the members of the Industrial South Wales Integrated Development Operation Monitoring Committee; on what dates this committee met during the last year; which persons attended those meetings; and what conclusions or decisions were reached.

Mr. David Hunt: The names of the members of the Industrial South Wales Integrated Development Operation (IDO) Monitoring Committee, and the organisations they represent, are as follows:

Mr. P. Wilson	— General Surgery
Dr. F. K. Wright	— General Medicine

Site Management

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of management agreements under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 which have been entered into in (a) national nature reserves and (b) sites of special scientific interest for each year since 1981 in Wales, indicating in each case whether the proposed damage was done to (i) agriculture or (ii) forestry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The figures requested are shown in the following table. Not all are the direct outcome of action taken under section 28 of the 1981 Act. The information requested on habitat could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

River Water

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the agreement will be signed between Cardiff Bay development corporation and Associated British Ports to specify the allocation of river water at times of low flow in a manner that will comply with the requirements of the National Rivers Authority Wales division as described in his letter to the hon. Member dated 15 January.

Mr. David Hunt: As I indicated to the hon. Gentleman on 19 December, negotiations between Cardiff Bay development corporation and Associated British Ports are a matter for the two parties. I do not propose to speculate about the timing of an agreement.

Under-fives

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the figures for 1991 for the percentage of under-fives in (a) nursery schools, (b) nursery classes, (c) infant classes and (d) in total, by local education authority in Wales, in rank order.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The percentages of pupils under five years of age in LEA maintained nursery and primary schools, at January 1991, is given in the following table.

Children aged at 31 December

	Nursery schools	Nursery classes[1]	Ordinary classes[1]	Total
West Glamorgan	2·5	50·0	36·1	88·6

Management Agreements

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of management agreements that have been entered into under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in Wales where payments have been given in the following ranges (a) up to £9,999, (b) £10,000 to £19,999, (c) £20,000 to £29,999, (d) £30,000 to £39,999, (e) £40,000 to £49,999, (f) £50,000 to £59,999 and (g) over £60,000.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is shown as follows:

Management agreements under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

	Lump sums only	Annual payments only	Annual payments combined with lump sum (first year only)
(a) Up to £9,999	8	287	20

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the 10 sites of special scientific interest and (b) the 10 national nature reserves in Wales which have the most expensive management agreements giving the name of the site, county in which it is located and the amount which has been or is due to be paid out and if the landowners are required to positively enhance the site as part of the conditions of payment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is treated as confidential between the parties to the agreement.

Year of Literature and Writing

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what support the Welsh Office will give to support Swansea in the Year of Literature and Writing it has been awarded under Arts 2000; and what is the total allocation that has been made for the Garden festival.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Secretary of State congratulates the city of Swansea on its selection as host for the Arts 2000 Year of Literature and Writing 1995. He supported the city in its bid and affirms his support for the event. What form support might take will need to be considered in the light of any proposals which might be made by Swansea.

For the garden festival, the Secretary of State has allocated £19·37 million by way of urban programme support, and £12·108 million under the projects of regional or national importance scheme. In addition, £19·9 million has been spent to date by the Welsh Development Agency under the derelict land scheme.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Gwilym Jones To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for the provision of the planning appeals system in Wales from 1 April.

Mr. David Hunt: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning announced on 25 July last year the Government's decision to launch the planning inspectorate executive agency in England on 1 April 1992. We have now decided that the agency's operations should extend to Wales.

The framework document now being prepared will set out the relationship between the agency's chief executive, who will also be the chief planning inspector, and the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales.

The Government believe that this arrangement will provide the most efficient method of delivering the services of the planning inspectorate in England and Wales.

HEALTH

Pain Management

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is available from 1987 onwards on waiting lists in each national health service region for pain management programmes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally.

Health Authority Contracts

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring he conducts of contracts let by health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The terms and conditions of contracts let by health authorities are the responsibility of local management and, as such, subject to statutory audit like other health authority activity.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on waiting lists for orthopaedic surgery in the South Western health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At 31 March 1991 there were a total of 13,400 people waiting for trauma and orthopaedic treatment in South Western regional health authority (a reduction of 723 compared with March 1990). Of that total 75 per cent. had waited less than one year. The numbers of patients waiting over one year and over two years fell from 3,486 and 1,162 in March 1990 to 3,341 and 858 in March 1991, reductions of 4 per cent. and 26 per cent. respectively.

Royal Naval Hospital, Haslar

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details of the manner in which the Royal Naval hospital, Haslar, will be further utilised within the national health service in order to reduce waiting lists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A waiting list initiative has recently been set up at the Royal Naval hospital, Haslar, to treat up to 36 additional NHS patients waiting for urology treatment in Portsmouth and South East Hampshire district health authority.

There may be opportunities to make further use of these facilities to treat NHS patients in the future.

Children's Homes (Staff)

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the membership of the committee for the inquiry into the selection and recruitment of staff in children's homes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The members of the Committee are as follows:

Chairman

Mr. Norman Warner (Formerly Director of Social Services, Kent County Council)

Committee

Mr. Richard Lansdowne (Consultant Psychologist, Department of Psychological Medicine, Hospital for Sick Children, Great Ormond Street)
Mr. Dick Clough (General Secretary, Social Care Association)
Mr. Dudley Procter (Chief Executive, Lincolnshire County Council)
Mrs. Susan Thomas (Chief Personnel Officer, London Borough of Lewisham)
Dr. Adrian Gozzard (TSB Group, Personnel Director)
Professor Jim Hughes (Director of Human Relations, Thorn EMI)
Ms. Florence Iles (Principal Consultant, William M. Mercer Fraser Ltd)
Mr. Richard White (Solicitor, White and Sherwin Solicitors)
Miss Adrianne Jones (Director of Social Services, Birmingham City Council)

Abortion

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the places approved by him under section 1(3) of the Abortion Act 1967.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The following places have been approved for the period 1 February 1992 to 31 January 1994:

Patients, South Derbyshire

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give figures for the number of patients treated in the southern Derbyshire district in 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: Between 1979 and 1990-91, the number of in-patients and day cases treated in national health service hospitals in Southern Derbyshire district health authority increased from 47,540 hospital discharges to 68,163 finished consultant episodes, an increase of 36 per cent. on a comparable basis.

Nurses

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each of the past five years (a) the number of qualified nurses that left the national health service, (b) the number of qualified nurses recruited to the national health service and (c) the total number of qualified nurses employed in the national health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 30 January 1992]: Information in the detail requested is not available. The available information is given in the table.

England (whole-time equivalent)

	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91
Number of qualified nurses and midwives in post in the National Health Service at 30 September[1]	246,280	248,250	250,670	252,740	252,870
Number completing pre-registration nurse training	24,100	22,110	17,390	18,150	19,010
Net wastage[2]	21,800	19,910	15,150	17,050	n/a

Source: Department of Health (SMI3) Annual Census of National Health Service Non-Medical Manpower; English National Board.

[1] Excludes agency staff.

[2] Net wastage is the total number of those who do not take up posts in the National Health Service on initial qualification and those who leave National Health Service employment, net of "returners". It is calculated by subtracting from the number of staff in post at the end of the financial year (average of successive September figures) the number of staff in post at the beginning of the year plus the number completing pre-registration nurse training during the year.

Notes:

1. Because enrolled nurses on conversion courses are included in both the "number of qualified nurses and midwives in post" and the "number completing pre-registration nurse training", the figures for net wastage will be overstated.
2. All figures are rounded to the nearest ten.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Personal Taxation

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in respect of a married man with two children (a) earning £99·20 per week gross income in April 1979 and (b) earning £300 ·30 per week gross income in April 1991 and counting child benefit as negative income tax what was (i) the amount paid in income tax in pounds per week and as a pecentage of gross earnings, (ii) the amount paid in national insurance contributions in pounds per week and as a percentage of gross earnings, (iii) the amount paid in VAT in pounds per week and as a percentage of gross earnings, (iv) the amount paid in other indirect taxation, exise duties etc., in pounds per week and as a percentage of gross earnings, (v) in respect of the man in category (a) the amount paid in domestic rates in pounds per week and as a percentage of gross-earnings, (vi) in respect of the man in category (b) the amount paid in community charge in pounds per week and as a percentage of gross earnings and (vii) respectively for categories (a) and (b) the total amount paid in the categories listed above in pounds per week and as a percentage of gross earnings.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 30 January 1992]: The figures requested are given in the table. No figures for the impact of the community charge in 1991-92 can be provided until data from the 1991 family expenditure survey are available.

Income tax, NICs, indirect tax and local tax payments. Married couple with two children.

NICs	6·45	23·39
Total income tax and NICs	17·02	58·22
VAT	4·20	15·64
Other indirect taxes	8·83	22·52
Total excluding local taxes	30·05	96·38
Domestic rates	3·18	—
TOTAL	33·23	—
Percentage of earnings
Income tax	10·6	11·6
NICs	6·5	7·8
Total income tax and NICs	17·1	19·4
VAT	4·2	5·2
Other indirect taxes	8·9	7·5
Total excluding local taxes	30·3	32·1
Domestic rates	3·2	—
TOTAL	33·5	—

Notes:

1. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances and only have income from employment. All earners are assumed to pay class 1 NI contributions at the contracted-in rate.
2. Child benefit is treated as a negative income tax. For 1991-92, the figure used reflects the revised child benefit rates introduced in April 1991.
3. The estimates of indirect taxes are based on equations derived from the 1985 family expenditure survey, uprated to later years using forecasts of aggregate tax receipts. They are based on average expenditure patterns for the United Kingdom as a whole and use the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved. There are wide variations in spending patterns between households with the same composition and similar incomes. Estimated payments of VAT and other indirect taxes are therefore approximate. Due to sampling variation, there can be substantial differences between estimates obtained from family expenditure surveys for different years.

SOCIAL SECURITY

House Sales

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to direct the Benefits Agency not to treat any revenue accrued from the sale of a house as business income for benefit purposes.

Mr. Jack: Where capital realised from the sale of a home is intended to be used for the purchase of another home it can be disregarded as income or capital for benefit purposes. Where, however, this is not the intention and the proceeds are invested into a business, such revenue is treated as income for calculating benefit.

Means-related Benefits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to review the working of the tariff income schedule used to calculate the returns of savings for the purposes of assessing incomes for means-related benefits.

Miss Widdecombe: As with all aspects of the benefits system, the tariff income rule is kept under review, but there are no plans to change it at present.

National Insurance

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount of class 2 national insurance paid in 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what estimates he has made of the total amounts he expects to take in during 1992-93 from class 2 national insurance contributions.

Mr. Jack: In 1990-91 the total amount of class 2 national insurance contributions paid was £500 million. We estimate that in 1991-92 and 1992-93 the amount paid will be £550 million and £590 million respectively.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people paid class 4 national insurance contributions in 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what estimates he has made of how many people he expects to pay class 4 national insurance contributions in 1992-93.

Mr. Jack: In 1990-91 about 2 million people paid class 4 national insurance contributions. We expect that approximately the same number will pay in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount of class 4 national insurance paid in 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what estimates he has made of the total amount he expects to take in during 1992-93 from class 4 national insurance contributions.

Mr. Jack: In 1990-91 the total amount of class 4 national insurance contributions paid was £630 million. We estimate that in 1991-92 and 1992-93 the amount paid will be £700 million and £770 million respectively.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people paid class 2 national insurance contributions in 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what estimates he has made of how many people he expects to pay class 2 national insurance contributions in 1992-93.

Mr. Jack: In 1990-91 about 2·5 million people paid class 2 national insurance contributions. We expect that approximately the same number will pay class 2 in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Departmental Planning

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 515, what planning system is operated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The DSS planning system requires its agencies and headquarters to draw up costed plans furthering the Department's aims and objectives. The system was developed as part of the DSS response to the financial management initiative and "next steps". Plans include a range of targets, covering quality of service, efficiency and financial performance, and provide a basis for judging performance and for estimating resource requirements in the public expenditure survey.

Recent developments in the planning process will result in better and more public accountability of DSS through the published business plans and annual reports and accounts of its agencies.

An overview of the forward plans and past performance of DSS is contained in the published 1991 departmental report, Cm 1514. The 1992 report will be published in February 1992.

Social Fund

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Department of Social Security funded evaluation of the social fund, carried out by the social policy and research unit of York university, will be made available to (a) Ministers, (b) the public and (c) hon. Members.

Mr. Scott: The report has not yet been received and it is too early to say when it will become available.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have received the £6 cold weather payment during the month of January; how this figure differs from departmental estimates of take-up for the same period; and how many such payments, during this same period, were made in Merseyside.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Family Credit

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to respond directly to hon. Members' queries on the policy aspects of family credit as opposed to referring them to the Benefits Agency for a reply.

Mr. Jack: Ministers answer letters relating solely to policy and remain fully accountable to Parliament for the work of the Department, including its executive agencies. The terms upon which social security agency chief executives answer hon. Members' queries was set out in a letter sent to all Members of Parliament in March 1991. I shall send a copy of the letter to the hon. Member.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Further Education and Sixth Form Colleges

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total level of debt charges for further education colleges and sixth form colleges in England and Wales.

Mr. Eggar: The total capital financing charge in relation to maintained colleges of further education in England was £103 million in 1989-90, the latest year for which outturn information is available. The information on sixth form colleges cannot be disaggregated from that on schools. The position in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has made any estimates of the transitional costs to further education and sixth form colleges in achieving corporate status, in terms of transitional seconded staff, professional services/advice, additional accountancy and management information systems.

Mr. Eggar: The transitional costs in 1992-93 of the necessary preparations for incorporating further education and sixth form colleges and giving them independence from local authority control, subject to the passage of the Further and Higher Education Bill currently before Parliament, are estimated at £25 million in England. This figure includes costs to colleges of preparing for their new management responsibilities, as well as the cost of establishing the Further Education Funding Council for England. Provision has been included in the Government's expenditure plans for 1992-93 for the purpose.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has made any estimates of the ongoing costs to further education and sixth form colleges of corporate status, in terms of (a) additional finance and personnel staff, (b) non-recoverable VAT, (c) legal, professional and audit costs, (d) payroll administration and processing and (e) increased pension contributions to support staff.

Mr. Eggar: The costs to colleges of undertaking or buying-in services currently provided by LEAs are expected to be offset by savings in LEA administration costs and efficiency savings. The liability on colleges to pay VAT on goods and services, once they become independent of LEA control, subject to the passage of the Further and Higher Education Bill, will give rise to costs of at least some £20 million. The level of pensions contributions is expected to be broadly in line with those currently made on behalf of college staff.

Student Numbers

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what projections have been made of full-time equivalent student numbers in further education up to the year 2000, and of the effects on public expenditure.

Mr. Eggar: The Department's latest statistical projection to the year 2000, as at September 1991, is as follows:

Projection of home and EC full-time equivalent student numbers in FE in England

(000s)

	Number
1990	696
1991	705
1992	722
1993	742
1994	779
1995	847
1996	896
1997	938
1998	972
1999	1,009
2000	1,050

This represents an increase of 50·9 per cent. between 1990 and 2000. The statistical projection is the central variant of a range. A range of statistical projections have been prepared with high, low, and central variants, reflecting the uncertainty of forecasting in this area.

Expenditure for further education will be considered in the annual surveys of public expenditure, in the light of student numbers and other pressures, but also taking account of the scope for efficiency savings.

Student Numbers

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what projections he has made of full-time equivalent student numbers in higher education up to the year 2000; and what estimate he has made of the cost of this.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department's latest projection to the year 2000, as at April 1991, is as follows:

Projection of home full-time equivalent student numbers in higher education in Great Britain

	Thousands
1990	795
1991	860
1992	918
1993	960
1994	984
1995	999
1996	1,024
1997	1,064
1998	1,110
1999	1,148
2000	1,170

This represents an increase of 47·2 per cent. between 1990 and 2000.

The higher education White Paper published last May made clear the Government's commitment to providing a fair share of public expenditure for higher education. Projected student numbers will be taken into account with other relevant factors in assessing the financial needs of higher education in the public expenditure survey.

Teacher Training

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students entered courses of initial teacher training in 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991, respectively; and how many of those students took courses in (a) mathematics, (b) physics and (c) chemistry.

Mr. Fallon: The relevant information is given in the table.

United Kingdom domiciled entrants to initial teacher training in England and Wales

	1988	1989	1990	1991

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those schools in respect of which proposals for grant-maintained status have been published but not yet determined and which are the subject of conflicting reorganisation proposals, giving in each case the dates of the close of the periods of formal objection to each set of proposals, and grouping together those schools for which proposals are inter-related.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table listing the capital allocation for each grant-maintained school for 1992-93, grouped by local education authority area, together with the number of pupils on the roll of each school, with totals.

Mr. Eggar: I attach a list of the named project capital allocations from grant-maintained schools for 1992-93. In addition, each grant-maintained school will receive a formula allocation of capital grant, calculated as £10,000 per school plus £20 per pupil, based on January 1991 pupil numbers.

Polytechnics

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what steps he took to satisfy himself that the procedures for the awarding of the surveying management contract at Anglia polytechnic were carried out in accordance with his Department's requirements;

(2) how the costs of staff redundancies arising out of competitive tendering procedures in polytechnics are funded.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave him on Thursday 30 January.

Howbury Grange School, Slade Green

Mr. Evennett To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to make a decision on the future of Howbury Grange school, Slade Green, Erith; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The section 12 proposals published by Bexley to close Howbury Grange school are currently being considered. My right hon. and learned Friend expects to announce his decision shortly.

Students, Irish Republic

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply on 15 January, Official Report, columns 583-84, if the Government of the Republic of Ireland pay tuition fees for United Kingdom students attending courses of higher education in the Irish Republic.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This is not a matter falling within my Department's responsibilities. However I have had inquiries made and I understand that the Government of the Republic of Ireland do not pay tuition fees for any students attending university courses in the Irish Republic. In the non-university higher education sector fees for EC students, irrespective of nationality, attending most courses in the Republic are met by the Irish Government with a contribution from the European social fund. For other courses in the Republic in the non-university higher education sector the fees are paid by the individual, irrespective of nationality. Should the right hon. Member require further details he might like to contact directly the Department of Education, Dublin.

Boarding Schools

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Educationa and Science if he will list (a) for each local education authority and (b) by location, the current state-owned boarding schools and the pupil establishment for each school.

Mr. Fallon: Not all local education authorities have bording schools. The table lists boarding schools maintained by local education authorities, and the numbers and boarders on roll at January 1991, the latest date for which information is available.

TRANSPORT

Dangerous Substances

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the documentation required by British drivers of vehicles carrying dangerous substances in order to enter other European Community states under EC directive 89/684/EEC when it comes into effect on 1 July.

Mr. Chope: British drivers of road tankers with a capacity of more than 3,000 litres and/or a permissible maximum weight exceeding 3·5 tonnes carrying dangerous substances, and of any vehicle carrying explosives or a tank container carrying dangerous substances will need to hold a full vocational driver training certificate in addition to meeting the existing requirements.

Driver Training

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the recognition by other member states of provisional certificates of training issued by his Department to meet the requirements of EC directive 89/684/EEC.

Mr. Chope: Provisional driver training certificates issued to meet the requirements of the directive will be valid for use only for domestic transport in the member state of issue.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in preparing United Kingdom legislation and training courses needed to meet the requirements of EC directive 89/684/EEC.

Mr. Chope: There has been no delay. The necessary arrangements for the implementation of the directive before the deadline of 1 July 1992 are well advanced.

Legislation to implement EC directive 89/684/EEC in the United Kingdom is being drafted by the Health and Safety Executive under the provisions of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974. A consultative document was issued last summer and I expect to receive recommendations for regulations from the Health and Safety Commission shortly. The administrative arrangements for training courses to run from April 1992 are in hand.

Driving Licences

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how frequently drivers are required to renew their driving licence; what is the charge for renewing a driving licence; and if he will introduce compensation for those required to renew on the ground of age.

Mr. Chope: Provided they do not have any relevant disability or medical condition which may restrict the period for which the licence is granted and they have not been disqualified, drivers are required to renew their driving licence only at age 70. From age 70, licences are granted for, at most, three years at a time.

From 1 February, the fee for renewal is £6.

This fee is statutory and compensation is not considered appropriate.

Air Traffic Control

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made as to the adequacy of the present arrangements for air traffic control over Europe; what consultations he has had with other EC Governments on the matter; what actions in this connection are planned for the forthcoming United Kingdom presidency of the EC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Following a United Kingdom initiative, Transport Ministers of the member states of the European civil aviation conference (ECAC) agreed in April 1990 a strategy for the harmonisation and integration of air traffic control systems in Europe. The first phase of this strategy, which has just been completed, consisted of a comprehensive assessment of the present arrangements for air traffic control in Europe. The second and third phases will comprise programme development and acquisition and implementation of new equipment.

My right hon. Friend has consulted a number of his colleagues in the EC on air traffic control matters. On 17 March he will be chairing a meeting in London of Transport Ministers of ECAC member states, which include all EC member states, to consider further measures to reduce flight delays and to cope with growth in air traffic. We expect the meeting to reach agreement on a major extension of the current strategy for air traffic control to the end of the century and beyond.

During the forthcoming United Kingdom presidency of the EC the Government will encourage the Commission to support fully the initiatives that we have initiated in ECAC. The Government will be seeking increased support from the EC for research and trials on air traffic management. The Government will also seek substantial progress on a proposal for a directive relating to mandatory technical and operational standards for the procurement of air traffic control equipment.

Relief Road, Manchester

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects the public consultation to take place, in respect of the proposed Greater Manchester western and northern relief road.

Mr. Chope: Later this year.

Barnstaple Downstream Bridge

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give urgent consideration to the application by Devon county council for funding of the Barnstaple downstream bridge and the western link.

Mr. Chope: No such application has been made. The county council's current transport policies and programme document shows that it does not propose to start construction of this scheme until the year 2000.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what figures are available to show the number of vehicles on the road in England and Wales without valid vehicle duty excise licences; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what figures are available to him to show the number of vehicles on the road in Scotland without valid vehicle duty excise licences;

(3) what information is available to him to show the number of vehicles on the road in Northern Ireland without a valid vehicle duty excise licence.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

Based on a roadside survey carried out in Great Britain in June 1989 the best estimate of the number of unlicensed vehicles currently in use on United Kingdom roads is 1·3 million. Separate regional figures are not available. Further details can be found in the Transport Statistics Report "Vehicle Excise Duty in Great Britain in 1989-90" which is available in the House Library.

SCOTLAND

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the administrative costs of the sale of the two Scottish electricity companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The costs to the Government in 1991-92 of the Scottish electricity share offers are estimated to be as follows:

	£ million
United Kingdom offers
Underwriting	21·5
Selling and broking commission	4·2
Marketing	5·2
Share information office	4·3
Prospectus production and distribution	3·1
Receiving banks	11·5
Advisers' fees and expenses	11·1
Total (United Kingdom offers)	60·9
Overseas offers	7·9
Total (United Kingdom and overseas offers)	68·8

These costs represent about 2 per cent. of the total proceeds due from the sale of shares and from debt repayable to the Government, which together are estimated at £3,430 million. The costs exclude stamp duty and VAT on services provided to the Government, which are not net costs to the Exchequer. They also exclude the costs of the electricity vouchers issued to eligible shareholders in December 1991.

Expenditure on the sale in 1990-91 (exclusive of VAT) amounted to £4·6 million in advisers' fees and expenses and £1·2 million in other sale costs. The costs incurred in earlier years totalled £5·8 million (exclusive of VAT).

Primary School Classes

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of children in primary classes in Scotland in (a) 1988 and (b) 1991, in classes of (i) 31 to 35, (ii) 36 to 39 and (iii) 40 and above.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1992]: Information in the form requested is not available centrally.

ENERGY

Energy-intensity Ratio

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate Britain's energy-intensity ratio for each year since 1962; and what are his projected estimates for each year until 2010, based on current Government policy.

Mr. Wakeham: Since 1962 the energy ratio, defined as the ratio of primary energy demand to gross domestic product, has taken the following values:

Year	Value
1962	0·89
1963	0·88
1964	0·86
1965	0·87
1966	0·85
1967	0·84
1968	0·83
1969	0·83
1970	0·85
1971	0·83
1972	0·82
1973	0·80
1974	0·77
1975	0·75
1976	0·75
1977	0·74
1978	0·72
1979	0·72
1980	0·69
1981	0·67
1982	0·66
1983	0·64
1984	0·62
1985	0·62
1986	0·61
1987	0·59
1988	0·58
1989	0·58
1990	0·59

Projected future values of the energy ratio will be included in a forthcoming publication containing revised projections of CO_2 emissions and energy demand. These were described in a parliamentary answer on 6 December 1991, at columns 258-59.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 20 December, Official Report, column 377, when he expects the transmission and distribution price control reviews by the director general of the Office of Electricity Supply to be completed.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The timing of the reviews is a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply, having regard to conditions in the transmission licence and the public electricity supply licences.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what were the administrative costs of the sales of the 12 regional electricity companies and the two generating companies in England and Wales.

Mr. Wakeham: The costs of the electricity share offers in England and Wales incurred to date by the Government are estimated to be as follows:

	£ million
United Kingdom offers
Underwriting	51·5
Selling and Broking Commission	13·8
Marketing	22·2
Share Information Office	12·6
Prospectus production and distribution	13·6
Receiving Banks	67·0
Adviser's fees	44·8
Other costs	5·2
Total (United Kingdom offers)	230·7
Overseas offers	26·6
Total (United Kingdom and Overseas offers)	257·3

These costs represent about 2·3 per cent. of the proceeds from the sale of shares in the electricity share offers and from the repayment of debt by the companies which, together, are estimated at £11 billion. The costs exclude stamp duty and VAT on services provided to the Government which are not net costs to the Exchequer, and incentives on employee and individual shareholdings. The figures include expenditure incurred from April 1990 to the end of December 1991, but do not include costs incurred in previous years primarily on the restructuring of the industry which amounted, on the same basis, to about £16·3 million.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Company Inquiry Reports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many company inquiry reports have been completed, but not published; under which sections of the Companies Acts they were carried out; and what steps he is taking to clear reports for publication.

Mr. Redwood: The following table lists 11 unpublished inspectors' reports where the decision to publish remains under consideration. It is always considered whether there is any reason why a report should not be published immediately and publication may be deferred where, for example, to do so would prejudice criminal proceedings. Occasionally it is decided not to publish a report.

Company name	Type of Enquiry
British Anzani plc	S165 Companies Act 1948
Medway Secondary Metals plc	S165 Companies Act 1948
Graylaw Holdings Limited and Link Service Stations Limited	S165 Companies Act 1948
Bank Street Securities Limited	S165 Companies Act 1948
Pennine Commercial Holdings plc[1]	S165 Companies Act 1948
Guinness plc[1]	S432 and S442 Companies Act 1985
The Bestwood plc and Atlanta Fund Managers Limited	S432 and S442 Companies Act 1985 and S432 Companies Act 1985
Blue Arrow plc	S432 Companies Act 1985
BOM Holdings plc	S432 Companies Act 1985

[1] Interim.

Estate Agents

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions the powers under the Estate Agents Act 1979 have been used to prohibit unfit persons from doing estate agency work.

Mr. Leigh: The Director General of Fair Trading has used his powers under the Act to prohibit 150 persons from doing estate agency work and a further nine persons from doing certain types of estate agency work.

Queen's Award for Export

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the companies which have received the Queen's award for export since 1979, with the date of the award; and which of these companies are still in business (a) under the same name or (b) under a different name.

Mr. Sainsbury: Since 1979, a total of 1,336 Queen's awards for export achievement have been granted to industrial units within the United Kingdom. The awards are announced annually on the Queen's birthday, 21 April. The winners are listed in a supplement to the London Gazette on 21 April each year. No record is kept of award winners which are still in business, or of those which have changed their name. The information requested could not therefore be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Limited Liability

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received, and from whom, about the extension of limited liability to audit and accountancy firms.

Mr. Redwood: Since 1 October there has been no statutory bar on the appointment of a limited liability company as a company auditor provided it is eligible for appointment under the rules of its recognised supervisory body. We have received no representations on the subject since then.

Blue Arrow

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he now expects to publish his inspector's report on the Blue Arrow inquiry.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend decided to delay publication of the inspectors' report in the light of representations made to him. He intends to publish the report as soon as he considers it appropriate to do so.

Development Areas

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of the work force in each of the standard regions of England live within the boundaries of development areas.

Mr. Leigh: The answer, which also includes figures for intermediate areas, is as follows:

per cent.

Region	Development areas	Intermediate areas	Assisted areas
Northern	69·2	12·9	82·1
North West	32·1	33·8	65·9
Yorkshire/Humberside	8·1	43·2	51·4
East Midlands	2·1	3·1	5·2
West Midlands	0	70·7	70·7
South West	3·6	9·4	13·1

Note: Assisted areas may be either development areas or intermediate areas.

Rural Mail Services

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he intends to take to enable the Royal Mail to continue with its £200 million subsidy for rural mail services under his proposals to limit the postal monopoly.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 30 January 1992]: The Government have repeatedly made it clear in the citizens charter White Paper and elsewhere that our overriding commitment remains the maintenance of a universal service, with an affordable, uniform tariff structure. We recognise the importance which individuals and businesses attach to this, especially in rural areas. However, the reduction in the letter monopoly to £1 in 1981 demonstrated that the benefits of greater competition and wider consumer choice can go hand in hand with a strong and successful Post Office.

DEFENCE

AWE Aldermaston

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on what date construction of the A91 building at AWE Aldermaston commenced;

(2) what are the works being carried out in the rectification of the problems in the A91 building at AWE Aldermaston;

(3) when he expects the A91 building at AWE Aldermaston to become fully operational.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Construction of A91 commenced in January 1985. Following the discovery during commissioning of corrosion in pipework and vessels a full investigation into the causes of the problem was launched. As a result of this investigation further studies are necessary to assess a range of possible actions. Consequently, remedial work has not yet started and we are unable to estimate when the building will become fully operational.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects operational production rates to start at the A90 building at AWE Aldermaston.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Production in A90 is scheduled to commence in time to meet the needs of the Trident programme.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the A90 building at AWE Aldermaston can start operational production rates while the A91 building is not operational.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Yes.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long he expects the A45 building at AWE Aldermaston to remain operational.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I expect the A45 building at AWE Aldermaston to remain operational for the foreseeable future.

Gareloch

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the mean tide level calculated for the Gareloch prior to construction of the shiplift facility CSB Faslane.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The mean tide level of the Gareloch prior to the construction of the shiplift facility at CSB Faslane was +0·28 m above ordnance datum (OD).

Royal Navy Armament Depot, Coulport

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many design changes have been made to date to the explosives handling jetty to be installed at RNAD Coulport; and what assessment of the impact of recent design changes to the seaworthiness of the explosives handling jetty to be installed at RNAD Coulport have been made by his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since tenders were invited in 1987, detailed design of the explosives handling jetty has continued against the original requirement. This has involved some 100 significant design alterations. All aspects of the facility, including draught, are kept under constant review by my Department and by Lloyd's register and it remains on course to meet the requirements of the Trident programme.

Vanguard Submarines

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there is still a requirement for a dedicated degaussing facility for the Vanguard class submarines.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The requirement for magnetic treatment of Vanguard and other classes of submarine remains.

Faslane and Coulport

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the summary of the Bovis audit of construction at Faslane and Coulport.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The main recommendations of the Bovis report were set out in the Government's response to the 1990-91 House of Commons Defence Committee report on the Trident programme (HC286) published on 6 November 1991. Commercial sensitivities preclude more extensive publication of the report.

Troop Withdrawals (Germany)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux regarding the impact of the programme of troop withdrawal from Germany on the work of the service; and what response he has made.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am not aware of any such representations to Ministers by the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux. Service headquarters have however been approached by nearby citizens advice bureaux seeking advice on the possible effects of the reduction in the services on local communities.

Reserve Forces

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, pursuant to his statement on 10 December 1991, Official Report, column 733, he will set out the future numbers and roles of the Royal Auxiliary Air Force personnel to be employed (a) in the Rapier anti-aircraft missile force, (b) as support for mobile air defence radar convoys in the new United Kingdom air defence system and (c) in mission planning for Nimrod maritime patrol aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The feasibility of employing Royal Auxiliary Air Force personnel in the Rapier force and as support for mobile air defence radar convoys is still under consideration. Personnel of No. 3 maritime headquarters unit are providing mission support facilities for the Nimrod forward operating base at RAF St. Mawgan. It is not our practice to give precise numbers of personnel, regular or reserve, engaged on specific tasks.

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the wartime role, establishment and strength of each branch (a) the Royal Auxiliary Air Force and (b) the Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The wartime roles of the Royal Auxiliary Air Force are maritime headquarters support, ground defence, short-range air defence, air movements and aeromedical evacuation.

The Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve provides specialist personnel in the fields of intelligence, photo interpretation and public relations. It is not the practice to give detailed figures of the establishment and strength of individual branches of the volunteer reserve forces. Total strengths are, however, given in table 4.6 of volume 2 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991" (Cm. 1559-II).

Radiological Emergencies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has held concerning the exclusion on grounds of national security of information or classes of sites from requirements to disclose public information on radiological emergencies.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Ministry of Defence officials were involved in discussions with the Health and Safety Executive prior to the publication, in November 1991, of its consultative document CD37 "Proposals for the Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations".

Nuclear Material

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will meet the United States Departments of Defence and Energy to discuss the tranportation of nuclear explosive material and nuclear wastes to reduce their reuseability.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My officials hold regular discussions with United States authorities on nuclear matters including transportation.

Nuclear Weapons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give full details of the reasons for the breakdown of the nuclear weapons transport on Sunday 1 December near St. Albans; how many vehicles are in use; and what assessment he has made of their fitness for the job.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 12 December 1991 at col. 544.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice his Department has made available, or intends to make available, to service personnel serving in the Falkland Islands and their families, regarding the possible health effects of exposure to ultraviolet light.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. There is no evidence of health problems amongst service men or their families from ultraviolet light in the Falkland islands.

Beef

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the countries from where beef was purchased for consumption by the armed services in 1991 and in each case, including the United Kingdom, give the quantity bought and amount spent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Details of supplies by country of origin are not available. The predominant source of supply in 1991 however was South America. The quantity of beef purchased in 1991 was approximately 3,500 metric tonnes valued at approximately £8·5 million.

MOD Harrogate

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what cost comparisons have been made between RAF Wyton and MOD Harrogate in the last 12 months.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Investigations to establish the relative costs of various options for consolidating the administration of RAF logistic support, including use of RAF Wyton and MOD Harrogate, are under way but none have been completed in the last 12 months.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to close MOD Harrogate.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There are no plans to close MOD Harrogate.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with civil service trade unions regarding the possible closure of MOD Harrogate.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None. Whatever proposals for change may emerge, the unions will be consulted under normal departmental procedures before decisions are taken.

Defence Budget

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now make it his policy to release information on the long-term costings of the defence budget.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement on 2 May 1991 at column 292.

"Options for Change"

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent information on the running costs of individual units of the armed forces has been used in the "Options for Change" study.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The "Options for Change" studies focused primarily on strategic priorities in response to the changing international security environment. Associated assessments of affordability did not require information on the running costs of individual units.

Army and RAF Units

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what differences exist between his policies regarding the release of information on the percentage increase in the capability of (a) Army units and (b) RAF units.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None, but quantitative assessments of changes in capability have been undertaken only in relation to selected Army formations.

New Management Strategy

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer of 3 December, Official Report, column 88, what are the different levels of budget holding within the new management strategy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Below the top level budgets, published in Cm 1559-1 at figure 11, there is a hierarchy of subordinate budgets following the chain of command. Within each top level budget, there may be up to three further levels: higher level budgets, intermediate higher level budgets and basic level budgets.

RAF Procurement

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to centralise the procurement of RAF equipment.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Equipment procurement for the armed forces has been centralised since the Procurement Executive of the Ministry of Defence was created following the Rayner report in 1971.

Menwith Hill Station

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what form of award was presented to the director of the Menwith Hill station for support to Desert Storm/Desert Shield; who presented the award; and what was the cost of arranging fighter planes to fly over Menwith Hill station on 16 January.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The director of Menwith Hill station is a United States official and any awards are a matter for the United States Government. No flypast of fighter aircraft took place at Menwith Hill station on 16 January.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the danger to personnel working on Menwith Hill station or to people in the vicinity from radio frequency radiation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no health risk to employees at Menwith Hill station or to people in the vicinity from radio frequency radiation.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Menwith Hill station presents any hazards to aircraft; and whether there are any restrictions on aircraft flying in the vicinity of Menwith Hill station.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Woolwich Arsenal

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 15 January, Official Report, column 608, on nuclear research at the royal arsenal, Woolwich, what was the nature of the early research; what was the origin of the contamination currently being restored at the Woolwich garrison; and whether any nuclear research or storage of radioactive materials currently takes place at either site.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the early 1950s some classified research work was carried out at the royal arsenal, Woolwich. The soil contamination at the Woolwich garrison arises from former luminising operations carried out as part of the maintenance of military equipment. No nuclear research is currently being carried out at either site. Apart from the temporary storage, at the garrison, of waste arising from the removal of the contaminated soil, no radioactive materials are stored at either site.

Goose Bay

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contributions of finance, advice and information have been made by Her Majesty's Government to the Canadian Government towards (a) preparation and production of the environmental impact statement on military flying at Goose bay and (b) development and implementation of measures to mitigate the adverse effects of low-level flying from Goose bay.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: At the request of the Canadian Government the Ministry of Defence provided a forecast of future levels of RAF activity at Goose bay. No financial contribution has been made to the costs of preparing the environmental impact statement.

The Canadian Department of National Defence has consulted the Ministry of Defence and the Officer Commanding RAF unit Goose bay on the development and implementation of a number of environmental monitoring and mitigation measures. To date the United Kingdom has contributed £118,000 towards the total costs of these measures which are shared equally by the four signatories to the Goose bay multi-national memorandum of understanding.

Exercise Luce Belle

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any of the Royal Air Force aircraft participating in Exercise Luce Belle in June 1990 experienced malfunctions of radar altimeter or low-height warning equipment during their noise measurement runs.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department has no record of any of the Royal Air Force aircraft participating in Exercise Luce Belle in June 1990 experienced malfunction of radar altimeter or low-height warning equipment during their noise measurement runs.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the crews of aircraft participating in noise measurement runs during Exercise Luce Belle in June 1990 were at any time instructed or authorised to fly at less than 100 ft above ground level.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: One of the target heights for the aircraft participating in noise measurement runs during Exercise Luce Belle was 100 ft above ground level.

RAF Equipment

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to centralise the storage of RAF equipment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no immediate plans to change the storage arrangements for RAF equipment.

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given by his Department to the commissioning of epidemiological research into the impact of noise from low-flying aircraft on human hearing in populations resident in tactical training areas.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department, in collaboration with authorities in the United States and Canada, is examining the feasibility of a study to investigate the possible effects on health, including hearing, of noise from low-flying aircraft.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all overseas deployments of Royal Air Force aircraft in 1991 for the purpose of low-level flying training, giving the locations, dates and types of aircraft in each case.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Central records are not held in a form which would enable the information requested to be provided.

RAF Cost Comparisons

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what cost comparisons have been made between RAF Carlisle and RAF Stafford in the last 12 months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Wilton Park Executive Agency

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of the Wilton Park executive agency, including performance-related element; and what is the length of time of the chief executive's contract.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The chief executive's salary is on the home civil service grade 5 national scale, the maximum of which is £39,402 (extendable to £46,122 by performance pay). The chief executive was appointed director of Wilton Park in 1983. His contract, as extended, expires on 9 October 1992.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will state the cash amount per person awarded under the group bonus scheme for the Wilton Park executive agency in the last year for which figures are available, and the conditions attached to its award;

(2) if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable, including performance-related elements, in each case where appointments have been made to the Wilton Park executive agency at grade 7 or above, since its establishment;

(3) when the last annual report of the Wilton Park executive agency was published; and when the next one is due;

(4) how many staff were in post on the date that the Wilton Park executive agency was established; and how many are in post now;

(5) if he will list those new facilities for staff, including nurseries and health care schemes, which have been introduced in the Wilton Park executive agency since its establishment;

(6) how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of the Wilton Park executive agency; and whether the cost was borne by the parent Department or the new agency;

(7) if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into the Wilton Park executive agency since its establishment and provide a breakdown by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: These are matters for the chief executive of Wilton Park executive agency. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of the Wilton Park executive agency.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This is a personal matter for the chief executive. I have asked him to consider this question and to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by the Wilton Park executive agency since its establishment and separately identify those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The key targets for Wilton Park executive agency were set out in Hansard, column 525, of 25 October 1991. Further, quality of service, targets for the 1991-92 to 1993-94 period have been set as follows:

(a) To increase the proportion of conference participants from outside Europe; to increase the proportion from Southern, Central and South-Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union; to increase the proportion of business men, trade unionists and members of non-governmental organisations.

(b) To increase the relevance, focus and originality of conferences in order to enhance their reputation and increase positive responses from participants.

(c) To reduce the publication time for conference reports to three months and to increase the number of books and articles published.

(d) To increase the participation of Wilton Park staff in the activities of other institutions.

No such formal targets were set before the agency was established.

Cyprus

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he intends to take to implement the UN resolutions on Cyprus.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We remain committed to the search for a solution to the Cyprus dispute, and continue to work actively in support of the UN Secretary-General's efforts to promote a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement. Implementation of relevant UN resolutions will be an integral element of that settlement.

Gibraltar

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to ensure that Gibraltar is included within the European Community's external frontier; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Maastricht European Council tasked the EC presidency to find a way forward on this issue through discussions with the United Kingdom and Spain. Discussions continue. We continue to argue for Gibraltar's inclusion in the convention.

Council of Ministers

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement of (a) the occasions in 1991 on which the European Council of Ministers has met to consider scientific and research matters, showing who has represented the United Kingdom at such meetings and (b) what meetings to discuss such matters are proposed for 1992.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Research Council met on 24 April and 28 October 1991. Lord Hesketh and Lord Reay respectively represented Her Majesty's Government. Research Councils are planned for 29 April, 12 October and 9 or 10 December 1992.

Amolak Singh

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for the British high commission in Delhi to request a statement from the Indian authorities on the treatment of Amolak Singh, a British citizen, of Pudsey in west Yorkshire, at Delhi airport; if he will take steps to ensure arrangements are made for Mr. Singh to receive an apology and the money refunded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office received details of Mr. Amolak Singh's complaint on 22 January 1992. The British high commission in New Delhi has been asked to make inquiries of the relevant Indian authorities.

CSCE

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy at the meeting of foreign ministers at the conference on security and co-operation in Europe in Prague on 30 and 31 January (a) to pledge an increase in United Kingdom donations to support the organisation and operations of the CSCE and (b) to encourage all states represented to publish a register of all Government-sanctioned sales of arms and military equipment.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The costs of the CSCE institutions and other CSCE activities are shared among the participating states on the basis of an agreed formula. The United Kingdom is one of the six states making the largest contributions. Decisions on future work in the CSCE (and therefore the eventual size of the United Kingdom contribution) will be taken at the Helsinki follow-up meeting (March to July 1992).

The United Kingdom and its partners in the European Community have proposed that the Council of Ministers adopt, at its meeting in Prague, a statement committing itself to participate in the United Nations' register of conventional arms transfers.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 202

SESSION 1991–92

20th January—31st January 1992

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
